New Irrigation System Now in Use on Campus

Colorado College has adopted new irrigation procedures which permit it to release to drought-stricken Colorado Springs residents more than 875,000 gallons of domestic water a week. The college began last September using non-potable water to irrigate the 48-acre campus. It followed the city park system and a golf club in the use of non-potable water for irrigation. The water is city sewage disposal effluent that has been purified. Throughout the year, the college receives enough non-potable water to cover 200 acres with one foot of moisture. This permits the use of one inch a week for irrigation. In 1961, CC applied to use non-potable water when it became available. Last year, it installed a special water line at a cost of $20,000 to bring such water to the campus. Prior to the development of the non-potable system the irrigation water bill came to around $5,000 a year. Richard A. Kendrick, director of the physical plant, said the non-potable system should cut this to $1,600 a year.

Beta Theta Pi

Beta Theta Pi extends congratulations to the recipients of awards presented at Tuesday's Home Convocation. A particular shout goes to brothers Elv Hinds and Bill Stafford for their diligence in serving the college community which has earned them ASAC awards. Also, to the guys up the street, congratulations on a fine job.

The enchanting Paint Pony Country Club was the scene of a Saturday night for the very successful Beta spring formal. Grand Marshal of Dance Activities May performed a conscientious job in seeing to it that all the young ladies present enjoyed themselves to the utmost.

The chapter extends congratulations to Crazy F. Boyden for his success in overshadowing the nigger opposition to take top honors in the diving event of the recent swimming competition. For next year's competition Crazy is perfecting a tricky, standing, frog dive.

The Beta-Kappa orphans party scheduled for last Sunday was cancelled due to an outbreak of measles at the orphanage. Social chairman Wingate has never had the disease.

Beta economists suggest the speculation invest in Palmer Tire & Rubber Company due to a marked increase in consumption by local interior decorators.

Phi Delta Theta

While part of the home party to the tune of scrumptious Capitations at the ROTC bistro, the unlucky stay-at-homes spent a quiet weekend in diligent study. Save Chuck White, who was recently pinned to Sue Blair.

Congratulations to Chuck, and to Steve Frink, Paul Carlson, and Dave Holdorf, who were recently elected to Blue Key.

Delta Gamma

The DGs, dates and guests had great time last Friday night at their spring formal which was held at the Paint Pony Country Club. Chuck Gibson and group provided the very danceable music. Congratulations also to Nancy Parker and Maria Bullock for being tapped for Cap and Gort the Women's Honorary, and again to Maria for receiving the Rice Award at the AWS Home Banquet.

Congratulations also go to Ned Dunbar and Judy Sessions who were chosen as the two new cheerleaders.

Monday night Linda Wanger passed a candle announcing her pinning to Kappa Sigma Delta. And thus ends the social season for Delta Gamma—as we now go into Dead Week and finals. Good luck to everyone!

CC SLUGGER takes a vicious cut at the elusive ball last week. This week the Tiger nine journeys to Greeley for a tough CSC series.

Slocum Intramurals

Thursday night, May 2, 1st behind the fine swimming team. Steve Frough and Halbach raced to a victory in the Slocum Swimming Meet. Frough won the 50 yard backstroke and the individual medley while Halbach took second in the 50 yard freestyle stroke. The two teammates teamed with Steve Perry and Mike Belt to cop the 200 yard freestyle relay. Other swimmers included Steve Wollman and North in the 50 yard freestyle and the 50 yard butterfly. Skip Mullins (4th) took the 100 yard backstroke. In the diving, and the 2nd place team in the 150 yard medley.

In the past two weeks several ball games have been played. Steve Frough won a volleyball challenge. 2nd South emerged as the team to beat, several wings are determined to win it this week. In one of the games of the season 2nd South clobbered 3rd South 24-12 in a 3 inning marathon. A few days later both sides improved their fielding, and a real pitcher's duel developed between Steve Kopp and Bob Workinger. The final score was 12-9 in 2nd South's favor. Later in the week 4th West won 2nd South a good game but came out on the short end of a 1-2 score when the game was tied after five innings. 2nd South has been sparked by the fine fielding of centerfielder Dee Wilson and tremendous home runs of Dale Hall.

Judo Men Fight Well But Lose 41-9 to CU

The invictorious CC judo team returned this weekend from Boulder with a 41 to 9 defeat by CU. CC fighting one of its best matches of the year, couldn't seem to do much to get any wins. Blackmer brought home CC's only points. McNeill and Smith each got half point throws before being thrown.

The play was as follows: Reigel (CU) over Blackmer, Taylor (CU) over Parker, Lange (CC) over Coleman, Avendon (CU) over Merriam, and Pader (CU) over Smith.

CC Nine to Play CSC

This weekend the baseball nine will make a perilous journey to face Pete Butler's ferocious CSC Bears in games today and Saturday. CSC, perennial Rocky Mountain Conference champion, is favored to win, but the Tigers should certainly put up a valiant effort. The season has not been completely victorious, but it is certainly a commendable improvement over last year's 3-15 record. If this upward trend continues we can look for a constantly improving team which could become a threat in the conference and which can at least supply some entertaining baseball.

Director Don Oden has taken this week to curtail another favorite Slocum pastime—gambling. However, water fights and other harmless fun continue to grow in popularity. 2nd South, who can do more than one thing well, provokes most of the battles. Only time will tell whether the approach of finals and summer vacation will provide an excuse for another campaign like the one before spring break in which over sixty boys from four wings enjoyed the full benefits of such unorganized recreation.

Golfers Squash Regis Team 25-0

Colorado College golf team blanked the Regis College team last week 25-0 in a match played at the Kissing Camels Golf Club on April 23. Bob Heiny was medalist with a 77. The following scored wins: Bob Magie, Rick Fanning, Cole Robinson, Art Berglund, Steve Wollman, Jim Schultz, Rich Nichols and Pete Goodbody.

On Friday and Saturday the Tigers were not so fortunate, dropping matches to Denver University and Colorado University. Against Denver only Don Stouffer and Steve Wollman were able to win their matches as the Tigers went down to defeat 6-3 at the Broadmoor.

On Saturday the team journeyed to Boulder and 3½ to 14½ as Colorado University's two top men shot a 68 and 69. Art Berglund, Cole Robinson and Bob Heiny had CC from a shutout by scoring against the strong CU team.

Netters Hopes High To Take Championship

The Tiger tennis team hopes to top off the year this weekend with a repeat victory in the conference championship meet. During dual meet play, the netters have downed practically all conference competition behind the steady winning of captain Russ Sperry and second player Cy Dyer.

Sperry is the returning conference champion from last year and has been the mainstay for Coach Peterson's title hopes. He is the only senior on the freshman-dominated team which could dominate the conference for the next few years.

The meet will be held May 10 and 11 at the Garden of the Gods' courts and will pit the Bengals' top players against many of the top players in the area including several foreign national stars attending Colorado Mines.

Colorado College hopes to provide both the individual and team champions once again, but in any event it will be a tournament well worth watching.

Tennis Team Wins

The Colorado College tennis team had a chance last weekend to finish proving its superiority in the Rocky Mountain Conference before the championship match May 10 and 11. Following a previous double victory over CC, they squashed Mines and Adams State in an unusual doubleheader.

ings to win over the Gamma Phis, 25-15.

Chimaging the week's activity was the victorious Theta effort over Delta Gamma, 23-8. Art Berglund added his vocal talents to insure the outcome; and Gretchen Swan did her best to help along Dr. Benetz's plans to raze Perkins by lining a high outside pitch into deep left-up against the tottering east face of the unhappy structure.

Just a word of warning to the girls' intramural teams—the winner will be privileged to play their male counterparts at the season's close.

Chess Team Ties 3-3 In Match with AFA

On Sunday, April 28, a lean CC chess team straggled to the Air Force Academy for a return match after losing, 7-2, the week before. In a combined Go-chess match, CC tied the Academy 3-3. The four Colorado College players were Terry Rosen, Rob Oakes, Joe Wilcox, and Serge Trubetzkoy.

Rosen and Oakes, due to a shortage of players, played GO and chess simultaneously.

Winners were: GO: Oakes and Rosen; Chess: Rosen.

On Monday, May 6, the team played its last and best match of the year, losing 3½-2½ to a strong Colorado Springs Chess Club.

Winning for CC were Terry Rosen and Joe Wilcox. Rob Oakes played a strong game against an extremely competent opponent, ending up in a draw. Other players for Colorado College were Gary Ziegler, Serge Trubetzkoy, and Charles Puckett.

CC Hosts Golf Tourney

Colorado College will play a two-way role in the sixteenth Annual Pikes Peak Intercollegiate Invitational Golf Tournament May 10-11. In addition to being co-host of the tournament, started sixteen years ago, the college will be the defending champion in the College Division in this year's link play-offs.

The Tigers will be part of a field of twenty-one teams representing the strongest golf powers in the Western states. Coach Juan Reid said, "The first day's matches will be played on the Academy's Eisenhower Course Friday, May 10, and the wrap-up of the event will take place at the Broadmoor Country Club Saturday, May 11. More than 115 golfers are expected to join the links during the two-day tournament. The meet is slated to start early Friday, May 10, at the Eisenhower Course and continue throughout the day. The golfers will get off to another early start Saturday, May 11, and complete the tournament the same afternoon."

Colorado College will not only be busy hosting the visiting golfers but will be fighting to retain its championship of the College Division. Bob Heiny, Steve Wolman, and Art Berghud will be battling for top golfer honors for the Tigers after trying in point winning during the regular match season.

Girls acting as hostesses for the tournament are Kathy Aurin, Nancy Bowers, Christie Mickelson, Julie Rohlfke, Ann Babcock, and Isabel Williams.

Three hundred and seventy new students descended last week from some 35 states and 12 nations on a freshly landscaped and well watered campus grided for the tread of freshmen feet.

Greeted by a friendly host of counselors, AWS officers, and upperclassmen, they have already been horrified, disillusioned, pleased, shocked, or intimidated by the Student Handbook, capped by ASOC President Artie Sherman, inspired by Dr. Hochman, admonished by the Honor Council, examined by the primary, and formally mixed with the upperclassmen and The Astronauts last Saturday. As if that weren't enough, regular classes have begun.

Somewhere, however, in the midst of all the harassments and hazing, the Class of 1967 has managed to begin to become a part of the college. Sedgwick the Swinger, Sophomore has already suffered an ignominious lynching at their hands, and confidence is running high that his class will be soundly defeated in the coming freshman-sophomore fight. The freshmen are beginning their gradual disappearance from the heads of defiant frosh, and the name tags are becoming less and less necessary.

Campus organizations, including the TIGER, are undergoing their yearly invigoration with the refreshing enthusiasm which interested freshmen bring with them.

Facing the incoming class is a continuation of the "Indoctrination Week" through today, with the freshman-sophomore fight to be staged tomorrow morning. The Associated Women Students' Round-up, to be held tomorrow at the Flying W Ranch west of Colorado Springs, has as its aim the further integration of the class into the life of the college through close social association with upperclassmen.

With the end of the formal indoctrination and orientation of the freshmen, it remains for the course of the year to determine the nature and the value of the role they will play at Colorado College.

Y'All Come!

Y'all come! This Saturday, September 14, at the Flying W Ranch. This is for everyone, and the cost includes a chuckwagon dinner and entertainment by the Flying W ranch hands—about three hours of food and just plain fun! The cost, if you provide your own transportation, is just $2.00 per person. If you choose to ride the bus, which leaves Rastall at 6:00 p. m., the cost is $2.50. Come and enjoy yourself!

Honor Council

The incredible number of bobbing beanie sports by the defiant class of 1967 brought forth the startling reality that another college year at CC had begun.

After a week of freshman orientation and the muzzling question as to who was hazing who, CC's atmosphere, her spirit and her traditions, were reaffirmed as the freshmen became an integral part of our college community.

Colorado College takes pride in the principle that every opportunity is presented for the full personal development and growth of each individual. Every student activity is designed not to hinder but to promote a learning process. It is specifically felt that the Colorado College Honor System plays a vital role in the individual's intellectual development in a progressive academic environment.

The Honor System places responsibility upon the individual and his cooperation with his fellow students in promoting and continuing a time honored tradition. It is each student's obligation to come to a full understanding of the system under which he lives. However, any system that does not allow for questions and suggestions will serve to curtail this progressive environment.

The students elected by you to serve on the Honor Council are at all times available to answer questions and to entertain constructive suggestions. With the enthusiasm and spirit shown this past week, let us as students continue to work together in all facets of our college life. We are looking forward to a fun-filled, profitable year.

The Colorado College Honor Council includes: Ed D-George, Steve Sabon, Barb Cooney, Sue Caudill, Sharon Shockford, Paul Carson, Solomon Kiyawne, Terry Wingard, Phil LeCroyer, Al Loois, Art Warwick, Jeff Sauer, Dan Martin and Harris Sherman.

'The Fire Next Time'

Professors William Hochman and Thomas Ross will discuss the moving and eloquent essays in James Baldwin's book, "The Fire Next Time," at 7:30 p. m. in the W.E.S. Room, Rastall Center, this coming Sunday evening, September 15th.

In this book the famous Negro novelist discusses many aspects of the racial question including the Black Muslims, the failure of the white liberal and the failure of the Christian churches to meet the implications of the race question. All interested students are invited to come to this meeting and to join in the discussion after the initial presentation. This meeting is being sponsored by the Religious Affairs Committee. Light refreshments will be provided.

Class Meetings

On September 19, there will be a class meeting for the purpose of nominating a slate to fill the open positions of president and secretary-treasurer of the junior class. Nominations will be taken from the floor for the specific position and balloting will be held on the 25th of September.

Freshman Class—The nominations for the positions of commissioners of the freshman class will be made at a class meeting on September 24, at 11 a. m. in Perkins. All freshmen are encouraged to attend this meeting.

Can Frosh Orientation Give Scholastic Image?

In the process of making application to college, a student must decide what he wishes from a higher education, and then try to find that institution which best suits his desires. An image is created in the mind—an image which can, in the post-acceptance correspondences and in the period of introduction to the school, be sustained or shattered. It seems valid to assume, then, that there should be an attempt to gear correspondence, orientation, and indoctrination to the creating and maintaining of those images which are both most realistic and most favorable to the college atmosphere.

The Colorado College motto is "knowledge and intellectual discipline," and "its goal is to nurture human beings who know and prize the ideals of the Judeo-Christian tradition, freedom, equality, and brotherhood." If these statements, found in the Colorado College catalog, provide a "realistic and favorable" picture of CC, an attempt must be made to decide to what extent the college correspondence, Student Handbook, and weeks of Orientation and Indoctrination maintain such an image, and then to rectify any shortcomings.

The letters which the prospective freshman received from Mr. Wood, the Denas, welcome, and others, portrayed a deep respect for each student as a human being with a potential for excellence, and indicated the college's ambition to carry out its stated goals. In the midst of such letters, however, a different view of the college appeared in the form of the Student Handbook.

This publication, while providing a great deal of valuable information, also pictures the "typical" beer-hust and a group of students struggling, not for "knowledge and intellectual discipline," but for an old rug on top of a slippery pole. In the Handbook is a list of rules which "freshmen are required to observe." Some of these requirements, such as wearing name-tags, learning names and titles of administrators and officers, and staying off the grass, are helpful and traditional. That each student must pay $1.25 for a hat which he may not even wish to wear, however, seems contrary to the ideal of "freedom." Fortunately, the weaknesses in parts of the Handbook are counterbalanced by the article, "Questions Without Answers" by Richard Amos, which gives the incoming freshman a generalized but fairly realistic view of the place he will occupy at Colorado College, as well as some of the difficulties he may find. If "to be forewarned is to be prepared," this article is of distinct worth.

As the freshman arrives on the campus, the experience of orientation begins. He is met by welcome, or counselors who exemplify the spirit of brotherhood which seems to be so prevalent at CC. The first welcoming speeches, dorm meetings, and placement tests find the freshman in a daze. By the Monday evening luncheon, however, students begin to examine the place to which they have come.

The speech by Dr. Hochman pictured Colorado College as a body of teachers and maturing students searching together for "knowledge and intellectual discipline." This image, however, was slightly dimmed by the more levitous "capping of Frosh," and within an hour was removed from many minds by the hanging of "Sedgwick," which was reminiscent of 1964's Hate Week. Although such activities may be encouraged to "bind the class together" it has been suggested that debates, led by professors or volunteering students, on books read during the summer, would perform a similar function while preparing the freshman for an atmosphere of "intellectual discipline." At the women's welcome reception gathering, although enjoyable fellowship was provided, the customs of blowing bubble-gum, rolling cigarettes, and whistling through manicured cracks seemed an incongruous introduction to The Quad.

The dignified, serious, and clarifying explanation of the Honor System, the rewarding conferences with the advisors, and the first impressing days of classes revitalized the image portrayed in Dr. Hochman's speech. If, however, the activities of Monday, September 9, can be considered "typical" of Indoctrination Week, the images of Colorado College as an institution for higher learning may be entirely demolished in the minds of freshmen. This day was begun for "frosh" by a pounding on the door at 5:30, followed by the entry of an upperclassman commanding the subject to be present "in uniform," in front of Rastall by 7:10. After being led in various yells by "intellectual, knowledgeable elders," these freshmen with 8:00 classes were prevented from eating breakfast. By evening, the anger thus aroused caused many freshmen, who should have been forming good study habits, to spend valuable time plotting revenge.

During the past summer, and more vividly, during the past two weeks, 370 students have been maintaining, altering, or losing their respective images of Colorado College. It is hoped that the images maintained are those truest to the school. If they are not, a conscious effort must be made on the part of the faculty and students to make the introductory activities of future classes fair representations of the four years they introduce. It will be unfortunate if such efforts can be prevented in the name of "tradition."

THE JOYOUS PURSUIT OF KNOWLEDGE is once again under way as students migrate to the Bookstore to acquire the most indispensable tools for that search.

ASCC Notes

The Executive Council of the Associated Students of Colorado College would like to preface the current topics of interest with a hearty welcome to those of you who have returned.

We would also like to welcome the freshmen and transferring (or is it wandering) students whose new faces will shortly lead into the mass. New and returning faculty are not to be forgotten. Adding Neel, and anyone else whom we may have forgotten, we extend our welcome to one and all.

Foremost as a topic of interest is that the ASCC will continue to meet every Monday at 4:00 p. m. in the ASCC room, and we do hope that as many members of the college community as possible (excluding Neel) will attend. Although the ASCC can function without help from the outside, we are chosen to represent the entire student body, and this often proves to be a difficult job. Because of this we would appreciate YOUR attendance at any or all ASCC meetings.

The members of the ASCC Executive Council for this year follow: Harris Sherman, president; Bill Pelz, vice-president; Karen McVaine, secretary; Paul Carson, treasurer.

Two junior representatives, to fill the vacancies of president and secretary-treasurer, and also freshman commissioners will be chosen in the near future. Also to be chosen shortly will be the faculty advisor to the ASCC.

The ASCC is divided into a number of committees, and functions through them. These will be discussed in next week's ASCC Notes as all of the appointments are not definite at this time.

The ASCC wishes to congratulate President Wornor and Deen Carran on their new positions and to express its desire to be called upon any occasion. We are looking forward to a very productive year with the new administration and with the class of 1967.

Any questions concerning student government should be referred to the members of the Executive Council, and any problems pertaining to student government should be dealt with through your representatives. Budget requests for the coming year may be obtained at Rastall desk. All organizations who are to receive funds from ASCC should fill out a request and return it to Paul Carson by September 24.

The ASCC has already begun to fight and we do hope that many of the members of the college community will be able to attend our meetings to help in this fight. — Respectfully submitted, Karen McVaine, ASCC secretary

Shrine Chapel

September 15 — 11:00 a. m.
Minister: Professor Douglas Fox
Sermon: "Living Dangerously"
Worship leader: Prof. Kenneth Burton.

This is an era of conflict. Competing ideologies contend fiercely for each person's allegiance; social, economic, political and religious issues divide and disturb communities. One of the deepest of these divisions is between liberalism and conservatism, and its presence is felt in every area of human interest, from art to (I suspect) zoology. The educated person, equipped and concerned to see all sides of an issue, sometimes finds decisions and commitment agonizingly difficult, yet sees that not to decide may simply be irresponsible — a sort of running from the field while the battle still rages.

In this situation the Christian faith addresses us — not with a gentle word of comfort for weaklings, but with a serious, disturbing word, yet one which can, if we permit, lead us into courage and purposeful living.

OPINION

Religion on the Campus

By Reverend Kenneth Burton

The College Catalog states that this college is a "missionary college of liberal arts." At the same time it says the one of our ideals and goals is "to seek with them (i. e. the students) a knowledge of God and to provide the occasion for worship." It seems to this writer that the College is saying that although we do not wish to press any particular religious viewpoint upon the members of the College community, we recognize the great importance historically of religion in our national life and in the life of man everywhere. Also we recognize the importance of different, contemporary religious viewpoints. How, then, does the College give expression to its recognition of the importance of religious questions in men's lives?

Dr. William Hochman, in a beautiful and moving speech to the freshman class, suggested part of the answer. He suggested that the total task of the college was, in essence, religious one. The purpose of the College is to help the student to begin to answer in a responsible manner two basic questions: "Who am I?" and "Why am I here?" It points the student to certain classical and contemporary answers to these questions and in so doing attempts to help him, by hearing what other men have held before him, formulate his own answer. Included among these attempts at answers are "religious" ones (both Christian and non-Christian). The College hopes to stimulate the student to stretch his mind with these questions and answers in two ways.

First, through the religion department! There will be by the beginning of the next academic year, three full-time faculty members. As the Christian tradition is the main religious tradition in this country and in Western civilization, and as there is more than enough material for a mere titman department to cope with, the main attempt is to set forth as objectively as possible, as far as their particular limitations will allow, the depths, riches, and subtleties of the Christian tradition. In doing so, they attempt to set forth views which they may themselves be opposed. In addition to this there is an attempt to present non-Christian religious faiths. This is done by the department itself, although both the Christian and non-Christian courses will be supplemented by visiting scholars.

Second, extra-curricular religion! One member of the religion department is the Minister of Shove Memorial Chapel, and acts as a kind of chaplain to the College. The other members of the department assist him in this capacity. They have to work on several different levels. Although they have to speak out of their own conviction, the last thing that they wish to do is to proselytize. If any student is committed to any particular religious viewpoint they encourage him to maintain it and, at the same time, encourage him to consider its intellectual implications and its place in an academic community. Denominational groups help to promote this end. They wish to stimulate, in the context of an ACADEMIC community, responsible consideration of the religious answers to the questions posed by Dr. Hochman. The whole ministry of Shove Chapel program is to raise these questions and to point to some answers in this community of inquiry. As varied and stimulating a program as possible is offered to promote this end. The Religious Affairs Committee, made up of both faculty and students, helps to plan and set up these programs. As individuals, the members of the Religion Department offer themselves to any member of the College community, who may seek counsel and help, not only with academic and intellectual questions, but for any other problems which may arise in the course of our individual and common lives. This is the sketchiest attempt to describe religion on the Colorado College Campus.

A Good Newspaper

As this is the first editorial of the year, I would like to take this opportunity to outline the basic direction which I feel the newspaper should follow. To do this I will try to define the situation in which a school newspaper finds itself which prompts it of necessity to take the actions that it does.

First of all, a school newspaper is in the unique position of being an almost unchallenged means of communication to the student body. Therefore it is incumbent that a paper contain outlets for a balanced presentation of campus life as it is. However, a newspaper when it runs properly is more than a mirror, for it takes upon itself the added function of critic, and so it strives to define what campus life would be if it were as it should be.

Few would deny the need for such representation, and yet few schools have it. If asked why this is, I would have to answer that it is because people, though they say they think it essential to have a good newspaper, have not properly gauged the actions necessary to attain this end.

What are these actions? They are, first, the creation of a staff which takes pride in what it is trying to accomplish, and secondly, a financial investment by the school in its own functioning and image.

Colorado College can have such a newspaper this year, but it is not inevitable that it will. We still must attract a number of interested freshmen to continue the impetus that has been growing in the last few years, and the school in recognition of its own resurgence must be willing to give the requisite support to insure a paper of the same stature that Colorado College itself has achieved.

Publication Policy

In the first issue of the TIGER, an explanation of the purely mechanical aspects of its publication is in order.

(1) Extensive participation by a large and diverse portion of the student body in the TIGER's journalistic process remains the keynote this year. The editors welcome and even solicit letters to the editor from students, faculty, and administration on any topic of interest to the Colorado College community. No anonymous letters will be accepted, but names will be held upon request.

(2) The OPINION column, a regular feature again this year, remains open for the expression of any view which the editors deem particularly timely or interesting, or both.

(3) The deadline for contributions of this sort and for notices from campus organizations is 4:00 p.m. on the Monday prior to publication.

(4) Innovations this year will include the series of profiles of campus figures begun this week with an interview with President Wornor. A search is in progress for a cartoonist whose work will be featured from time to time. A classified advertising section is under consideration and will be instituted if sufficient interest is evidenced. Campus polls on various topics will be an occasional feature, and an analysis of the college's relation to events in Colorado Springs and the surrounding region will mark later issues.

These projected additions to the journalistic repertoire of the newspaper, together with its continued responsibility to report and review significant campus events, make it all the more essential that the TIGER possess a large and active staff of writers, reporters, typists, proofreaders, and headline writers working closely with an efficient and equally active editorial staff.

This is to say, the TIGER needs help in carrying out some rather ambitious plans. We once more urge all interested students to offer their services in those of the above endeavors for which they feel best qualified.

President Worner Answers Many Questions on Pertinent Problems at The Colorado College

Conflict on important issues is one of the surest signs of a healthy college atmosphere. The free exchange of ideas is the best way to the improvement of all facets of an institution. There are a number of issues perennially debated by students, faculty, and administration. We begin this year with a new president, and in order to determine his opinions, he was asked some of these questions.

The answers below are not direct quotations, but a paraphrase of the thoughts he expressed.

Q—Do you think that the ROTC system as it now exists has any utility in a liberal arts college of this type?

A—There are many valuable things which the ROTC program provides for CC students. The opportunity to serve as an officer instead of a regular soldier is the primary advantage. This should not be interpreted in the sense of being able to go to the Officer's Club, but in the sense that the intellectual challenge of the official branch Service School is in most cases more appealing to college graduates than a 2-year stint as a private. Some people, for reasons which I wholeheartedly respect, of course, would prefer not to serve as an officer. The number of men continuing with MS III and MS IV shows that many students do consider it worthwhile.

It is also a sound program on another basis. We do not want to see the establishment in this country of a professional military which has no contact with the rest of the citizenry. The "citizen soldier" has always been the core of our defense, and putting military training into a liberal college atmosphere, rather than limiting it to military academies, is a necessary safeguard against a militarism of the type which was found in Germany of the past.

Perhaps equally important, the Reserve Officer returning to civilian life should be a better informed citizen because of at least some knowledge of the problems of national defense.

There are several reasons why a compulsory program of military training is found at CC. I know that ROTC is not very appealing to the first two years—I would judge that most freshmen hate it. But this section of the program is necessary to maintain the opportunity for the advanced course. The regulations under which our course was established require a minimum of 100 entering freshmen each year. If it were put on a voluntary basis, this number would not be reached. Many of those who would not enter MS I eventually, later decide that the program fits their needs and are commissioned. Most of those with whom I have talked at Summer Camp, both from our College and from other colleges, say that they would not have taken the program if it had been voluntary, even though they were glad that they were in the advanced program leading to a commission.

There is an imminent change which could make ROTC a much sounder part of our curriculum. There is a bill now before Congress which would reorganize all officer training in colleges, making it a two year voluntary course. If this is passed, and I think it will be, there is no question that we will adopt it, and that it will be the basis for a much stronger department.

Q—Last year there was some criticism of the honor system on the grounds that it was not really based on honor. What do you think of this?

A—It is my belief that the honor system is the most important single thing which we have on this campus. It is the only one in this region, and is highly regarded by those both in the academic world and outside. These criticisms are based on less than a complete understanding of what an honor system really means. There is a completely different awareness of the problem here than under a proctor system. The spirit of the honor system is that one does not expect cheating and does not expect to see it. The freedom that this system allows the individual creates an entirely different spirit than the most effective proctoring system could. Each student is asked to take the responsibility for his own work—it is not a system of 32 proctors in a class, except in the sense that everyone must act as proctor to himself.

This is the sense of value which such a system imparts to the individual, and which can be important to him all of his life.

Q—Do you think that the "Greek" organizations serve a useful purpose on a small campus such as ours?

A—I think that they can be useful and add something to the college. Whether or not they do depends on the individual group. There are some hopeful signs that they are becoming more responsible.

Q—There is a feeling among some people that fraternities and sororities are on their way out in American colleges. Do you think that will happen here?

A—I think that it could happen, unless they provide a meaningful service to the campus as a whole. Of course, they could be a great deal stronger than they are, as could be said of many other campus organizations, and unless they work towards this there will be less and less interest.

Many of the usual arguments against the system are not applicable at CC. For example, the "Greeks" as a group do not exercise political control as they do at other schools. I don't feel that there is a conflict between the fraternities and the rest of the college, and even less with the

LeFevre Opposes Governor Love

By Jim Heckman

Last Thursday morning, I interviewed Gazette Telegraph newspaper editor Robert LeFevre. The outspoken critic of everything from Love to the modern conception of government "played out the clock" during the interview so that he would have to say as little as possible. This he did very well.

I can communicate a little of what he said, however, and his statements were disturbing. Disturbing, because he actually believed in what he said. He constantly lapsed into the phrase, "you will have to take the course I offer to really understand my position."

LeFevre denies any political ambitions for himself or his "right wing" friends. He believes that his job is apolitical and that his job is to educate men to see "the Truth." Apparently he is very selective in deciding who will get the truth since his entrance examination for the Freedom School includes a test of personal opinions.

Despite these statements, he did comment on the present political structure of the nation and he implied, and to a degree, explicated his vision of America during the new Age of Enlightenment. He criticized Republican Governor John Love because he had not cut taxes as he had promised in his campaign. LeFevre ignored the fact that such tax cuts would work institutional malnutrition in Colorado, and proceeded to state his anarchistic viewpoint on taxation, namely, that taxation was pure theft.

LeFevre also sees the typical American as being a healthy man with the useless crutches of government to give him a sense of security. Since LeFevre does not want to force his will on anyone, he believes that the crutches must remain as long as the man wants to malingering.

Admitting that the civilized history of man has seen ever increasing development of government, he declares that "the time has come to do something about this trend." LeFevre believes that a sufficiently independent and educated citizenry will need no government at all, although he refused to accept the phrase "the state will wither" because Lenin used it first. He asserts that private firms can do a better job than government can or will.

LeFevre declares that the primary function of government is that of policing, using the commonest conception of cops chasing after robbers. He criticized the inefficiency of government and proposed a plan which he felt would be better. He asserted that out of 180 million Americans there were two million criminals and two and a half million civil servants. He stated that we could improve our legal system by putting one civil servant with each criminal so that the other 176 million citizens could "go about their business safely."

The newspaper editor seemed slightly pessimistic about Americans ever learning the truth and, in fact, said he would be happier to work with "ten deep minds than ten thousand misinformed people." He doubts that we will ever be weaned from mother state but of course he hopes education will triumph.

He is opposed to all types of tariffs and is opposed to any restriction of international trade. He believes that boundaries are meaningless and that we should do things on a people to people basis. I asked him what we should do about the relatively defenseless nations on the Communist periphery, and he said that we should leave them alone. He declared that the best Foreign Policy was no foreign policy at all.

I pressed the point of the need for national defense and at this point he withdrew from the discussion, declaring he had another appointment. He would not answer when asked the question of what the United States should do if attacked by a foreign nation, assuming that taxes were cut and that a national defense was not organized.

Personally speaking, I find it rather hard to accept "Truth" from a man who evaluates justice in terms of dollars as he did during the course of the discussion. One of his principal objections to the present police system was that it cost the taxpayer too much money to give a man a fair trial and serve sentence on him. He advocates private police forces solely for protection purposes and not punishment, since men in prisons, when released, "come out and do the same thing all over again." He has no sense of social responsibility, at least in his political theory. He relies on obscure economists and others to lend weight to his mellifluous words. LeFevre, who seeks "Truth," expounds half-truths stranger than truth or fiction and the realization of his political truth implies, ultimately primordial chaos.

Symposium Meeting

Associate Dean Fred A. Sonderman has announced that there will be a general planning session for the 1964 Symposium on Tuesday, September 17, at 4 p. m. in the WES Lounge.

All interested faculty and students are invited to attend this meeting, at which Dr. Sondermann will present a detailed report on the progress of the symposium, to be held in January on the topic, "The Second World War."

At this meeting also specific plans for various aspects of the symposium, including committee appointments and consideration of such matters as movies, drama, and music to be used in connection with the annual event.

Madruga Inaugurates Fall Lecture Series

Mr. Harvey Madruga, assistant professor of French, began the Colorado College Faculty Lecture Series on Thursday, September 12, with a discussion of the concept of love in French literature.

Mr. Madruga's lecture was the first of a series of three lectures to be sponsored by the faculty this fall. Next Thursday, September 19, Mr. Wilson Y. Gately, associate professor of mathematics, will speak on Conflict in Mathematics. Assistant professor of economics, Paul T. Bechtolt will close the lecture for the fall with a discussion of the Collective Bargaining Crisis on September 26.

In beginning his speech, Mr. Madruga said that contrary to popular opinion, the majority of major French writers regard love as being destructive to the individual. Only in a few comedies and inferior literature is love portrayed as being a state of bliss or happiness.

Discussing 17th century literature, Mr. Madruga noted that the authors of this period tended to describe love as basically a religious or mystical experience. Usually the sexual aspect of love did not receive the importance that it is accorded in modern novels.

Mr. Madruga's speech was extremely interesting as an introduction to a fascinating aspect of French literature. One only wished that he had mentioned some contemporary French existentialist writers.

CC Experiments with Two Language Houses

By Caroline Croyke

Within the past three months, an experiment in "living a language" has been undertaken at Colorado College. A CC first, Das Deutsche Haus, was run in conjunction with the summer session, and was highly successful. The Beta Theta Pi house was converted into a German coed dorm, and the 21 students living there pledged to speak "nur Deutsch" during the entire session whether within or without Das Deutsche Haus. Permission to speak English was granted only on special occasions, such as when parents visited the campus.

In addition to the two hours of class per day, laboratory sessions, meals, folk singing, German movies, lectures, and slide-showings—all "auf Deutsch"—were also required. (To say nothing of the average homework load of six to seven hours per day!)

Meals were eaten in Rastall Center dining hall, in a section reserved for German students only.

Another advantage offered by "Das Deutsche Haus" was that besides the three professors, Mrs. Hertha Feyock, Mrs. Lois Weston, and Dr. Edward Diller, there were three natives of Germany on the staff—all of whom lived with the students in the house. Ursula Asheuer and Wolf Gewehr served as assistants, and Mrs. Erica Kesten acted as housemother and social director.

The results speak for themselves. All 21 students (ranging from first to third year) made excellent progress with corresponding grades. The 17 off-campus students, who had the same class-time and homework loads, but for whom the other German activities were not required, did not do as well.

More important than the grade results was the fact the residents of Das Deutsch Haus thoroughly enjoyed themselves throughout the session. The only ones who had trouble with the situation were those enrolled in first year German, who felt at a loss when trying to converse with the other students. Understanding this, the German department will run the house again next summer for second to fourth year students only. First year will still be offered, but these students will live in regular college housing.

Sigma Chi

The Sigma Chi is busy putting the final touches on their house, which was completely remodeled on the inside over the summer. The Sigs are also preparing to defend their intramural football title. The loss of Alex Yankovich and Roger Williams will hurt, but new meat has been found in the talented Krusner Kopecky and stars from Minnesota. The Sigma Chi opened their busy social season last Saturday with a picnic with the Kappas.

Beta Theta Phi

A week ago tonight the fire-breathing Beta pledges hosted the sluggish Phi Gamma clones at the first annual Pledges' Egg Hunt, held in the spacious, new Wootton Commons, adjacent to the Beta Sports Complex and Ice Palace. During the long battle, lasting close to 40 seconds, the active members of both fraternities showered their support and enthusiasm upon the contestants from the coliseum's Spanish motif grandstands and press box. Some witnesses said it looked like a blizzard. Due to the extreme difficulty and confusion in the final judging, I can safely say that the results were scrambled. Tickets are now on sale from any Beta for just $8.50 per person for next year's contest.

Alpha Phi

On Monday night the Alpha Phi held their first meeting of what promises to be a most successful and enthusiastic year. Congratulations were in order for Jan Okamura, Pamela Bays, Leslie Eckert and Lynn Sipple, all of whom became pinned this past summer. Congratulations, girls!

Welcomes were extended to Mrs. Marguerite (Mom) Lewis, our new housemother, and Eyglo Eyjolfsson of Iceland. Eyglo will be a guest of the Alpha Phi for their next several meetings. The retreat last Saturday was enjoyed by all, and the pool was most relaxing on a warm afternoon.

The Alpha Phis extend a very warm welcome to the freshmen and hope their future college days will prove both rewarding and enjoyable.

Gamma Phi Beta

The Gamma Phi got off to a rousing start for the fall term with a dinner and a retreat at the house last Monday night. Among the familiar faces were those of Judy Clark and Deb Smith, who returned from a year interlude in Europe. Welcome back!

The Gamma Phis are proud to announce the securing of the sorority scholarship trophy for the third straight year, and intend to try to keep it for another three (time will tell). Also, congratulations to our Brother Betas for the highest grade point average among the fraternities.

Kappa Sigma

Kappa Sigma was crushed this fall to find out that the yearly moonlight hay ride with the Colorado College sanitation engineers (Shorty and the gang), their wives, and sweethearts had been arbitrarily cancelled due to some rather unorthodox spring time gallantries by the brothers. Much to our sorrow the jukebox is covered with dust and the basement floor remains freshly waxed.

KE is happy to note the return of Gentleman Jim Haley and Steve Ailes, two social sparkplugs.

The theme of our fall program of stimulating lectures and demonstrations is Probationary Periods Can Be Fun. The entire series has been placed in the capable hands of Billy Steckle, Jr., son of Herr J. O. Steckle, the remarkable proponent of currently widely accepted methods of achieving mental and physical happiness and author of many books

These groups serve an obvious social purpose, and they seem to breed a loyalty to the college after graduation. The greatest number of our active alumni are ex-Greeks and this loyalty is very important to a private college.

We must remember that fraternal organizations are secondary to our main goal of education. Deferred rush is a strong step in this direction, giving the freshman a chance to see what he really wants from his college education instead of being "rushed" into a group during his first week here. Many students wait until their sophomore year to pledge—this is often a good idea.

There is a feeling among some students and faculty that there is an anti-intellectual element in the Greek system. I really don't know about this. It doesn't enter my mind whether a person is a member of this group or not when I meet him on an academic basis. Each person must be judged on his own merit, just as each fraternity and sorority must be considered as an individual group, not just a symptom of a system.

Q—What are the reasons for having Colorado College a completely residential college? Why are so many of the better students applying to live off-campus?

A—Our concept of a liberal arts college includes more than just the classroom education found in city colleges. We have many co-curricular programs which are a vital part of an education, and which are located on campus. It is our goal to provide first-class facilities for all students to avail themselves of these opportunities. There will always be some students living off campus, but we will try to avoid this as much as possible except for strong reasons.

I know that not many men would want to live in Slocum for 4 years, but we are working on a different principle in our upper-class housing which is better suited to greater responsibility.

The number of good students applying for off-campus housing can be balanced by the number of those off campus who are dismissed from school each year. Many of these might not have been in trouble if they had been on campus.

It should also be realized that many students have been turned down in the quest for campus housing because we have been unable to provide housing for them. Colorado Springs is a dynamic and growing community and we simply cannot run the risk of not having first-class housing available for our students. Housing shortages have been quite acute at various times in Colorado Springs.

When students apply to Colorado College, they should know the type of college it is. Those who don't want the type of liberal education we offer, of which a residential campus is a part, they should not apply here, but should probably attend a non-residential university campus which for them might be more ideal.

Campus Intramurals

Pushball is an excellent beginning for this year's intramural program. The game allows each player an opportunity to make a contribution to the game, but no one "stars."

In playing pushball, the ball is put in play at midfield with a restraining line of five yards for each team. There should be a regular lineup of five men on the restraining line, four intermediate defense men and two goalies. Before the ball is in the play no player shall interfere with an opponent.

Play starts on a signal from the referee which will permit any participant to seek contact with the ball and power it toward his goal. Pulling men away from the ball is within the rules, but pulling, shoving, tackling or blocking must not be carried on away from the ball. Clipping is illegal. Clipping will mean automatic withdrawal from the game for the participant involved—with no substitution.

The ball shall be out of bounds only when it has completely crossed either of the sidelines. On all out of bounds situations, the ball will be rolled out of bounds by the official and the teams must respect a restraining line five yards from the ball. The teams must be instructed to hold their rush until the whistle blows.

There will be no substitution for men ejected from the game. Substitution is unlimited. Players shall be substituted only when the ball is carried out of bounds, after a goal is scored, time out, when a player is injured.

The object of the game is to push or carry the ball completely over the opponent's goal line for five points. After each score, the ball is brought to the center of the field and put into play in the same manner as at the start of the game. All games will be played on Perkins Field.

So, if you happen to stop and watch this game some afternoon, do not be alarmed by the brutish tactics that are employed.

FALL FOOTBALL SCRIMMAGE BEGINS as Coach Jerry Carle puts the heaviest Tiger team in years through its gridiron paces.

Fall Practice Begins As Season Nears

Sixty potential football players reported to Cossitt Hall at 10:00 a.m. Aug. 25 to prepare for their first game only three weeks away with Hastings College.

In order to accomplish the high degree of physical fitness that has been typical of Tiger teams in recent years, it was necessary to have double practices. For the first two weeks, the mornings were devoted to conditioning and the afternoons were devoted to contact.

Coach Jerry Carle seemed very pleased with the way his team was shaping up, despite the loss of six out of seventeen expected returning lettermen.

Jerry Carle's grand design is to have the veterans who are acquainted with the many subtleties of our slot-T attack carry the offensive load, while our big new freshmen act as defensive stalwarts for seasoning.

With all the new talent CC has this year it probably will not be necessary for braintrusts to dream up radical offenses such as the "Belly" which pleased the crowds but gained few yards. This year the team should have strong enough personnel to concentrate on basic offenses and defenses.

To handle all the new material coaches Jerry Carle and Frank Flood have enlisted Coach Johnson to tutor the ends, Coaches Leon Eastlack and Jerral Lear to encourage the backs and Coach Bill Lang to bang heads with the line.

In spite of all this heartening news, Carle also has some sobering thoughts. One is that out of the eleven returning lettermen only 220 pound captain Al Looch and 180 pound ends Ed DeGeorge and Steve Frink are seniors.

The rest of the lettermen range from sophomore tackle Bill Jacobson at 230 to sophomore guard Bob Bishop who weighs 160.

Another reason for caution is our schedule, which has Adams State on it, whose four-man forward wall weighs 1,000 pounds, and Western State, which comes close to the same mark.

This year's schedule is as follows:

- Sept. 14—Hastings College, there
- Sept. 21—8 p.m. Nebraska Wesleyan, here
- Sept. 28—2 p.m. Fort Lewis A & M, here
- Oct. 5—California Lutheran, there
- Oct. 12—Colorado State College, there
- Oct. 19—2 p.m. Concordia College, here
- Oct. 26—Western State College, there
- Nov. 2—2 p.m. Adams State College, here
- Nov. 9—2 p.m. Doane College, here
- Nov. 16—Colorado Mines, there

Hank Rase Returns as Admissions Assistant

Colorado College last week announced the appointment of Henry L. Rase, 22, as assistant director of admission.

An alumnus of Colorado College where he majored in geology, Mr. Rase is the son of Mrs. L. L. Rase, Jr. of 50 Colorado Blvd., Denver.

Colorado College Will Leave Rocky Mountain Conference

The Colorado College announced in June that it would withdraw from the Rocky Mountain Faculty Athletic Conference which it helped found fifty-three years ago. The action will become effective in September, 1964. This step was taken reluctantly in Gunnison where the faculty representatives of the four other RMFAC colleges rejected Dr. Ray Werner's proposal to withdraw from conference football, with the hope that CC could continue participating in conference golf, tennis, and baseball.

Two causes underlie the college's wish to withdraw from conference football: an increasing competitive disparity within that sport, and the incompatibility of conference rules with the college's football program.

By now it should be common knowledge to all old students that we are outclassed in conference football. Our two near wins within the conference last year can be attributed only to superior coaching and high spirit on behalf of the Tigers, and complete overconfidence on the part of the players and coaches from both Mines and Adams State. It is high credit to the team that we were able to come within so close a margin of victory over these two well learned and it is doubtful if we will be able to repeat last year's performance inside the conference.

However, despite these facts, we did show great promise in our win against St. Mary's of the Plains, our tie with Nebraska Wesleyan, and our one touchdown loss to Washburn University; it is these colleges, and others like them, to which we wish to gear our schedule in 1964 in the hopes of meeting more realistic competition than we have been playing. We simply cannot compete with colleges of the calibre of Adams or Western State, which have sent several of their members into pro-training camps.

This is not to say that CC could not be a conference power if we so wished. We have, at our disposal, as do the other conference members, a law which allows grants-in-aid up to full tuition and expenses when athletic ability is a factor for admission into a conference college. But we prefer not to use it.

Our refusal to give such aid, based on ability rather than need, is in accord with the college's football program formulated over eight years by former President Benzel, and more recently by his successor, President Worner. In conjunction with the athletic department, it is now the policy of the college to present a football program designed to have greatest value for each individual within the student body. As an aspect of college life, it is felt that the largest contribution to football can be made by the students themselves. Thus, the college has adopted a program under which all students can actively participate as members of the football team.

This philosophy cannot permit distribution of athletic scholarships based on athletic ability. To do so would be to take football away from the individual student, and place in the arms of what this college considers professionalism. CC wants students on the field, not in the stands.

However, in withdrawing from the conference, the college does stand in condemnation of the conference rule which permits athletic scholarships for football, nor does it condemn those that make use of the rule. The college, is on the other hand, affirming a position which has found best suited to its purpose as an academic institution. The step was a hard one to take. CC is willing to rejoin the conference in all sports if the opportunity is given.

Pub Board Meeting

There will be a meeting of the Publications Board open to the student body for the purpose of discussing the Student Handbook on Tuesday, September 17, at 7 p.m. in the ASCC room in Rastall Center. Questions beforehand may be directed to Ben Lyon.

No Spring Football to Be Held

With the college's announcement that it would withdraw from the Rocky Mountain Faculty Athletic Conference, the question of Spring football has once more been asked. Would such practice have been in matching conference competition? Will we make use of Spring football in 1964 to increase our chances of victory over the proposed more realistic schedule?

To both these questions, athletic Director Jerry Carle gave an emphatic no. It was his opinion that an early fall practice benefits CC more than Spring practice, but he was quick to point out that this was not the case with the rest of the conference teams. The four other RMFAC colleges are geared for Spring practice, and make good use of it. CC is not, and herein lies the source of the increasing competitive disparity within the league basic to our withdrawal.

Adams State, Western State, Mines, and C.S.C., in providing athletic scholarships in football, receive a number of students who are tied to that sport. Football players of CC, on the other hand, are not obligated solely to football, and many engage in other spring sports. They are not free for spring football practice. Nor is it the wish of the college to deprive them of their right to participate in any and all sports.

Spring football is also impractical because the college has only one coach available at that time. The rest of the staff have other equally important athletic obligations. Spring football would be an absurdity if it were conducted by only one coach. Teams such as Adams State, however, have large coaching staffs which, like the squad members, are tied to their respective sports.

Another feature, seemingly unique at CC, is the large turnover of squad members each year. Many boys who might occupy key positions in spring would for various reasons not be on campus the following fall. Nor does spring football take into consideration the entrance of an outstanding freshman group such as is the case this year. Recruiting as carried out by the rest of the conference allows these colleges to plan their turnover. Thus they do not run into our problem.

With these facts it is easy to see why spring football will never help CC. Though the college has no plans to drop football, it does not, on the other hand, plan to create a situation requiring spring football. We have renounced the present drift towards the limbo of subsidized "amateurism" elsewhere. The college stands by its decision to provide football for the individual student.

Negro Campaign For Full Equality Is Strong Force

By Traer Sunley

This past year has been a significant one in the field of Civil Rights, so significant that many have begun to refer to it as the "Revolution of 1963." From the sit-in demonstrations in Alabama to the culminating March of 200,000 people in Washington this summer, the pace of events has been moving rapidly, and hopefully with some progress. As a student in Washington this summer I felt fortunate in being able to view closely some of the activities which are taking place in the area of Civil Rights.

However, several considerations immediately became apparent.

Firstly, the struggle for equal rights and opportunity is not simply truly becoming a Negro cause under capable and able Negro leadership. No longer is the white person necessarily the initiator and leader in this fight, although this does not mean that there can be no commitment. Before taking up the banner of Civil Rights, however, one must carefully evaluate his personal convictions, determining not only his position to himself, but to the movement as a whole. There is no place for emotional reactionaries, go-gooders, or seekers of a cause.

Secondly, there are numerous groups concerned and active in this cause. Some, such as CORE, NAACP, the Urban League, and the more recently formed "Snick" (Student Non-violent Coordinating Committee), are well established and familiar with the battle they are fighting, while others are splinter groups, flaring up for a moment and then ceasing to exist in non-existence. Among these were many groups supported by students, often students who were just in Washington for the summer. There were such groups as NAG (Non-violent Action Group), a group concerned mainly with preparations for the March, DARE (District Action for Racial Equality), a protest group involved with housing and employment problems, and NSM (Northern Student Movement), a group active in a tutorial program for Negro students in low income areas. All of these groups were attempting to find constructive solutions to the issues at hand.

Most importantly, however, should be recognition of the fact that young people are not only actively concerned, but assuming responsibility for a problem which demands our most prudent thinking and action. And here I think the student of Colorado College can play a vital role. Not only should he be willing to formulate a rational and intelligent opinion, but he should not fear expressing his thinking to those with whom he comes in contact. Beyond this, there are, of course, more demonstrative forms of action, be it writing letters to your congressmen, doing volunteer work for one of the civil rights groups here in the Springs (an area which has recently been pointed to as the biggest sore spot in Colorado in regard to discriminatory practices) or by participating in organized non-violent protest demonstrations. This is a meaningful challenge to the student. Hopefully it will be met with energy and direction.

90th Academic Year Opened With Tuesday Convocation

By Dorothy Davies

The convocation in Shove Chapel on Tuesday morning marked the formal opening of the 1963-64 school year. Following the solemn procession of the faculty, Rev. Burton and the Colorado College Choir, under the masterful direction of Professor Jenkins, led the assembled college community in worship. Harris Sherman then introduced Dean Curran, Vice President Brossman, Dean Sondermann, and President Worner, who presented the plan and the challenge for "Colorado College, 1963-1964." The President's Prize for Academic Progress was awarded to Mary Louise Meadows.

Dean Curran, in presenting Miss Meadows with her award, emphasized that this honors not only the ability to achieve, but also the determination and perseverance to conquer difficulty. Curran then briefly reviewed the 1963-1964 academic calendar. Of special interest are the inauguration of President Worner on October 18 at 2:00 p.m., other convocations to be held during the year, the symposium on World War II to be held the week before the 2nd semester, and a two-week Spring Vacation.

Vice President Brossman, Executive Director of fund-raising, outlined the budget for the year. Only 66% of the total college cost is covered by the students. The remaining cost must be met by endowments, the alumni fund, and private gifts. Colorado College has been honored with the offer of a $22 million grant by the Ford Foundation, which, by 1965, must be matched by $5.5 million raised by the college. At present, 2/3 of this goal has been reached. Much of the money raised will go toward the completion of the building program. The buildings now being planned or under construction include the sports complex, a humanities center, a new health center, and a men's dorm complex to house 300. Dr. Brossman predicts the completion of the rink and pool by November 1, 1963.

The lecture and symposium programs for the year were previewed by Dr. Sondermann. The public lectures by various faculty members on the theme of "Conflict" are covering the natural sciences, social sciences, and humanities. Tuesday morning forums, International Relations Club programs, and discussions in Rastall provide opportunities for informal learning in more specialized fields. The annual symposium will bring to the campus many of the country's experts on World War II, and will cover not only the historical meaning of the war but also its scientific, literary, and psychological impact.

Dr. Worner formally welcomed the student body to what "can be a very busy, very challenging, and very rewarding year." Defining the "essence of Colorado College" and the "essence of education," he challenged faculty and students to exploit the opportunities offered by CC. The goal of a liberal education is liberation, as far as humanly possible, from fear, superstition, prejudice, and ignorance—liberation for growth and development. The essence of education, Dr. Worner emphasized, is religious, for it involves duty and reverence. The duty is to learn to exercise well man's potential control over the course of events. Reverence is for growth in the Present, which holds within it the complete sum of existence—backwards, forward—"the complete amplitude of time."

The convocation was concluded with the singing of the Alma Mater, a benediction and the recessional of the faculty. Throughout the program, the ideal and the practical aspects of Colorado College were portrayed as a productive and firmly bound unity.

German Club Picnic

The Colorado College German Club invites its members and their guests to attend the annual Fall Picnic this Sunday, September 22, at Austin Bluffs. There will be no charge for the plentiful food and refreshments, the opportunity to sing German songs, to take part in German sports, and to become acquainted with the biggest and most colorful club on our campus. Transportation will be provided, leaving from Hayes House at 2:30 p.m. All signs indicate that this should be another successful attempt to bring a bit of German culture to our community.

Upperclassmen Displeased

Frosh, Elders Express Views On Orientation Purposes

The boisterous hazing of this year's freshman class has caused students to examine the idea of Freshman Orientation week. To obtain a general picture of student feeling, a campus-wide poll was conducted with consideration given the class of the subjects. The figures obtained are rough but sufficient to indicate general trends.

Concerning reaction to the orientation program, two thirds of the freshman girls were pleased. Of these, many were displeased with the egg and pit episode. Only sixteen per cent said they were displeased, while twenty per cent espoused neutrality. Among their male counterparts, less than half as many showed a favorable impression, while almost half stated displeasure. Sixty per cent of the upperclass women, empathizing with the egged freshman girls, were displeased, 25% pleased, and 15% neutral.

Only a small percentage of each group thought the entire program should be abolished. A larger, but still very small number were for the dissolution of Black and Gold even though most were unaware of the purpose and activity of this renowned organization.

The class of '67 have begun to face life realistically and thus almost two-thirds of them were not impressed or depressed by orientation. Nineteen per cent of the girls and 28% of the boys were favorably impressed, while 20% of the girls and 16% of the boys were unfavorably impressed.

The editorial on orientation in the Sept. 13 Tiger was disliked by 50% of the upperclass women and 69% of the upperclass men. Many others had not read it. The freshmen showed less definition, with almost equal numbers of both boys and girls expressing approval and disapproval.

"Unifying and Acquainting the freshman class" was given by many as the purpose of orientation. This is the accepted handbook view. One upper class woman felt that orientation was imitative of big schools and thus has a propaganda approach.

More organization and control was suggested innumerable times as an improvement of orientation. Some freshmen complained that hazing interfered with their studies and suggested timing it so it would not coincide with the first week of classes. Quite a few were in favor of more discussion groups on books read during the summer, and several others recommended the reinstatement of the breakfast at Austin Bluffs. One freshman girl boldly suggested that there should be more unscheduled raids, and one upperclass woman suggested with finality that we should get a new freshman class.

Notice!

Faculty-Student Directory is in process of preparation. If your address or telephone number has changed since you registered, please notify Mrs. Perkins, office of the secretary, Peabody House, extension 204, at once. The Directory includes not only all local addresses and telephone numbers, but home addresses as well.

ASCC Notes

NOTE: Because the principal topic of Monday's ASCC meeting was one of wide concern for many students, THE TIGER has placed Miss Melville's weekly report on page one.

The ASCC meeting last Monday was dominated in importance by a lengthy discussion of the merits of Freshman Orientation and of the Black & Gold as a functioning part of that orientation. The gallery was well attended including two freshman girls, Judy Adams and Ann McNaughton, whose comments were both relevant and well presented.

Although a motion to remove Black & Gold from participation in Freshman Orientation was defeated by the Executive Council, this is not meant to be taken as an approval of their actions in orientation. It is hoped that many valid suggestions will be presented at the ASCC meeting on Monday as to the overall goals of the Freshman Orientation Week and as to the functions of Black & Gold and Tiger Club in the efficient handling of this program. It is obvious to all of those on campus (or at least it should be) that the Freshman Orientation program is not particularly carrying out any goal at this time and possibly if these goals can be defined, the functions of the pep organizations will be more useful.

We of the Executive Council hope that next week's meeting will be well attended and that especially freshmen will be able to offer some suggestions as to how an effective program might be carried out in the future. This incident has not been completely resolved.

Other ASCC news is in the form of reminders to the freshman and junior classes to watch for class elections, and for all of those organizations wishing financial benefits for the coming year to fill out the financial requests available at the Rastall desk.

It seems pertinent to congratulate the sophomore class on winning the Freshman-Sophomore Fight—certainly not an annual event.

Respectfully submitted,

Karen Melville

LETTERS to the EDITOR

Dear Editor and Members of the College Community:

Last Wednesday evening, September 11, a group of upperclassmen carried out a special "hazing program" involving a number of freshmen, men and women. This project, involving throwing eggs, shaving cream, and various other substances on freshmen women and shaving of freshmen men's heads, was thoroughly uncalled for and, for many of us, something of a disgrace for the whole student body.

In view of the fact that Jim Lucey, chairman of Freshman Orientation, had made it very clear to the members of Black & Gold that the week's program would be restricted to questions from the Freshman Answers and the wearing of beanies and name tags, it is the feeling of this group that those Black & Gold members involved in "hazing" have illustrated to us that as far as Black & Gold has no place in the Freshman Week program. Of course there were other people involved and the whole incident cannot be laid at the feet of one organization. However, it is our feeling that the mere fact that Black & Gold members did not try to stop such activity was as much in violation of their agreement with the ASCC Enthusiasm Committee as if they had been solely responsible for it.

When such hazing is carried to an extreme where girls are carried out of the library and property is destroyed and some freshmen are actually frightened, then it is time to take a good long look. As a pep organization, Black & Gold really has no place in the week's program and the job of orientation and indoctrination ought, logically, to be carried out by organizations of student government, mainly the ASCC.

Each year such events take place in one way or another and bodies of student government discuss them and become enraged and then forget about them. Well, we have discussed this and been angered by it and now we wish to suggest that any part of Freshman Week activities previously handled by Black & Gold be transferred to some other body more suited to the task. We would also like to make public our support of the ASCC in any action they might take to further this end so that in the future this week's activities will not include any such special "hazing projects." Sincerely, Jean Torcom, president, AWS, for the Judicial Board of the Associated Women Students.

To The Editor:

During the past week Black & Gold has been the subject of severe criticism, the most vocal complaint being that the organization acted completely out of order during freshman orientation. In the ASCC meeting Monday, a motion was made to forbid Black & Gold the right to participate in freshman week next year. Since the Black & Gold is freshman week on this campus, the passage of this suggestion would have resulted in the discontinuance of this aspect of campus life.

Although the motion was defeated, the question has not yet been resolved. Do we as students of campus feel that there is a need for an organization of this type, one that is designed to harass (there's simply no getting around that word) freshmen for a week at the beginning of the year and then promote whatever spirit they can during the remaining nine months? Or is school spirit on this campus, as on other campuses, a thing of the past and not applicable to today's "new breed" of College students? Are the ideas that this organization tries to promote inconsistent with the intellectual atmosphere of this college?

I do not pretend to know the answers to these questions. I realize with some regret that the situation has changed since I came to college three years ago. Black & Gold acted in the same way this year as they did then, but this year the freshmen reacted differently.

They were outraged that they should be subjected to such indignities as happened last Wednesday night, and instead of banding together as a united class to retaliate, they used the principle of passive resistance. They threw away their identity (i.e. name tags and dinks) and became an incongruous mass of individuals.

I was glad that the freshman-sophomore fight turned out the way it did. It seemed only fitting that this should be the year that the frosh lost. I feel no qualms about taking full responsibility for what happened Wednesday night. Although there were several unfortunate incidents, everything went off basically the way we had planned. For the remainder of the year, we intend to promote school spirit in every way possible, and we hope for better response from the student body as a whole than we have had in the past. John Barker, president of Black & Gold.

Dear Editor:

I deeply regret that the members of the ASCC Executive Council can be swayed by a threat. This, however, is exactly what happened at the ASCC meeting on Monday afternoon. A motion to exclude the members of Black & Gold from participation in Freshman Week in 1964 and until the time that they could take part constructively in orientation was voted down simply because of a threat issued by the president of Black & Gold. John Barker stated that his organization was based on its function in Freshman Week, and that without this function it would have no reason to exist.

The motion was presented as an attempt to motivate Black & Gold to do something constructive. However, Mr. Barker stated in effect that his organization would not be willing to work with the Enthusiasm Committee to find a way for Black & Gold to maintain its status as an organization which "attempts to maintain spirit and tradition at CC."

Mr. Barker asked how we could manage to conduct orientation without Black & Gold. The members of ASCC seemed to feel that they could not find a way, but might I suggest that several responsible organizations which could assume the responsibility for the week without threat of violence or injury. If Black and Gold is not willing to assume this responsibility, and it is evident that it is not, the existence of the organization should be brought into serious question. — Jo Heller.

Dear Editor:

The freshman girl who wrote the article last week concerning agitation was, I'm sure, acting according to her own best belief when she holds to be correct. They're not, according to me.

This young lady, fresh from high school, does not realize that reality is sometimes different from theory. The College Handbook this year I thought gave a pretty accurate picture of what CC is like. I hate to play the part of an iconoclast, but CC is little more than clusters of 18-year-old kids solving the problems of the world, the first week of school.

Unfortunately, my dear college people do not spend the summer curled up with Aristotle or Plato. They undoubtedly do read during the summer, but the material is more likely to be on the plane of Milo 18, Dr. No, or Never Trust a Naked Bus Driver, hardly something to sit around the conference table with for a week.

Here freshmen must realize that college is much more than books and studying. It's development as a person. If school were only study why don't you get a reading list from the college, go home, read the books and do yourself $2,000 a year. School is people, the world is people, and school is a good place to get to know them, understand them, and learn to get along with them because they're going to spend a lifetime with them.

This brings us to agitation. You think debates are going to unify your class, you're going to learn. (This was obvious to me. I read your article, and you got a lot of fun for both the freshmen and the upperclassmen. The freshmen are too naive to be so stupidly naive it really is funny. People are going to study habits whether there is a hazing or not. Do you really think that everyone who participated in hazing will flunk out seriously doubt it.

The thing you have to realize is that CC is not made up of just freshman intellectuals, and you're not going to get the freshmen men have not yet adjusted to learn and that is what an intellectual is: one who knows how to learn. College can teach you how to learn: whether you do or not is up to you.

You ought to realize the fact that CC is made up of the brightest kids from every walk of life who not only like to learn but also like to have a good time. Around here we are not that thetic, that sophisticated, or that intellectual. We're just a healthy school spirit is out of the matter what image the administration tries to portray. All we can say is don't bitch; transfer! — Bob Halsband.

Dear Editor:

Speaking as a freshman girl who would like to say the following concerning Freshman Orientation Week:

Most freshmen anticipate, when they come to college a certain amount of hazing. Hazing is justifying because it is a means of unifying the freshmen, of meeting fellow students and of having, in an ordinary circumstance, a bit of fun.

At CC, hazing is, to say the least, totally different from anything expected. It is one of the most poorly-planned and badly-organized activities on campus. Two organizations, the Black and Gold, and the Tiger Club, were apparently to have done the bulk of the planning and hazing. The Tiger Club made its presence felt at no time during the week, and the Black and Gold, with the exception of Wednesday night, was in evidence about 10 strong, once or twice Monday and Tuesday. On Wednesday night, hazing not only lived up to the wildest of freshman expectations, but it also went far beyond the point of desirability.

In an attempt to explain shenanigans, ruined dresses, and physical injury, John Barker stated that he was only attempting to arouse a little unity and spirit in a class which he considered snobbish and totally lacking in the proper attitude toward freshman orientation. That, thanks to a nearly total absence of hazing in any form prior to Wednesday night, the freshman class had no reason to be spirited or unified, never occurred to him or to the Black and Gold.

If a concerted hazing program of one questioning over the situation called "Freshman Answers" and minor harassment had been carried on during the entire week by the upper classes as a whole, the freshman class would have responded with more than sufficient unity and spirit to completely eliminate the need for hazing. Wednesday night's caliber of hazing, according to John Barker, freshman orientation is the function of Black and Gold and the responsibility would seem to rest with that organization to develop and control a constructive and beneficial freshman orientation program. Unless Black and Gold can do this, its existence on campus would seem to be unjustified. If less some organization of the existence of Freshman Orientation Week is unqualified.

The Editorial board of the Tiger wishes to declare its disapproval of the recent activities of the Black and Gold. We believe that Colorado College no longer needs juvenile hazing as a means of orientating its Freshmen. This year the Black and Gold has been more negative in its approach than had been the case in the recent past. It has shown the Freshmen what we believe to be some of the worst aspects of the college in their first weeks, disillusioning and possibly discouraging these incoming students.

We doubt any useful function can be given to the Black and Gold as it now stands, and we believe this group should be abolished unless some different definition of its goals are found from those that were manifested last week.

Besides the simple question of the propriety of Black and Gold's actions of Wednesday, Sept. 11, the discussion which took place in last Monday's ASCC meeting raises several additional questions.

There can be little question as to the pure facts of the case. Black and Gold willfully and blatantly disregarded the policies established for the conduct of Orientation Week, policies in which they had previously concurred. In doing so, the organization acted in open defiance of ASCC.

When John Barker, president of Black and Gold, began his defense at the Monday meeting, he introduced a number of more basic issues. Mr. Barker asserted that his organization's action came as the result of their failure to induce any sort of class unity in the "snotty" Class of 1967, which actually acted, he said, like a bunch of individuals. In a last desperate attempt to force the freshmen to unite, if only in their hatred for Black and Gold, the organization decided to take what it considered the necessary steps.

We would question the validity of Mr. Barker's, and Black and Gold's, assumption that freshman class unity is automatically and unquestionably a desirable end, by which any means may be justified. There is no reason to assume that class unity, which Black and Gold seems to equate with homogeneity, is the overriding goal of Orientation Week.

It is our belief that this week should be devoted to aiding freshmen in becoming better acquainted with the campus, with the faculty and administration, and with their fellow students. To this end we believe it possible for orientation to serve a positive function. The beanies and name tags can and should serve a useful purpose in identifying those who are NOT YET a viable and functioning part of the college community, but who are attempting to know more of the new environment in which they find themselves. This effort to know the college and to know the other members of the community into which they have been thrust is the effort which should be facilitated by Orientation Week.

Mr. Barker asserted Monday that Orientation Week is Black and Gold, that there is no other reason for the existence of the organization. He also insisted that Black and Gold was the only body of students attempting to carry out the prescribed orientation procedure. If this is a moderately valid statement — and we believe that, unfortunately, it is — it is a sad commentary on both Black and Gold and on the conduct of Orientation Week.

If the men's enthusiasm organization is able to do no more than rouse itself from a year-long torpor in the early autumn, harass new students for a single week, presumably with unbounded enthusiasm, then sink languorously back into hibernation, we would join in seriously questioning, as seems to be the fashion, its justification on this campus.

The second portion of Mr. Barker's statement, that Black and Gold alone displayed any interest in orienting the freshmen in any way, raises the possibility that the apathy of the students themselves could be the decisive factor in rendering Orientation Week a useless effort. Refusal by a significant segment of the student body to participate in the freshmen's efforts to become acquainted with their fellows and with their college can only impair that effort and prompt as a substitute the essentially negative hazing activities which have aroused such a storm of protest.

Dear Editor:

The major points so well expressed in Miss Davies' article concerning the college image in the eyes of freshmen are points which the freshman class hereby ratifies. The campus scene described in the article and certainly those occurring outside to the paper's deadline, provide a most uncomplimentary picture of our college. Miss Davies may well have overstated her case, however, in implying that such occurrences as beer busts and the Sophomore Fight are incongruous in a campus scene. I am primarily concerned with "intellectual discipline." I would contend that our college is not thereby concerned solely with promoting intellectualism. When I joined the college last fall, I was extremely pleased to find, as I had earlier given cause to believe, that a majority of the student body possessed a true intellectual approach to education, not the pious, bigoted "high school intellectualism" which too few of our more outspoken upperclassmen have outgrown, but a mature approach which recognizes both the potential and the limitations of the human mind, both the divine and the human, in the student body of Colorado College and its faculty.

The evils of a free community in its excesses, not in its restraint, as a student in this community, I should no more be required to live constantly under the pressure of objective, syllogistic argument than under the threat of being shaven bald on the whim of some upperclassman. My college is one of the beer busts, the Black & Gold, the annual Symposium, and the "holy trinity" of Dr. Hachman. I have nothing but scorn for anyone who would equate education with intellectualism, or any other such limiting concept, and therefore take away my freedom to partake of any, all, or none of the special opportunities presently offered to me as a student of Colorado College. — C. Bradley Schlarf

Dear Editor:

Miss Davies, don't you understand that we the students of CC are just a bunch of kids gathered here to HAVE FUN? Don't you realize that all the intellectual propaganda echoing down from the faculty and the administration is a big hoax? And, finally, don't you realize that such phenomena as faculty lectures and Symposium Week are attended mostly by graduate students, friends of faculty, and beatniks? Symposium helps project a respectable image to the outside world and thus protects the immature and unsophisticated student body we really have. It's not for real. At least this is the opinion of some people here.

I am afraid, Miss Davies, that this is NOT the "Harvard of the West." In reality, CC student life revolves around an anti-intellectual indifference to the refined and cultured. Although no college ever lives up to its ideals, I am afraid the last fraternity beer bust has a greater place in people's lives here than The Iliad. The serious student, the questioner, the thinker are potential social outcasts at CC if they don't watch their manners. The type of student pictured in the catalog, the type who takes his education "seriously," is mostly a myth. My advice to you is to be patient and shut up, go elsewhere, or, if you have the courage, try and change CC.

People like you may someday be in the majority here, to the disgust of most, but to the delight of a few. One of the encouraging things about this place is that it is not static, and not smothered in tradition. You do not have to take CC as you find it. Although this is not the "Harvard of the West," we have every right to try and make it so, with the full support of the faculty and most of the administration.

Gateley on Conflict Math

Last night Dr. Wilson Gateley addressed the college community in the second of the fall faculty lecture series. His topic was "Mathematics of Conflict."

Mathematics of conflict was developed to make elementary explanations of the theory of games. When practically applied, a model of the conflict situation is obtained. This includes all possible strategies of the participants. Once the strategies are determined the game is decided. The object of the mathematics is to select the best strategy for the participants to choose.

The ultimate applications of this branch of mathematics are extremely broad. It was originally developed to be used for economic analysis, but has since found extensive use by the military for logistical planning. Applications in elementary gambling games are also most apparent.

The development to date has been limited to very specific cases. Game theory cannot be used to accurately determine strategies for games involving more than two participants or games in which the gain or one does not equal the loss of the other. The usefulness of mathematics of conflict will be determined by the ability of mathematicians to extend their theories beyond the more trivial cases with which they now can deal.

Dr. Gateley's lecture was the second in a series on the general theme of "conflict."

Thursday, Sept. 26, Dr. Paul T. Bechtel of the department of economics and business administration, will present the third and final lecture of the series on "The Collective Bargaining Crisis."

Hockey Coach Outlines Plans For '63-'64 CC Hockey Play

By Terry Winograd

The second in our series of interviews is a discussion with Bob Johnson, the new CC hockey coach. The statements are not direct quotes, but a paraphrase of his ideas.

Q—What changes will be made this year when you take over the coaching job?

A—There are a few changes which should make this a very interesting season. One of the biggest is our new rink. The team will do 90 per cent of its practice here instead of at the Broadmoor. We'll have more ice time for practice than any other CC team has ever had.

Also, I'll be coaching both the varsity and the freshman team myself. This is very important because it saves having to train them over again the second year. Our schedule this year includes some teams we've never played before. In addition to being the only team in the WCHA to play everyone else in the league, we have games with Ohio University, Ohio State, Colgate and Brown. We start the season with two games against the United States Olympic team. I think we have the best collegiate schedule in the nation.

Q—Just how strong is the WCHA this year?

A—Our league is the strongest it's ever been. It's the toughest league in this country. No Eastern team has won the NCAA championship for ten years. Denver and North Dakota are the two top teams and they're almost the caliber of some professional teams.

Q—What are our chances this year?

A—We were hurt more by graduation than any other team last year. Defense is our first problem, and I plan to concentrate on it. Our main difficulty will be inexperience, but we have a real good bunch of new men, and I think we're going to surprise a lot of people. We're shooting for the playoffs, and I have a lot of confidence in these young boys. With student support like we've had lately, we'll go a long way.

Q—What do you think of the charges against American teams importing Canadians who are practically professionals?

A—I think that a lot of this is a personal feud between coaches, and I don't want to get in to it. I believe that we should find a mean somewhere between the extreme stands. We shouldn't discriminate against Canadians, but I don't want a Canadian dominated team either. The thing I'd really like is to get up some interest in this area. It would be great to get a few Colorado Springs boys on the team. The good American hockey player can compete in this league and this should be emphasized. There's no easy solution to the problem, but a lot of other schools are thinking along the same lines that we are.

Q—Is there any truth in the accusation that hockey players are really paid professional athletes? What is the standing of hockey scholarships at CC?

A—Some coaches try to play hockey on a professional level. Denver is playing mostly pro and semi-pro teams this year. We definitely don't believe in this kind of hockey. When a boy comes to CC it's to get an education—not primarily to be a hockey player. If hockey can help him to get an education, then I'm happy that it's serving its purpose. Our players have to pass the same admission requirements as everyone else and meet the same academic standards. If they don't, out they go.

There are only two schools in this area with any inter-collegiate hockey program, so to keep up a team we have to compete on a big-time basis. We can't do this without scholarships. But we don't believe in free rides for everyone like some schools give. The scholarships are based on need. This year

Law School Examination Given Thruout Nation

The Law School Admission Test, required of candidates for admission to most American Law Schools, will be given at more than 100 centers throughout the nation on November 9, 1963, February 8, 1964, and April 18, 1964, and August 1, 1964. The test, which is administered by the Educational Testing Service, was taken last year by more than 30,000 candidates whose scores were sent to over 100 law schools.

ETS advises candidates to make separate application to each law school of their choice, and to ascertain from each whether it requires the Law School Admission Test. Since many law schools select their freshman classes in the spring preceding entrance, candidates for admission to next year's classes are advised to take either the November or the February test.

A bulletin of information should be obtained six weeks before the test date from: Law School Admission Test, Educational Testing Service, Princeton, N. J.

Campus information is available from Professor J. Douglas Metz, Pre-Law Advisor, Peabody 203.

Marines Recruiting

The Marine Corps Officer Selection Team from Denver, Colorado, will be in Rastall Center from 9:00 a.m. to 4:00 p.m. September 23 and 24 to interview students interested in becoming commissioned officers in the United States Marine Corps.

Debate Club

The Debate Club had a meeting Thursday, September 12. There were a total of twenty-six in attendance. The topic for the 1963-1964 season is "Resolved, that the federal government should guarantee to all qualified high school graduates an opportunity for higher education."

The Debate Club urges anyone who has had any experience in debate or in individual speaking events to attend their next meeting on Tuesday, September 24, at 7 p.m. Any questions about the program may be directed either to Dave Helms, Pres., or Jo Heller, Secretary.

'The Fire Next Time'

Professors Hochman and Ross Present Theme Of James Baldwin's Recent Best Selling Book

By Terry Fonville

Professors William Hochman and Thomas Ross attempted to present the power, the beauty, and the essence of the themes of James Baldwin's essay, "Letter from a Region in My Mind" last Sunday evening, September 15, in a meeting sponsored by the Religious Affairs Committee in the WES room of Rastall Center. The essay appeared first in the New Yorker magazine of November 17, 1962, and later as the second of two essays which appeared in Baldwin's recent best seller The Fire Next Time.

Professor Hochman started the discussion by giving the audience a summary of the contents of the essay. His talk centered around four aspects of the essay which he felt were responsible for the intense reaction, the shock with which the essay had been received by a large majority of the public and especially our college community.

The first of Professor Hochman's comments concerned Baldwin's description of the Negro's dilemma in growing up in America. The almost traumatic effect on the young Negro of his sudden awareness of his plight—his awareness of some crime he has committed, the nature of which he knows not—his realization that he must employ some "gimmick" in order to maintain his identity, his individuality, to achieve his liberty, his authority, and sometimes merely to survive in the face of a hostile world. Professor Hochman, speaking as a liberal on the subject of racial problems in this country, expressed the view that his own understanding seemed after reading this portion of the essay superficial and abstract.

The second aspect of the essay which in Professor Hochman's view in deserved concern was Baldwin's attitude toward the progress already made by the nation in the area of civil rights. Baldwin through his essay dealt a blow to the optimism which many white liberals felt after World War II and after the Supreme Court decision of 1954 outlawing segregation.

Baldwin tells us that during World War II the optimism of the American Negro dimmed. When the Negro saw, for instance, that he was accorded more dignity in a foreign land than in America, his concept of home changed and some of his respect for the white people of this country was lost. The Supreme Court decision of 1954, says Baldwin, was motivated by necessity which arose out of the crisis of the Cold War and as a result of the emergence of the African nations. It was purely a political move; if sprung from any motives of "love and justice the 1954 decision would surely have occurred sooner; were it not for the realities of power in this difficult era, it might very well not have occurred yet."

Thus Baldwin attacks our political motives in civil rights in this essay as he has attacked "gradualism" in an essay on "Faulkner and Desegregation" in his best selling book of a few years ago Nobody Knows My Name. Here, too, his message, his warning, his appeal to the country were urgent: "There is never time in the future in which we will work out our salvation. The challenge is in the moment, the time is always now."

The third and fourth aspects which Professor Hochman mentioned are perhaps the most original and most essential parts of the essay. They concern Baldwin's attack on the attitude of the white liberal toward integration and acceptance of the Negro into American society and his indictment of the white civilization. He attacks the arrogant view held by many people that Negroes must change in order to become fully accepted into all aspects of American life—that they must be made equal in terms of the values and standards of the American culture—that they must be made white.

On the contrary, says Baldwin, the Negro has developed a spiritual beauty which is one of the results of his historical tragedy. "The past, the Negro's past, of rope, fire, torture, castration, infanticide, rape; death and humiliation; fear by day and night, fear as deep as the marrow of the bone; doubt that he was worthy of life, since everyone around him denied it; sorrow for his women, for his kinfolk, for his children, who needed his protection, and whom he could not protect . . . this past, this endless struggle to achieve and reveal and confirm a human identity, human authority, yet contains, for all its horror, something very beautiful."

This beauty, says Baldwin, is found in the qualities of patience, understanding, compassion and love—qualities which the Negro has found through years of suffering and despair. Baldwin feels that these four hundred years of pain have raised the Negro to a higher spiritual and moral level in many respects than the white culture has attained; it has produced a nobility, an aristocracy.

In examining the state of the political, social, and moral affairs of the nation, Baldwin has concluded that America has been and is in the eyes of many of the peoples of the world, "an unmitigated disaster." Unless we can put an end to our attitude of indifference and indecision by bringing spiritual and moral beauty back into our lives, then, he says, we are all lost to "sterility and decay." In this age of revolution, Baldwin sees the American Negro as the key figure in the rebirth or transformation of our values, and the American nations has been given an extraordinary opportunity to achieve, and show the world the validity of the American dream. Civilization can only be saved, he says in essence, by a creative act, an act of faith, an act of love which is the "unconditional freedom of the Negro . . . and at no matter what psychic or social risk"—thus the title, The Fire Next Time.

Professor Ross followed Professor Hochman's presentation with a brief discussion of Baldwin's style in the essay. Professor Ross compared Baldwin's writing to the styles of Sir Thomas Brown and Lincoln. He also discussed Baldwin's use of irony and paradox, humor, hyperbole, image, etc.

The topic was then opened for questions from the audience. Unfortunately this period was all too short and rather unproductive. One reason for this, I feel, is that the majority of the people came to the meeting expecting a somewhat different approach to the topic. Certainly those who had read Baldwin were anxious to hear his theories presented and the essay analyzed as to their strengths, weaknesses, and applications; perhaps a comparison with his earlier writings, or with other authors who have dealt with the same material. These people were certainly frustrated with mere presentation of the content and style. It was obvious, however that the intentions of the professors was to introduce their audience to the passion, the eloquence, and the loftiness of Baldwin's writing and felt that their approach was justified.

However, this intention perhaps could have been carried more simply by reading, in its entirety, the very short, but highly dramatic and almost tear-stained "Letter to My Nephew on the One-Hundredth Anniversary of the Emancipation." This letter forms the first essay of the book. In it Baldwin uses essentially the same themes (in miniature) which are found in a more detailed version in the second longer essay and he again uses bitter, cruel, and burning language as a vehicle to convey his message of love and compassion to those who hate him.

This method would have given the unity and the foundation and the time for a more lengthy and intelligent exchange of ideas and opinions.

CC Experiments with Two Language Houses

This article is a continuation of the discussion on language houses that was begun in last week's issue under the misheading of "CC Experiments with Two Language Houses". CC HAS been experimenting with two language houses, however only one of them was mentioned in said article—as was pointed out to me several times—and rather than try to explain all the inconsistencies that led to this mistake, we shall rather be consistent in our inconsistencies and run this portion of the discussion under the same heading

By Caroline Creyke

La Maison Francaise (alias Montgomery Hall) is being run during the current academic year, but on a different basis than was the summer school Das Deutsche Haus. The residents of La Maison are required to speak French only when in the house itself. There are, however, four exceptions to this. English may be spoken during private conversations with the non-French speaking house-mother and night matron, over the telephone, with members of the student's family (who are permitted in the girls' rooms), and with dates in the north and south lounges.

Owing to Colorado College dormitory policy, the residents of La Maison are all girls. The French department would like to be able to run a dorm as a coed one, but this does not seem probable within the near future. However, they do plan to employ a French speaking head resident within the next few years.

Unlike Das Deutsche Haus, La Maison Francaise is entirely student run—subject of course to Colorado College dorm policy. In fact, the original idea for La Maison came from the students themselves. They have set up not a combination classroom-living quarters where one eats, sleeps, and breathes the language (this type of situation was excellent for the summer session where only a limited number of semester hours can be taken), but rather simply a living situation in order to achieve fluent usage of the French language.

The results of this house are, naturally, rather indefinite, but very favorable according to several residents of La Maison. The rules are being adhered to, and already these girls feel that conversational French comes more easily to them.

I would hope that the other language departments might be able to run similar programs during both the regular academic year and the summer session, and also that the two departments already involved might extend their programs through both sessions.

Roundup a Success

The Flying W Ranch Roundup last Saturday sponsored by Rastall Center featured a chuckwagon supper. The food was delicious and avidly devoured by all in the Western setting. The quartet of wrangler entertainers were talented and fun, perhaps to the surprise of some. Sy's soliloquys and Dan's extraordinary voice range were particularly noteworthy.

Approximately 270 freshmen and 50 upperclassmen attended Round-Up. With such apparent success Walt Hecox, chairman of the Rastall Center Board, anxious to hear the reactions of those who attended. It is hoped that this will become an annual affair.

Panhellenic

In order to eliminate any further confusion, Panhellenic Council is presenting Rush Rules for 1963-64.

Freshman women may not go into sorority lodges except on occasions designated by Panhellenic.

2. Sorority members may not go into a freshman woman's room, except on occasions designated by Panhellenic. Excepted from this are upperclass women living in a freshman dorm, who may visit freshmen in that dorm. Panhellenic will grant special permission to sisters upon request.

3. Sorority women will avoid unusual or unnecessary expenditures on freshman or unaffiliated women.

Violations of these rules will be taken before Panhellenic. Please play close attention to the rules, as a warning has already been issued by Panhellenic Council.

Kappa Alpha Theta

First of all, we would like to welcome formally our new house-mother, Mrs. Gordon. Thank you so much for all you have done for us already. We are looking forward to a wonderful year.

Theta "daddies" kicked the year off in fine form this year when we were challenged to a push-ball game by the upperclass unaffiliates. Unfortunately we lost, by a whopping three goals, but we enjoyed the game very much and everyone had a good time. There were quite a few interested onlookers, too.

Last Saturday afternoon the whole chapter went up to Columbine Lodge in Green Mountain Falls for a retreat and workshop. It was nice to get away from campus for a while and be up in the mountains doing some talking about the coming year. We were all able to become reacquainted after a summer full of various activities.

Alpha Phi

Sunday, Sept. 15, the Alpha Phi held a surprise open house in honor of their new housemother, Mrs. Lewis. Refreshments were provided by the local alumni, and the afternoon was enjoyed by all.

Tuesday, Sept. 17, we will challenge Bennis to a kick-ball game at 4:15. Good luck girls!

On Sunday, Sept. 22, a dessert and games night will be held with the Phi Deltas.

Beta Theta Pi

The Betas praise brother Newell "Barber of La Jolla" Bossart for his noble effort to give the freshman class the advantage in the Fresh-Soph Fight of last Saturday morning. The "Barber's" scheme was to make several members of the freshman attack division more agile by alleviating them of excess cranial weight.

We are sorry to report, however, that his actions were misunderstood by other freshmen who, not realizing their advantage, counter-attacked a member of the sophomore class. This was a mistake all '67 now regrets.

treated the Phis to an honest-to-gosh picnic, the first of its kind in campus history. It was the first dry day in weeks, and nary a drop was in sight.

After last year's climatic opening of our redecorated basement the campus will again be treated to a touch of artistry and imagination. An open house is projected for the near future for the expressed purpose of unveiling to the college community our new matching, multi-hued (argent, azure, puce, and serbere) matching washer and dryer. (Bring your dirty clothes and soiled linens.) Punch will be served, brewed from the last cycle of rinse water to demonstrate the efficiency of the previous cycles.

We extend a hearty welcome and congratulations to our new pledge, Dave Olney.

Sigma Chi

Last Sunday, the Sigma Chi's initiated 12 new actives. They are Brothers Steven Ebert, David Peterson, John Prouty, David Walfield, Bob James, Page Whyte, Henry Fleming, Steven Kopesky, Bob Grant, Sherman Malkerson, James Lacey, Robert Kief, and Greg Young. Over the summer, Mike Isfeld was named to Leslie Eckert of the Alpha Phi house. Today is the Sigma Chi Watermelon Bust, to which everyone is invited.

Delta Gamma

Last Sunday, we had our annual fall retreat at the Paint Pony Country Club where we played pool and bridge, learned new songs, caught up on each other's summer vacations, and had dinner. Our sophomores were honored by the alumni at a dessert Tuesday and the Phi Deltas have invited us to a "picnic" before tomorrow night's game.

Best wishes go to Duffie Buffum and John Collins and to Marla Bullock and Skip Kowars — both couples became engaged this summer.

Phi Gamma Delta

Despite our omission from last week's column, the men of Phi Gamma Delta are still alive and functioning as an organized entity on campus. The year began with our president, Don Bradbury, still recovering from an auto accident in Germany and treasurer Jim Schultz filling in. The "picnic" we had last Saturday was thus a fairly gloomy event to be planning until Don came rolling in that morning. By the end of the day it was evident that none of last year's spirit had left us and we were again occupying our deservedly congu position on campus.

Congratulations are in order for Lee Muller, Pete Davis, Slick Ware, Rick Carroll, and Cubby Welch, who are playing football this year, and for Ron Taylor who is now in Holland as the CC foreign exchange student.

Tult Changes Policy For Overdue Books

Tult Library is announcing a new policy on overdue books. Contrary to popular opinion, librarians do not enjoy "book keeping" but despair of the time put into this service and would prefer that this time be used in more worthwhile ways.

The responsibility for returning books or renewing them when they are due is primarily that of the borrower and not the librarian. Therefore, the library will no longer send out a series of reminder notices for two-week books that are overdue. Instead, after a reasonable length of time a single notice will be sent requesting that the overdue book be returned within three days or a $5.00 fine plus the cost of the book and a processing fee will be charged to the borrower. If the book has actually been lost the $5.00 fine may be avoided by reporting the book lost within three days.

It will be the responsibility of the borrower to see that the library has a correct mailing address for him.

Oskasita Wants You!

Are you crazy, just crazy about horses? Do you like to ride although you don't know the head from the tail? Would you like to be in a mounted drill team? Or take part in a gymkhana and play games on horseback (such as barrel racing and musical chairs)? Would you like to find out more about a certain breed by visiting horse ranches?

If your answer even approaches the affirmative, then OSKASITA WANTS YOU! We ride, at Austin Bluffs or at the Broadmoor, and breakfast and supper rides are being planned for this year. We form a drill team and participate in the gymkhana which is held every spring. We visit ranches such as Betts Circle 2 Arabian ranch.

If you missed the first meeting on Tuesday, there will be others, so come. Notice will be posted on the Rastall bulletin board. If you are interested but can't come to the meetings call Ann Peters, extension 396.

Sorority Open House

On Monday evening, September 23, there will be an open-house tour of the five sororities, for all interested upperclass women, foreign students, and transfers.

All women interested in sororities should plan to attend. Miss Roberts, advisor to Panhellenic Council, and representatives from Panhellenic will meet with those interested at 7:00 p.m. Monday night in Loomis lobby. Miss Roberts will then take the group to each house for a short period of time. Registration before the tour is not necessary.

ONCE MORE UNTO THE BREACH, DEAR FRIENDS

Today I begin my tenth year of writing this column in your campus newspaper. Ten years is a long time; it is, in fact, what some scholarly people like to call a decade—from the Latin word decem, meaning the floor of a ship. It is, to my mind, remarkable that the Romans had such a word as decem when you consider that ships did not exist until 1620 when John Alden invented the Mayflower. Alden, a prodigiously ingenious man, also invented the earlobe and Pouchontas.

Ships were a very popular mode of travel—especially over water—until 1912 when the Swede, Ivar Krueger, invented the iceberg. Krueger also invented the match, which is a good thing, because without the match, how would you light your Marlboro Cigarettes? I cannot overstate the importance of lighting your Marlboro Cigarettes, for Marlboro Cigarettes, unlighted, provide, at best, only limited smoking pleasure.

You might even call it the Limp or Spongy sell

I mention Marlboros because this column is an advertisement, brought to you through the school year by the makers of Marlboros. Marlboros come in soft pack or Flip-Top box. The makers of Marlboros come in dark suits with thin lapels—except on weekends when they come in yoke-neck jerseys and white duck trousers. White ducks come in flocks. They are primarily fresh water dwellers, although they have been successfully raised in salt water too. Another salt water denizen I'm sure you will find enjoyable is plankton—a mess of tiny organisms like diatoms and algae and like that which float sluggishly near the surface of the sea. It is ironic that these creatures, microscopic in size, should supply the principal source of food for the earth's largest animal, the whale. Whales, I must say, are not at all pleased with this arrangement, because it takes the average whale, eating steadily, 48 hours to gather a day's meal. This leaves them almost no time for water sports or reading Melville. It is a lucky thing for all of us that whales are unaware they are mammals, not fish, and could, if they tried, live just as well on land as in water. I mean, you add ten or twelve million whales to our Sunday traffic and you would have congestion that makes the mind boggle.

But I digress. Today, I was saying, I begin my tenth year of writing this column for Marlboro Cigarettes in your campus newspaper. I will, in each column, say a few kind words about Marlboros—just as you will, once you try that fine tobacco flavor, that pristine white filter, that supple soft pack, that infrangible Flip-Top box. These references to Marlboro will be brief and unobtrusive, for I do not believe in the hard sell. What I favor is the soft sell—you might even call it the limp or spongy sell. I hasten to state that the makers of Marlboro in ten full years have not once complained about my desultory sales approach. Neither have they paid me.

But that is of small consequence. Aside from fleeting mentions of Marlboro, this column has another, and more urgent, mission: to cast the hot white light of free inquiry upon the vexing questions that trouble college America—questions like "Should the Student Council have the power to levy tariffs?" and "Are roommates sanitary?" and "Should housemothers be compelled to retire upon reaching the age of 26?"

Perhaps, reasoning together, we can find the answers. Perhaps not. But if we fail, let it never be said that it was for want of trying.

I thank you,

© 1963 Max Shulman

The makers of Marlboro are happy to bring you another year of Max Shulman's unpredictable and uncensored column—and also happy to bring you fine filtered Marlboros, available in pack or box, wherever cigarettes are sold in all 50 states.

By Bob Williams

Among the many improvement programs that have been installed at Colorado College during the past decade none have been more important than the revitalization and revision of the academic aspect of the college. One of the most significant academic improvements has been the inauguration of a number of all-college "extra-curricular academics", the most prominent of which is the Colorado College Symposium. Others include the three faculty lectures; the Roberts, Demarest-Lloyd, and Abbott Memorial Lectures; the all-college conference, and the Strong Memorial concert.

It would seem to me that these "extra-curricular academics" perform a major function on this campus, in that they challenge the individual to think on a broader plane than his day to day studies require. When one reflects on the addresses of such men as Dr. H. T. Muller, Karl Shipiro, Clinton Rossiter, Walter Roberts, and Allen Nivens, as well as many members of the CC faculty during the past few years; one cannot help but feel that one's academic experience at Colorado College have been greatly enriched. Unfortunately the success of these "extra-curricular academics" is being impaired, with respect to the student body, by the mechanical restrictions of daily academics.

Under the present system, a student who has one or more hour tests or a paper due on the day following one of the Memorial Lectures, for example, is literally not given the opportunity to attend. Because of the justifiable importance that is attached to all papers and hour tests, students find it impossible to attend these "extra-curricular academics" without indulging in what some students have termed "academic suicide."

I would therefore, like to propose that the faculty consider the idea of a voluntary self-imposed one day moratorium on all hour tests on the day after the following all-college events: The three faculty lectures, the three memorial lectures, the all-college conference, and the Memorial Concert. To be effective, this proposal must be accepted unanimously by the entire faculty. It would seem to me that by instituting this idea, the student body would at least have the opportunity to attend these most worthy events. After all, are not these "extra-curricular academics" primarily presented for benefit of Colorado College students? Whether or not a student does attend should be a personal decision, not an academic one. It is my opinion that student support of these all-college events would be greater if they were guaranteed the opportunity to attend.

I offer this proposal not as another means of providing academic procrastination, but rather as a measure which can add to the academic enrichment of those who attend CC. The problem at hand is one which only the faculty can accept or reject. I hope that they will consider it carefully, and with appropriate student support, accept it.

Professor Peterson Returns to CC

Professor Elmer R. Peterson of Colorado College French Department is back from Paris where he spent the summer doing research on the Dadaist and Surrealist movements.

Dadaism, Professor Peterson says, was a movement of protest against conventional art and morality. He felt that ideals were bankrupt, that the world responsible for World War I no longer had any right to take itself seriously. As a result, he began to fashion a non-art designed to force recognition of abnormal upon the world. They were not trying to find beauty.

Noting that the Beats in this country are "latter-day Dadaists," Professor Peterson thinks that there is a strong current of protest in art being created today in both France and the United States.

Dr. Peterson, who earned his Ph.D. at the University of Colorado, taught French for two years at the bit College before joining the faculty at Colorado College in 1961.

New Intramural Director Frasca Plans Highly Organized Program

Although only two weeks have passed since the initiation of this year's intramural program, early results would seem to indicate a successful year. Pushball, usually a sport which attracts low turnouts due to its violent nature, has been met with uncommon enthusiasm. Approximately 200 students from Slocum and the four other residential independent men's houses have participated thus far. Flag football will undoubtedly increase this year.

To handle the intramurals, the administration has appointed as director of the program Mr. Tony Frasca, former hockey coach. Such a move is an excellent one, as it places the responsibility of organizing away from the Greeks and the Slocum program director and places it under one head.

In accordance with the college's athletic philosophy, Frasca has designed, in his words, "a highly organized intramural program such that all members can be given deserved recognition." To this end, he has replaced touch football with flag football. To those who are not familiar with the game, it is similar to touch. The major difference is in the fact that players wear flags on their belts, and remove one of these flags constituting a tackle. This game, it is hoped, will end the childish arguments so common in touch. It will tend to make officiating easier, and the definite outlawing of holding should minimize the accidents that last year seemed a part of the touch program.

The program for flag football has also been revamped. Two leagues, the National and the American, will be created from the respective wings and independent houses. Each team within their league will play the other seven members once. The two top teams in each league will then meet to determine the league champion. Finally there will be a playoff between these two teams to select the league champion.

The fraternity program, however, will remain unchanged in this respect, and though unplanned at present it would be interesting to see a final playoff between these two champions.

Following flag football, golf and tennis will begin. Added importance has been given to the golf program with the announcement that the low medalists will be given an opportunity to try out for the varsity golf squad. To further promote interest, there will be both individual and team trophies.

Homecoming will again feature the cross-country race, and its reward for victory should entice many to participate. In the past years, even violent chain smokers had frequented the of Kachina lounge have been spurred on to great feats at this race.

After swimming, the hockey program will begin. Unfortunately, this program is limited at the moment to the fraternity league. It would nearly be impossible to find enough adequate skaters in the men's residence halls to make up two teams, the number needed to participate for intramural points. It might be added that practices of one hour will be scheduled, and specified equipment will be required to decrease the chance of injuries. Such equipment will be loaned out by the college before each game and practice. It is hoped that the present enthusiasm that has been exhibited

College Soccer Major Sport

By Sol Nkiwane

It is indeed gratifying to see that the administration has taken it upon itself to raise soccer to the status of a major sport this year. Admittedly, soccer players and soccer enthusiasts are still far too much in the minority, and yet the college has decided not to neglect them.

This has been due, in part, to the tremendous enthusiasm and performance shown by the concerned students in the past year. But, in the main, this has been made possible by the encouragement given by the administration and the Athletics Department to the young sport. In particular, the welcome and sufficient budget which has been allotted to soccer this year has gone a long way in ensuring a good start for the sport.

On the basis of last year's performance by the college soccer team in unofficial games, Colorado College has been accepted to join the Rocky Mountain Intercollegiate Soccer League, a different organization than the one from which we plan to withdraw. The 1963 schedule is as follows:

October 5 —
Mines, away, Saturday, 2 p. m.
October 11 —
Air Force Academy, home, Sat., 2 p. m.
October 20 —
CSU, away, Sunday, 2 p. m.
October 27 —
Wyo., home, Sunday, 1:30 p. m.
November 3 —
CU, away, Sunday, 2 p. m.
November 9 —
DU, home, Saturday, 2 p. m.

While we are all happy that soccer has received this attention and encouragement, we still have one or two problems with which to grapple. The first is that we do not have a suitable field for soccer, such a field would be used for soccer practices and scheduled games. Obviously, if the boys have to have all the necessary training — which is after all the prerequisite for satisfactory performance in the games, they will need a standard soccer field.

Closely connected with the necessity for a field is the training scheme for soccer. For the appropriate conditioning which the boys need, much cooperation from all concerned is invited, particularly in facilitating the boys' presence during practices. It takes much time, concentration and consistency to be really in good shape for any sport. To this end Intramural Director Tony Frasca has agreed to lend a hand in raising the conditioning level of the squad.

Despite the lack of an adequate field, the outlook for soccer is not a bleak one. The turn out has been excellent, large enough, in fact, to create a junior varsity team which will compete with the high school teams in our area. Such an addition is a valuable one, and will provide many of the boys with the experience needed to move into the varsity next year.

Most of last year's team will be returning and there are several new members both from the freshman and upper classes who are showing considerable promise. Thus the competition for many positions will be keen and many of last year's players will have to fight for their positions. This can only help us.

Last year's record was not as successful as we had wished, and the competition will increase this year now that we have joined the soccer conference. A high level of conditioning and determination will be required to compete adequately within this conference. If present friends are an indication of future results, these factors will be relieved.

Last, but not least, we invite all interested students to come along and sign up to make soccer a rewarding success. Specifically we invite all those who wish to learn the sport and we also invite those who wish to support us.

Hastings Downs Tigers 9-0

The Tiger football team departed for Hastings College on Friday, September 13th, with the hope that this date would bring luck, but the old superstition seemed to be of little help when the final gun signaled a 9-0 shutout by the Hastings Broncos.

Starting offensively, were Ends Lee Muller and Bill Jankowski, Tackles Bill Jacobson and Stan Lathrop, Guards Al Loosli and Harry Intemann and Center Jerry Johnson. The backfield had Chubby Welch at quarterback, Steve Mills a halfback, Steve Sabol at fullback and Cy Dyer at slotback. Defensively in this line, were Ends Ed DeGeorge and Jim Studholm, Tackles, Art Basham and Tom Foster, Guards Glen Clifford and Herman Whiton. The deep defensive men were Mike Mestak, Mike Denison, and Bob Stapp, and the linebackers alternated between Ron Jackson, Rajah Williams, Bob Otterstein, and Captain Loosli.

The first score did not come until the third period of the game, when the Broncos took the opening kickoff eighty yards for six points on halfback Dick Peterson's four yard left end sweep. Peterson also added the extra point on a straight drive.

The only other score came when center Art Basham, hindered by heavy padding on his bruised arms, snapped the ball over punter and fullback Steve Sabol's head. Sabol recovered the ball in the end zone, but was unable to run it out when Hermes tackled him behind the goal line for a safety.

The first half was dominated by tight play on the part of the defensive unit led by Rajah Williams and Captain Al Loosli. Hastings seemed to be unable to cope with the rapid and numerous amount of defensive shifting the CC line was doing which consequently broke down the Bronco line blocking.

Again in the second half the defensive play looked good, with several of the new freshmen moving into the line, but with CC's inability to maintain the football, the Tiger defensive stalwarts finally had to yield a score.

The offensive unit managed to put on several long drives with the power running of Steve Sabol and Steve Mills, but was not able to come up with big plays on most of the third down situations. Coach Jerry Cagle seemed to feel that if the Tigers had been able to get the football in midfield, instead of constantly starting from their twenty yard line, the final outcome might have been very different.

Despite the loss, the Tigers are still optimistic, in that Hastings was one of the larger and more experienced teams they will play this year. With a little offensive polish, and a few more breaks, the home opener with Nebraska Wesleyan should be a crowd pleaser.

Golf Program

The duties of the golf program have been changed from October 6 to October 3 and 4. Those people who have previous engagements, however, will be able to play their rounds at some other time. Be sure to notify Intramural Director Frasca of the conflict and date on which you will be able to play.

Amateur Radio

There will be a meeting Monday night, September 23, at 8 p. m. in the Slocum lounge, for all those interested in an Amateur Radio Club at CC.

Everyone is invited, whether male or female, novice or extra class.

The American Dream: Does It Belong Here

By Dee Wilson

"Something struck me right now, one of the things I wanted to know, and if I don't send this off, I'll forget it. What's it like to live in America these days? That's the question. I think, at least tonight I think what I mean, mean is, is it possible to have a small circle of friends, friends of grace and purpose, not incestuously, but on a basis of mutual respect, work and a kind of humorous, informal dignity in the United States?

The reason I'm asking is that I haven't found it possible, not for me. I am too opposed to what practically everyone I know is doing to their lives, not so much their jobs, but the way in which they are excusing away vacuousness and social irresponsibility and the way they don't give a damn for anything except their mortgages and babies."

—Clancy Sigal in Going Away

To me this passage documents the emptiness of the American Dream as it has become, which, as all college students know and most accept, is two cars in every garage, country club membership, ranch style home, i.e. consumption conspicuously and otherwise, for everyone. It is the "for everyone" that gives the American Dream whatever nobility it has. Of course practice does not conform to ideal (one-fourth of all Americans have an annual income of less than $4,000). For a majority of Americans, however, the years since 1945 have provided approximation of the Great Dream, the Promised Land, the affluent society. Now it is interesting to note that promised lands, once possessed, often resemble hell, and also interesting that what characterizes hell is not the heat but the boredom.

Clancy Sigal is indicating an indifferent generation, not a privileged one. The generation that grew up in the fifties is not one in which every individual searches alone for his salvation; rather, our way of life has been, and is, collective in nature, and, if it is true that we don't care much about what other people are feeling or suffering, we certainly care what other people think about us. Generally, we are a generation that just doesn't give a damn if there's salvation or not. Which I guess is logical; after all, we're in the Promised Land.

And in the Promised Land (promised by, among others, those High Priests of Industrialism, Adam Smith and Karl Marx) technology is treated as an end. As an end, it is being found empty by more and more of the true believers, though not by all to be sure. The discontent with the Promised Land shows itself in various ways: in a national self-consciousness, in a sensitivity toward what is lacking in American life that, in turn, makes most Americans take criticism of America very badly, in a desire to "get moving again" though there is no consensus as to where we ought to go. (The main trouble with President Kennedy is that he is a man of his times; no one, I think, he is willing to make someone, the "general will" or more, will tell him where to go. Otherwise he will drift.) The content shows itself in a dissonance that often finds its growth in beatniks, in widespread vandalism by teenagers "from best homes" defined as (rich or more), and in a conscious erasing of the habits and mannerings of the lower classes. Some of the discontent will be a real interest in teaching and in public service. But more and more it leads to a stronger commitment to the most obnoxious parts of the American Dream. An example of this is the rapid growth of right wing hate groups.

These responses are varied, yet they seem to have one common characteristic: they are means of going away. They are all rebellious; but a rebellion is not always conscious.

A question arises to me: what makes the American Dream empty? Why is the use of technology as an end not adequate for meaningful life? Perhaps the Frisker's definition of technology gives some hint, "the art of arranging the world that we have to experience it." Expecting the world is often painful and rarely boring. Technology is rarely painful and often boring. The idiot box is the soma of our new world. Popular movies furnish "entertainment" which people doze while awake, the fact of death affects life very little; we are all too busy counting going and doing to think of it when it hits close to home. We are always funeral homes for those satirized in The Loved Ones. Few feel guilt because of other people's suffering; the world's technology makes does not do much for sensitized people. Sensitivity to suffering causes discontent. Suffering goes on apart from technological world; no worry there is plenty of soma. And we enjoy all this and heaven too, technology mainly by means of the (organization) produces "nice" who are (as alike and painful) in different sections of the Promised Land. The use of Technology as an end has become a way of awarding the hard facts of existence. People seek euphoria, indulgence (as an end), which technological world metaphors speaking is a way of dying. I'm all a dead generation, I'd rather be lost. Goodbye, I'm going away.

Sondermann Reports On Symposium Growth, Development of World War Two Question

By Dr. Fred Sondermann

The week of January 2, 1964, will be the second time in the history of the College that all regular phases of college education (classes, lectures, laboratories, etc.) are set aside in favor of another approach to the educational enterprise. We experienced our first one-week Symposium last year, on the topic of "Contemporary Art," and while it would be immodest for me to pass the final judgement on that week, I think it is fair to say that it was a successful week for very many of our students, faculty, and outside friends of the college alike.

The coming Symposium will be devoted to a comprehensive examination of the period of the Second World War. This topic was selected by a series of meetings last spring, in which faculty members and students alike participated and made the final decision, choosing from among a number of potentially interesting topics. It had overwhelming student and faculty support. I imagine that students supported this choice because they were aware of the fact that they have all too little about the series of cataclysmic events in recent history which have so profoundly affected the lives of all of us. I am sure that, in their judgment, the period of the Second World War is highlighted in their academic courses—and I had this experience myself some years ago, when in a course in American foreign policy I suggested that we might go slightly over the period of the 1940's because I assumed that all of us knew it pretty well anyhow. One of my better students reminded me that she was pre-school child at the time the war ended, so that my assumption of keen first-hand knowledge was certainly justified. And as one thinks about it, it seems fair to conclude that even those of us who lived through this period and for whom it was an important phase of life, can benefit greatly by the kind of comprehensive re-examination which we plan to conduct.

It is risky business to predict the success—or failure—of any project, and I can't pose as a prophet. I can, however, say a few things which are based on past experience and future potentialities. After the first day or two, it was quite dear to all of us that the great majority of Colorado College students will respond affirmatively, in fact enthusiastically, to a vigorous and challenging intellectual experience. The experimental aspect of the Symposium, therefore (the questions: would the students come back for it? would they attend? would they participate actively in discussions? etc.) was resolved very early in the game, and does not in my judgment, have to preoccupy our attention again this year. This response of our students, by the way, was one of the finest demonstrations of the temper of the campus community that I have seen in more than 10 years here. I expect it to be repeated in the future, including next January.

As far as the coming Symposium itself is concerned, I would stress the point that we recognize it as a campus-wide enterprise and are consequently trying to arrange it in such a way that everyone on campus, no matter what his or her specific interests are, is apt to find something of value and pertinence in it. When one speaks of the Second World War one thinks first of all about its historical, political and military ingredients, causes, and consequences.

We shall cover these fully—involving in our discussion such outstanding experts as Hanson Baldwin (military critic of the New York Times), Colonel George Lincoln (who was Chief of Staff Marshall's "bright young man" during the period), John Snell and Herbert Feis, eminent historians on numerous aspects. Going beyond this, however, we shall try in a number of ways to re-create the entire atmosphere of the pre-war, war, and immediate post-war period. Thus we have invited Stephen Spender, the outstanding British poet, to speak on the literature of the period, and he has accepted our invitation. One of America's foremost critics, Dwight MacDonald, too will address himself to this topic, as well as to the question of responsibility and guilt for the things that took place in this period. He will be joined in this topic by others, including Telford Taylor, who was the American chief counsel at the Nurem-

Race Problems In C. Springs Explored

By Jim Heckman

Colorado Springs stands as a typical midwestern town in that it is in contact, but not in touch with the times. From its perspective, one can view the current race crisis with very little meaning and very little effect. In Colorado Springs, one can be a conservative liberal and get away with it.

This is because the Negro population in this town is quite small; about four per cent of the county is Negro, and a large number of these Negroes are living in the distant barracks of Fort Carson. It is quite easy to travel through the town and never see a Negro because the Negro community is concentrated in a small area near the College. The small "colored business district" is located south of the Antlers, in the same block as Giuseppe's.

There are two kinds of Negroes in this town: members of the small older generation which has been here for nearly seventy-five years, and the newer citizens, the military men who come here because they are ordered to. This latter group is more vociferous than the former, and is less willing to accept social mediocrity than the older group has been.

A strong conservative element still exists here, but it has been gradually pushed into the background by the newer citizens who came during and after the War, and who sought to improve a town they already liked very much. In 1950, these newer people began, in cooperation with the older citizens, to attack the unstated problem of community-wide discrimination.

The first move towards combating discrimination, if it existed at all, was the Unity Council established in 1950. This group was founded to organize existing racial progress organizations, but the founders, including the United Churchwomen and the Association of University Professors, discovered that there were no such organizations and decided to work directly for racial unity. This private organization sought primarily to educate people and make them accept the racial facts of life. They distributed pamphlets and served as a community voice of opposition against any potential or actual discrimination. Around 1959, the Unity Council was disbanded because of the lack of any serious interest on the part of whites or Negroes.

Things were quiet and typically placid until 1962 when the U.S. Civil Rights Commission released a report that described Colorado Springs as a snake-pit of discrimination. A number of residents, including several Colorado College professors, were disturbed by the fact of discrimination that they knew nothing about. This report led to the founding of the Human Rights Committee of the American Civil Liberties Union.

The Committee, founded last Spring, included such figures as Charles Guy, a local Negro leader, and several ministers, housewives, and people associated with the College community and the University of Colorado Extension Center. Dr. and Mrs. Garner and Dr. and Mrs. Bechtel are active Committee members. This organization sought to take over the earlier work of the Unity Council, and has in fact been dynamic in its program of education and information. Although it lacks any legal status, the Committee has performed numerous services in directing discrimination complaints to the proper agencies, and in encouraging homeowners to practice what they basically believe.

This group, and a weak NAACP constitute the only private racial agencies in El Paso County, and they can only aid the established legal organizations, and help to create a better psychological climate.

Any violation of the discrimination laws must be reported to either the Colorado Advisory Committee to the United States Civil Service Commission or the Colorado State Anti-Discrimination

Rev. Miller Visits Campus

The Religious Affairs Committee would like to bring to your attention the coming visit of the Reverend Clyde R. Miller, Associate Minister of The Church of The Good Shepherd, of Chicago's "south side." Mr. Miller is a college graduate and also a B. D. graduate of the University of Chicago. He will preach in Shove Chapel at the Sunday morning worship service at 11:00 a.m. October 6th.

In the early evening on the same day he will speak from his personal experience concerning the American racial problem. This is a kind of follow up meeting of one held to discuss Baldwin's book The Fire Next Time.

One of Mr. Miller's great interests is the relationship of theology and modern literature. He will speak informally on this topic on Monday afternoon, October 7th.

Junior Class Elections

Wednesday, the election committee of the ASCC announced the results of the junior class elections.

Terry Fonville was elected class president, and Crissy Moon was elected as secretary-treasurer.

The other candidates for president were Steve Fredrickson, Jim Schultz, and Coleman Robinson.

Other candidates for secretary-treasurer were Peter Goodbody and Chuck White.

Director of CORE Speaks Next Week

Mr. James Farmer, National Director of the Congress on Racial Equality, will speak on the Colorado College campus on Friday, October 4th, at 8:15 a.m. in Perkins Hall. His topic is "The American Revolution—Part Two."

The Congress on Racial Equality has been much in the news lately, as it was instrumental in arranging many of the demonstrations in the South and in other parts of the country. It was one of the sponsoring organizations of the march on Washington on August 28. Mr. Farmer was prevented from attending this ceremony, as he found himself jailed in Louisiana during this period.

There will be a question and answer period following Mr. Farmer's speech, and further opportunity for informal conversation at a reception for Mr. Farmer in Loomis Hall immediately after the lecture.

LETTERS to the EDITOR

Dear Editor:

This article is not directed towards the sizeable contingent of good, serious, all-around students at CC, rather, the few who consider themselves special. In addition, I personally acknowledge the person who comes here to spend four years of seriously deep study. What I do not condone is his criticizing me, because I do not criticize or mock him per se.

I am a college student at the Colorado College. I am a serious student. I am one of those who sit up late at night and have metaphysical discussions. I am the person who uses big words in class and call the prof by his first name. I am anti-social because fraternities don't know who or what is important in this world, they don't know what's real.

I am against beer busters because they serve as an excuse for necking. I don't need one. I am for a lot of talk. I am against any party. I am for inanity. Who am I? I am a Colorado College intellectual.

I am one who believes that simply going through the motions of being a serious student will make me one. How could anybody who just studies Sunday through Thursday be a serious student? Impossible. I want my philosophy seminar moved from Tuesday to Saturday night. That way I will be able to gather all my friends who are also serious students, because we never do anything on Saturday night. How can we when we're busy intellectualizing? Besides, Tuesday interferes with our intellectual discussions concerning the FAC movie. — Bob Halsband

Dear Editor:
The situation in the library needs comment. For the past two nights I've been studying in the library, maybe because I need a change of scene, or more probably because in my room the bed presses itself as all too tempting when going over the less fascinating St. Augustine. At any rate the library could, and furthermore should, be a place where the students can study—for whatever reason. So when something like the disruption of last night arises it really bugs me.

At 8:00 p. m. this completely unreserved boisterous laughter tumbled forth from one of the tables. Everyone looked up and there were for five frat guys having the time of their lives. That's what's so great about frat groups: they're so consistent. It doesn't matter where they are, the college library or the Kachina lounge, you can always count on them to be enjoying themselves to the embarrassed discomfort of everyone else. I don't know what it is. Maybe it's the power of numbers which makes them feel that being the biggest things around is the only way to be cool.

Soon after the first outbreak, the table across the room, filled with two or three more of the boys, chimed in. Well, this kept up off and on for the rest of the evening, virtually ruining an hour and half of study time for all concerned.

Somebody told me later on that the "joke" evolved around the fellows giving this guy a fin to go off and proposition some girl. I don't know. After all, even the guy concerned would probably have more success busting in the frat house or someplace. What do you think fellows?

Somebody told me later on that the "joke" evolved around the fellows giving this guy a fin to go off and proposition some girl. I don't know. After all, even the guy concerned would probably have more success busting in the frat house or someplace. What do you think fellows?

Which brings us to an interesting point. What is the Promised Land? what, for that matter, is the American Dream? To me the American Dream is that grand vision of equality of opportunity, dignity, and freedom of the spirit for all men. To me the Promised Land is a land in which every man can develop fully his own being—spiritually, intellectually, physically. Hardly the land you portrayed.

I can tell you to accept my understanding of these two concepts. I cannot tell you to take society's word for what the American Dream is (i.e. the affluence society, etc.) any more than you would mine. I can, and so tell you: Search your own mind and decide what you mean by the American Dream. Then stand up for it; fight for it; work for it. And do not underestimate the power you wield as an individual anymore than you would overestimate it; the American Dream is built upon the individual. Meet the challenge you described in your article. Do not turn your back upon it. If there is anything our country can do without, it is any more. Gertrude Steins, thank you. — Connie Cooper

Dear Editor:
Re John Barker's letter:
Sir, any unification of 370 individuals which you can achieve by throwing eggs at them is hollow at best.

I am sorry you feel that we threw away our identity. We did not; you merely refused to recognize it. One's identity is intensely personal; name tags and beanies are not.

As for school spirit: your concept of it, as implicitly stated in your letter, is more than a little superficial. To be meaningful it must be personal to a certain degree. Each person must decide for himself what he can best do to help develop his school while exploiting it. We will develop school spirit as we go along. Some of us will be game for games; some of us will be on committees and in clubs; some of us (God help you) will write letters to the editor. But give us time—time to find out what our school means to us and what we mean to our school. When we know this, each of us, as an individual, will be spirited in his own way. — Connie Cooper

Collective Bargaining Crisis Concerns Bechtol in Lecture

Last night Dr. Bechtol gave a third lecture in the fall lecture series. His lecture concerned what he labeled "The Crisis in Collective Bargaining."

There are two crises that confront the institution of collective bargaining. First, there is a crisis in the nature of the bargaining and the resulting strike which is due to the inability of collective bargaining to solve issues of automation and of security. Secondly, there is a crisis of constant union membership brought about by the fact that large portions of the economy do not employ collective bargaining.

The problem of automation and of job security will fade as the issue to be solved by collective bargaining. Government will take over solving of this problem when faces, as it is beginning to when the more encompassing issue of resource re-allocation. A change in the nature of the collective bargaining process is taking place in certain industries. Union management are moving from the union negotiating, with each trying to get the other to come to their own proposals, to a continuous negotiation in which there is an attempt to have joint solutions to problems concerning union and management.

Another problem of constant union membership in an expanding economy is somewhat more difficult to solve. The areas most difficult to unionize are white collar workers and the blue collar workers in the South. In the South legal obstacles and a large rural population from which to draw non-union people have held unionization. These, however, are obstacles that unions have overcome before and therefore know how to deal with; thus unionization of the blue collar worker in the South is only a matter of time. To unionize the white collar worker who constitutes 40% of the population, the unions are going to have to develop new techniques as to organization. All attempts to organize these workers so far have ended in failure.

It must be said, therefore, that the true crisis is not in the bread of negotiations where collective bargaining is established but in the inability of the unions to promote collective bargaining in new areas. If collective bargaining is not promoted among the white collar workers, it will lose its influence as an institution.

The Colorado Advisory Commission has less immediate purpose. Its purpose is to investigate the causes and report any and all developments. This was the group that released the controversial Colorado Springs discrimination report.

The municipal government and the Chamber of Commerce have been reluctant to pursue the question of whether or not discrimination exists here in as violent form as the Civil Rights Commission report asserts. They have heard what the Commanding Officer of Fort Carson, General Heintges, declared that there was no problem with racial discrimination in this area.

Whether or not there is discrimination, it is certain that the way and means are available to the most social forces of the community. The problem, then, is to determine whether or not there is discrimination here, and whether or not enough residents, outside of college professors and church groups feel strongly enough to take effective action.

EDITORIAL —

The ASCC Executive Council Monday unanimously passed a motion to require Black and Gold:

(1) To begin immediately to re-examine its role on this campus as the men's enthusiasm organization.

(2) To suggest ways in which its role in freshmen Orientation Week might be made a more constructive one.

(3) To submit these proposals to joint evaluation session which will be conducted by the Executive Council later this year on the purposes of Orientation Week.

The motion represents at once a remarkable act of restraint and a new challenge for the council, and for all students at Colorado College.

The act of restraint came in ASCC's refusal to remove Black and Gold entirely from Orientation Week, and instead to place the organization on one more period of trial.

The challenge came, and continues to come, in ASCC's apparent determination to continue the Orientation process in some form, and its commendable efforts to re-evaluate the purposes and goals of the week set aside to introduce freshmen to Colorado College. ASCC's acceptance of responsibility in this matter, and its advocacy of an orientation period in principle represent in themselves a test of the efficacy of the student organization.

What has not yet been discussed is the challenge to students to aid their representatives in finding constructive solutions to this problem. The topic is rapidly expiring as a subject of conversation; we can be certain, however, that it will take on new significance this spring, and ideas offered can only be helpful in ordering the process of considering and solving the problem.

One specific possibility is the reinstitution of the inexplicably abandoned freshman summer readings program discussions as a part of the initial week of the fall session. The Student Handbook described in some detail a program which never took place. At the risk of incurring a new rash of anti-over-intellectualization-at-CC letter we would suggest the renewal of this program as a means of inducing immediate and hopefully lively discussions among incoming students on a number of topics.

mentary films; are preparing musical presentations, recordings of speeches of top war leaders, dramatic readings or performances, and other forms of programming which will, we hope, make the week not only meaningful but also together exciting for everyone who participates in it.

In the preparations for the Symposium, I am being greatly aided by a group of devoted students and faculty colleagues; it is therefore truly a combined effort on the part of many individuals who are trying to bring to the Colorado College campus and its citizens a week's program which, in my judgment, would be hard to duplicate, and impossible to surpass, anywhere in the country. This is entirely in line with our joint assumption that we find ourselves in a unique setting, with unique advantages and unsurpassed opportunities for educational experiences.

Shove Chapel

Sunday, Sept. 29—11:00 a. m. — Greek Weekend

Preacher: Professor Kenneth Burton.

Worship leader: Sharon Shackelford, president of Pan Hellenic.

Sermon title: "A Shocking Story."

On this annual event of Greek Weekend the Religious Affairs Committee and the staff of the Religion Department would like to extend a warm invitation to the members of the Greek organizations to attend worship in Shove Chapel this coming Sunday morning. It has been the practice in past years for Greeks to do this and they will be welcome again this coming Sunday.

After having had no acquaintanceship whatsoever with fraternal organizations before coming to this campus, the preacher would like to address a few, what he hopes will be constructive remarks to these groups at this service. The main context of the sermon which he hopes will not be irrelevant is concerned with the Parable of The Dishonest Steward. It concerns the story of a crooked rogue and swindler who is yet commended by Jesus. It is hoped that in the expounding of the story many of our snug complacencies will be challenged.

Committee in Denver. Only these groups can take effective action on explicit acts of racial discrimination. There are definite Colorado and federal laws forbidding discrimination. Colorado has three such laws, including an anti-discrimination law dating back to the 1890's, and two modern laws passed since 1957.

The first of these laws is the Fair Employment Practices Law, passed in 1957, which forbids job discrimination against a man because of his race, religion, or color. The law includes a clause against discrimination in application forms which identify a man racially. The law also prohibits any discrimination by business proprietors.

The Colorado Anti-Discrimination Commission enforces this law, and can issue cease and desist orders. The only problem has been the slowness with which cases have been prosecuted. Sometimes the time elapsed between the original filing of a complaint and the final settlement has been two years or more. This is often the case in the investigation of housing complaints.

Housing is treated differently by the Commission, and a subsidiary body, the Colorado Fair Housing Administration, has been established as a result of the Colo-

Torrens Explains Reasons Behind Meal Cards, Gripes

By Terry Winograd

One of the most often revealed services on campus is the dining hall service. In an attempt to see whether or not this is one of those things like the weather, which "everyone talks about . . ." this week's interview is with Robert Torrens, head of the CC Food Service. It contains a paraphrase of his point of view.

Q—The first thing everyone noticed this year was the meal card check. Why do we have this system?

A—This is a very standard system in colleges all over the country. We tried it for the first time last year, and this year, we've greatly improved its efficiency. Judging from the number of people we caught last year trying to eat without paying, their board would have brought in an additional $4,000. We know we weren't catching even half of them with last year's system, and this year we estimate a saving of up to $8,000 or $10,000. The total cost of the system is only about $50 a year. The personnel involved is secretarial and managerial staff, so no additional money is spent in hiring help.

Q—I'm sure you've heard the complaints about no second portions at dinners. What is the reason behind this?

A—Actually, these people should find out more about what is standard in most schools. CC is one of the very few schools that gives seconds on anything. When I go to a food service convention, they tell me I'm crazy to give an unlimited main dish at any meals. Most places even limit students to one glass of milk. Since we don't do this, it's hard to keep up high quality food at the same cost. This is the reason for eliminating seconds on meat at weekday dinners. We're trying to bring up the quality of the food. You've probably noticed that the ham is much better this year, and now we're finding better brands of other types of meat. We're also adding to the menu—for instance this Sunday we're serving trout.

Q—Just how does the cost compare with that at other schools?

A—A lot of people would be surprised to find that we're near the middle of the national figures for meal costs. This includes the state schools, where it's much lower. We operate on a basis of trying to break even. One of our biggest costs is labor. We have a full time staff of 55, with 110 students working on board jobs for $38,000 this year.

Q—There are always gripes about the lack of variety in food. What do you do concerning this?

A—Of course we're limited in what we can serve, both by finances and facilities, but we try to make as many as possible within our limitations. Every month, we set up a chart of main dishes to avoid undesirable repetition, and we also avoid a cyclical plan, which soon becomes boring to the students. We changed last year's steak night at the students' request. They said they got so tired of steak, so this year we'll serve it every other week instead of every week.

Q—Maybe you have some complaints about the students too?

A—Most of them are problems instead of complaints. I do think it's too easy for them to complaint, instead of criticize constructively. This year, for the first time, we've set up food committees in all the dorms and houses to hear what they have to say. People are too ready to gripe without understanding the problems involved; but we want to hear any valid complaints and we'll try to act on them.

As far as problems, the greatest one is the number of people we're serving this year. We have 200 more people than we did last year, and it's really tight. At lunch, we serve over 900 people in only 300 seats. That means we have to get three full turnovers. Our line is pretty fast—we send through 16 people a minute, compared to the 14 which is considered good as a general figure. But people come in crowds.

The biggest rush is at noon on Monday, Wednesday, and Friday. Also, on Friday and Saturday nights, we serve almost no one from 5 to 5:30, while everyone tries to get in after that. Next year, we hope to be using Taylor for both lunch and dinner. It will be a better atmosphere, and we will ease the crowding. Actually, we have even more than the figures show because our absentee figure is less than most schools. Ordinarily, you can expect 24% of the students signed up to miss any given meal. Here we have about 12% miss lunch and dinner, with a total of less than 18%.

Q—What other projects are you working on now?

A—Well, as I said, we have the food committees, and we're working on the quality of the food. Also we've started a unique program in training. Daryl Anderson, a former CC student, is working as a special assistant, to get on the job training in food management. This is an opportunity not many schools give, and it may prove very valuable.

The Springs and Things

By Caroline Greyke

In the city of New York there is published weekly a magazine entitled "The New Yorker." Generalizing, this publication does two things; it lists the various happenings—movies, plays, concerts, art exhibits, etc.—in and around its town, and talks about any phase of life in NYC it likes. This is what I intend to do in this column—with Colorado Springs as the focal point. Usually I will not mention happenings sponsored by a Colorado College organization as they are already quite adequately publicized, but rather stick to what the town's theatres, hotels, restaurants, etc. have to offer. I know that at first I shall unintentionally fail to mention some events of which you may have knowledge. This is simply because I am not yet a man about town. Therefore I would solicit and appreciate any information you can furnish me with concerning upcoming jam sessions, wild parties, home-movie showings, hootenannies, seances, private showings of etchings—anything you think would be of interest to someone.

Colorado Springs has nine movie theatres, five of which are drive-ins. This week everything along the gamut from "The L Shaped Room" (at the Peak) to "Gorilla Girl" which shares the billing (at the Starlite Drive-In) with "Europe in the Raw"—a truly sterling double feature are to be seen. Also being shown "clean-and-wholesome-fun" type movie, "Bench Party," starring Annette (which rhymes with forget or regret) and Frankie Avalon. Leaving Snow White behind them, the Three Stooges latest, "Around the World in a Daze" is being shown along with "Siege of the Saxons" at both the Alhambra and Vista-Vue. To finish up the drive in entertainment, "55 Days at Peking" started yesterday at the Sky View, and the Eighth Street Drive-In offers "Wall of Noise" and "Island of Love." Playing at the Ute are "Of Love and Desire" and "Marilyn." The latter, a tribute to Marilyn Monroe, is composed of sequences from 15 of her films and is narrated by Rock Hudson. The Broadmoor Theatre is featuring Marcello Martriani in "8½." This film is somewhat along the line of "Last Year at Marienbad" in that you're never exactly sure where you are.

In the foldlight is Le Chat Noir, who has imported New Yorker, Peter LeFarge to sing and play this weekend.

The Honeybucket offers light and dark 3.2 beer (I've yet to discern the difference in taste), peanuts, and honky-tonk piano played by Kenneth Gibbs on Friday night and by CC student, Jim Warden, on Saturday night and Sunday afternoon.

For 3.2 and dancing is of course, the Krazy Kat with music provided by the Spectrums.

Dancing of a calmer sort may be found at the Embers, to the music of the International Four, and at the Antlers Hotel, where the George Marvin Trio is featured.

While I shall never attempt to cover Denver entertainment, I shall, however, periodically mention "big" things—i.e. the Ice Follies, who will be at the Denver Coliseum until September 29. Tickets may be ordered in Colorado Springs at Bick's Sporting Goods (they also provide plastic covers for our dear meal tickets). And then, of course, there's always "Cleopatra," now playing at the Denham in Denver. But to see it that it's now 'in' not to see it.

ANNOUNCEMENT

There will be a meeting for all students interested in applying for fellowships to study abroad, especially for those interested in the Fulbright Fellowship, on Friday, Oct. 4, at 4 p.m. in the WES Room in Rastall.

KRCC Radio Station Starts Broadcasting

This week radio KRCC, the Colorado College radio station, returned to the air to begin its thirteenth broadcast season. KRCC offers the college FM audience a varied program from 5 p.m. to 10 p.m. each evening Monday through Friday. The station features all varieties of music and frequent interviews of interest to the college community. On Sunday morning the service from Shove Chapel is broadcast between the hours of 10 a.m. and 12 noon.

The college radio station is operated in conjunction with the speech department. The station management and operation is carried out entirely by students. Managing the operation this season is Michael Irtsfeld. Working on program direction are Donna Sue Jones, Tom Dairy, and Ray Mithun. Behind the microphone is chief announcer Gerry Agnew backed up by Michael Schmidt and Ed Heckel. Dr. Woodson Tyree is the faculty supervisor of the operation.

The staff of KRCC wishes to invite the college community to listen to their fine programming at 91.3 megacycles on the FM dial.

SEMINAR ON SURREALISM

In October and November, Colorado College will offer a six-session seminar on surrealism.

The six sessions will deal with the early surrealists, surrealist doctrine, and surrealism in such art forms as painting, poetry, films, and theater.

Professor Elmer R. Peterson of the French department at Colorado College will teach the seminar sessions. He spent the summer in Paris talking with members of the surrealist and Dadaist movements.

Dr. Fred A. Sondermann, associate dean and director of special studies, said enrollment will be limited.

OPINION

Each year a portion of the college budget is set aside for the operation of a radio station. Each CC student pays his share for the operation of the facility and should receive benefit from it. Yet few students on campus know that this operation exists and even fewer have ever listened to it.

From the few who have heard it one hears rather harsh criticism. In order to become a part of the exclusive listeners club, the prospective listener must own an FM receiver, secondly he must determine when the station is on and where it is to be found on his radio, and finally he must find free time to listen during hours which must be shared with dinner, studying, and evening social events, etc. These criticisms might be dismissed by contending that the station is no more than a lab for students enrolled in radio classes. However the campus radio station could and should be every bit as much of an information service to the campus community as the newspaper. CC can have a college radio station providing a real service.

It must be on the regular broadcast band and offer a program of general interest to the campus during hours more compatible with the students' schedule. The new programming should include campus news, commentary, music, and variety. The operating hours should be selected for maximum listening audience. In short the station should become a vital part of the campus community. Any necessary increase in the staff and/or appropriation could well be worth its added expense in increased service to the campus community.

Is your investment in KRCC worth it to you? Are you paying for the benefit of a few students enrolled in radio courses? If so why not drop by the KRCC station and make your feelings known?

New Conservative Leaders Emerge With Plan to Repeal Income Tax

By Alex Primm

The last fifteen to twenty years has been witness to one of the most fantastic movements in American political history, the emergence of a militant right wing. From relatively sane politicians such as Barry Goldwater, to the "lunatic fringe" of Robert Welch and his John Birch society, the new conservative leaders are determined to throw back the progress of the twentieth century and destroy the democratic idea of government.

One of the most frightening proposals of the ultra-right is the plan to repeal the income tax and force the government to withdraw from business.

The proposal, made by such organizations as the National Committee for Economic Freedom, the American Progress Foundation, and the Organization for Repeal of the Federal Income Tax, is basically to repeal the 16th amendment (the income tax amendment) and to put in its place the 23rd amendment or "Liberty Amendment," which would make the income tax illegal under the Constitution and require the government to sell its businesses.

Since 1959, six state legislatures have passed the amendment and it has been introduced in the Congress three times, most recently by James B. Utt (R-Calif.) in 1959.

The amendment provides that: "Section 1. The government of the United States shall not engage in any business, professional, commercial, financial or industrial enterprise except as specified in the Constitution.

Section 2. The constitution or laws of any State, or the laws of the United States shall not be subject to the terms of any foreign or domestic agreement which would abrogate this amendment.

Section 3. The activities of the United States Government which violate the intent and purposes of this amendment shall, within a period of three years from the date of the ratification of this amendment, be liquidated and the properties and facilities affected shall be sold.

Section 4. Three years after the ratification of this amendment the sixteenth article of amendments to the Constitution of the United States shall stand repealed and thereafter Congress shall not levy taxes on personal incomes, estates, and/or gifts.

When the writers of this amendment say that the government shall withdraw from business, they mean that it shall withdraw all services it offers. In a famous newsletter published by the American Progress Foundation, the 700 organizations and businesses the government would be required to withdraw from were listed. Among the list were: the Department of Defense, the Federal Communications Commission, the Federal Reserve Banks, the National Park Service, the North Atlantic Treaty Organization, the Peace Corps, the Tennessee Valley Authority, and the United Nations, not to mention the Central International Office for the Control of the Liquor Traffic in Africa.

Looking at the above list, it is obvious that these conservative organizations do not really desire to control the spreading bureaucracy of the government, but to destroy it. Could one imagine the United States being represented in the North Atlantic Treaty Organization by an industrial concern?

But in a relatively short period of time, these groups have made considerable progress in getting this measure accepted by state legislatures.

Since it appears that the measure will never be passed by Congress, the conservative groups now hope to persuade at least the necessary two-thirds of the state legislatures to pass the bill, thereby requiring a Constitutional Convention to be called, the first in the history of the nation to amend the Constitution.

The first public announcement of the movement was in 1952, when a magazine called Frontier, published in California, outlined the program of Willis E. Stone's American Progress Foundation to repeal the income tax. Since then, numerous magazines and organizations have sprung up to carry the banner of tax repeal. Like Robert Welch, Billy James Hargis, and Dan Smutt, Willis E. Stone rarely concentrates on attacking one thing, but strikes out at everything from the United Nations to Chief Justice Earl Warren.

It is interesting to note how the philosophies of various conservative groups often overlap so that one finds an organization like Get US out of UN and the UN out of US, NOW calling for the repeal of the income tax and the Organization to Repeal Federal Income Taxes, Inc. working against the United Nations. In a little book called "Action for Americans—the Liberty Amendment" one notices that the authors attack almost every liberal part of the government, such as foreign aid, or as this book describes it: "It is an appalling fact that Americans who have never known military defeat, have been forced by their government, under the pretext of economic aid, to pay more tribute to foreign socialistic and communistic government than all the vanquished people of the earth have paid to their conquerors."

The book continues and presents the conservative's arguments in favor of repealing the income tax. Senator Carl Hayden of Oregon, with the aid of the Joint Economic Committee of the Senate, studied the "Liberty Amendment" and published his findings in a booklet printed by the 1st session of the 87th Congress.

Summarizing his findings, Senator Hayden said, "The facts contained in this study" force one to the conclusion that the adoption of the proposal would severely limit the Federal Government in meeting the minimum needs and requirements of our people and would completely prevent it from carrying out its obligations and responsibilities to the free world."

From the list of organizations the government would have to withdraw from, it is obvious that the government would be completely powerless to assume leadership in even the most elementary business of running the nation. Besides this, the economic effects of a repeal of the income tax would throw the nation into chaos that the government would be powerless to control.

CC Mountain Club Promotes Climbing; Provides Training

By Bob Carlson

Founded in 1945 by a small group of interested students, the Colorado College Mountain Club has grown to one of the largest clubs on campus. Its primary function is to promote the spread and enjoyment of mountaineering as a sport, mountaineering not only in Colorado, but all over the world. While enjoyment of the mountainous regions of the Eastern Hemisphere is basically limited to movies and literature, the entire Western Hemisphere is subject to the yodel of a CCMC climber.

Club sponsored trips have been made to such favorite US regions as Yosemite, Sequoia, Grand Canyon, Monument Valley, Bryce, Zion, the Tetons, Yellowstone, Glacier National Park, and, of course, any peak or valley in Colorado. International trips are made to Mexico and Canada, and small, member trips to South America.

For the student of technical rock climbing the club offers through this year's rock school, expert instruction, including the talents of the Peace Corps rock school manager, Gary Ziegler. The CCMC school, by the way, is free to members and includes a snow and ice school this winter.

It is with the realization that most students on campus lack their own mountain equipment that the CCMC maintains a large supply of the basic tools of mountaineering. This stock which is, again, free to members on a check out basis, includes such necessities as boots, socks, pack tents, windbreakers, canteens, pack frames, ropes, sleeping bags, and . . . quilted arctic underwear? Equipment for winter mountaineering consists of heavy mittens, ice axes, snow shoes, crampons, and skis. An extensive equipment expansion program is under way this semester with a large portion of club funds available for this purpose.

For those interested in primitive cuisine, the club has in stock at the moment a varied supply of leftovers ranging from a cubic foot of pretzels to a case of grape and rootbeer pop and the cooking gear for preparation, if you care for that sort of concoction.

With a large turnout at all four events the club has thus far this semester explored Huccacove Cave, hiked Mt. Sherman (14,037), conducted its first rock school session of the season, and hiked the South Arapahoe Peak (13,397). The following is the remaining schedule for this semester (tentative, because the CCMC does exactly as dictated by a majority vote of members at any regular meeting):

Sierra Blanca (14,317) overnight, first ascent of the northeast ridge.

Oct. 6 —

Mt. Beirstadt (14,060) and Mt. Evans (14,264)

Oct. 12 —

Technical rock climbing school

Oct. 13 —

Antero Peak (14,269)

Oct. 26-27 —

Pikes Peak overnight.

Nov. 2 —

Technical rock climbing school.

Nov. 3 —

Mt. Almagre (12,265), possibly a snowshoeing trip.

Nov. 9-Dec. 1 —

Additional hiking and climbing and area and cross-country skiing as weather permits.

In addition, there is active interest for another trip to Mexico this Christmas or spring vacation. For the up-to-the-minute information on what the club is doing, come to our meetings held every Tuesday night at 7:30 in the Berg Heil room of Rastall Center.

Peace Corps Director

To Recruit at Rastall

On Friday, September 27th, Mr. Edwin P. Astle, Director of Peace Corps Programs in Central America, will be on our campus to talk to interested students and faculty. From 2:00 to 3:30 p.m. he will be available to students in Room 25 of Rastall Center. No appointments are necessary, and interested students are urged to come to Room 205 sometime in this period, introduce themselves to Mr. Astle, and discuss their possible roles in the Peace Corps with him.

At 4:00 p.m., there will be a general meeting in the W.E.S. Lounge, at which Mr. Astle will give a talk on current Peace Corps needs, policies, and prospects. Everyone is cordially invited to attend.

Mr. Astle is a 1932 graduate of the University of Montana. He served with the Navy during World War II and has been overseas almost continuously since that time (in Korea, Paraguay, Haiti, British Honduras and since early this year he has taken over the direction of all Peace Corps programs in Central America.)

One of Mr. Astle's purposes in coming here is to dispel the impression of too many Liberal Arts graduates that they do not have the right skills for Peace Corps work. It is pointed out that the majority of all persons now in the Peace Corps are precisely graduates of Liberal Arts colleges and similar programs in universities.

A SUBTLE HINT

This is to notify all interested and/or concerned freshman men that, contrary to popular opinion, freshman women are not all being rushed by upperclassmen, nor is their time occupied most evenings. Further, most of them would welcome male companionship. If the problem is only that freshman men are shy, please remember that college life is supposed to "stimulate social growth." The solution is, therefore, very simple. Freshman women would welcome dates with freshman men.

 GREEK NEWS *****

Beta Theta Pi
Fond congratulations to our fourteen new brothers, initiated last Sunday. They are John L. Frenkie, Houston H. Markley, Harry E. Intemann, Daniel J. Cooper, Andrew P. Jovanovich, William J. Mracek, Kenneth R. Gamblin, James B. Spicer, Palmer C. Chalala, James A. Welch, Roderick W. Miner, R. M. Patrick, Archer, Paul Comer, and William V. Hodges III.

Following the initiation ceremony, the "Neophytes" were treated to a steady dinner at the Embers. At that time President Nicholas announced that Hue Markley had won the Pledge Scholarship Award, for outstanding academic achievement, and Harry Intemann had won the Most Outstanding Pledge award. Again congratulations.

The Crystalline Inn was the scene, last Saturday night, for this year's glorious Beta Toga Party. The setting was nice, the refreshments were tasty, the music was excellent, and nobody got killed.

Handshakes and backslaps to Steve Livingston, and hugs and kisses to Kathy Jankosky. Steve gave Kathy his fraternity pin last weekend.

Phi Delta Theta

The Phi Delta house welcomes new pledges Dave Edwards, Dave Van Ness, and Hugh Jardon, who rose to campus fame with his weekend antics.

The best wishes of the house go to Bob Strom and Kappa Delta Dent with the announcement of their recent engagement. Bob's most recent book, "Motorcycle Masculinity," a syllabus of the rules of etiquette for proponents of the black leather set, may be purchased at the CC Bookstore.

Author Bob is currently devoting his time and energies to research on another potential best-seller, "Feed-Lot Management." The weekend in retrospect presents a formidable chain of morale-boosting events. The Delta Gamma house accompanied us in Saturday night's activities, which included a pre-game picnic, attendance at the football game, and a post-game dance in the Phi Delta basement.

Sunday evening the Phis stormed the Alpha Phi house for dessert games ("Spin the Tissue Roll," "Pin the Tail on the Alpha Phi," etc.) and good times.

Kappa Alpha Theta

Congratulations to our new officers! They are: Pledge Trainer, Maxine Gaddis; Mother chairman, Kay Burton; Scholarship, Audrey Snyder; Fraternity Trends, Susie Blair; Marshal, Sue Thompson; Editor, Ann Threlkeld; Foreign Student, Jean Becker; Sophomore Representative, Susie Bauer; and Song Chairman, Beth Anneberg.

The "Theta ladies" are looking forward to participating in the Greek Weekend festivities with much enthusiasm. We hope to see many at the Sorority Open House on Sunday afternoon.

Sigma Chi

Last Tuesday the Sigma Chi's held an informal (sweatshirts and bermudas) dessert for the Delta Gamma's. Sigma Chi welcomes three new pledges, Dave Palm, Louis Rottman, and Grant Wilkerson. Congratulations to the Watermelon Bunt Queen candidates, Kay Baker, Susan Freeland, Vicki Jacobson, Collins Selby, Lise Hazen, and to our Watermelon Bunt Queen Joan Millard.

Gamma Phi Beta

Since Monday, September 16, four bright lights have been added to the Gamma Phi Beta house. The announcement of the pinning of Liz Hickman (La Maison Francaise) to 2nd classman Terry Schilling of 5th squadron, AFA, and of the engagement of Carole Shafer to Lynn Paris (Colorado Springs), alum of the University of Arkansas and a member of the Lambda Chi fraternity there, lit the house on September 16. Duly inspired, during the week of September 16-23 Gamma Phi Beta could be seen busily packaging lightbulbs on their "Let's Keep Colorado Springs Enlightened" campaign. Reverting to childhood, the Gamma Phi held an old-fashioned ice cream social for new faculty and their families. It proved a delightful change of pace for all. Indeed, after pacing the streets of Colorado Springs, the girls were glad to sit down once more. But two sophomore girls felt it necessary to interrupt. The pinning of Doris Beckman to 1st classman J. B. Manning Jr., of 19th squadron, AFA, was announced. Kathy Jankosky also announced that she is pinned to Steve Livingston of our brother fraternity, Beta Theta Pi. The pace has slowed down to a Rush and, along with the other sororities, the Gamma Phi Betas are looking forward to the results of Monday night's open rush.

Alpha Phi

To the first contest at the Alpha Phi Games Night for the Phi Delta Sunday, Lee Hunt proved to be the fastest of 12 brothers as a T.P. unroller. Lynn Miller won the pin-unroller. Dave Helm's pass-the-orange-under-your-chin team won over Steve Friuk's because Dave Holdorf bit their orange, and who could pass a lemon?

Mom Lewis' special lemon cake was served with whipped cream and was scrumptuous! As we'd say in French House, we did manage "faire la bombe" (to have a blast) in fun and games.

Greek Weekend

Tonight at 7:30 the sororities and fraternities will officially start CC's annual Greek Weekend with a bonfire and pep rally next door to the Beta House. Festivities this evening will also include an introduction of the football players and other entertainment.

Everyone is invited to attend Saturdays' events starting with the chariot racing during the halftime of the football game. A bicycle race, soccer game, tug of war, and last but certainly not least, the chasing of the greased pig will test the prowess of the Greeks.

Saturday evening, the all-school dance will be held at the Garden of the Gods Chuck Wagon Pavilion at 7:30. The Astronauts will return to CC to provide the music. Busses for freshmen leave Rastall at 7:30 and return at 12:00. The dance is free, but activity cards must be shown to limit the dance to CC students and their guests.

The week-end continues on Sunday with the 11:00 chapel service in Shove Rev. Burton has oriented this service toward the Greeks. At 1:00 there will be an assembly in Shove. At this time, Bill Hybl will speak, and awards will be presented. The weekend closes with the sorority and fraternity open houses which will start at 2:15.

Patty Jewett Golf Course Scene of Golf Tournament

The annual Colorado College intramural golf tournament is scheduled to be played at the Patty Jewett Golf Course next Friday and Saturday, October 3 and 4. The tournament will consist of two 18-hole rounds of medal play using USGA rules governing competition. The first round of 18-holes will determine a team champion and each fraternity, Slocum Hall wing, or residence house may enter a 4-man team. The low nine men and ties for 9th place will play an additional round the following weekend with the low 36-hole total to determine the individual champion.

The intramural tournament also serves as a tryout for the varsity golf team. All students, except members of the varsity golf squad, are eligible to play in the tournament and they may enter either as an individual or as a member of a 4-man team. Entries may be filed with wing representative, the intramural manager of a house, or the Athletic Department.

Patty Jewett Golf Course is located only 15 blocks from the campus but a shuttle bus will be provided from Slocum Hall to transport all entries.

Cycling Competition Coming To Colorado Springs Soon

By John Tarr

"The sight of grown men on velocipedes puffing themselves black in the face fills me with sommier." This quote, by Henry Manney III of Road and Track magazine, is an exceedingly accurate though disgustingly insensitive description of probably the most gruelling sport existing, bicycle racing. Surely no sane human would submit himself to the physical torture of riding hundreds of miles on the razor-thin saddle several million rabid Frenchmen from their normal torpor to a fever pitch to watch the van go peddling past. Strategy in road racing is of paramount importance, with such good natured competitive tactics as running opponents off mountain roads, hiring peddling bodyguards to harass competitors, and other methods too sportsmanlike to describe.

Time trialing demands Merrie Olde England as its birthplace and homeland. Only mad dogs and Englishmen fail to recognize it as the unglamorous farce it is. Here the only opponent is Father Time, who although he is implacable, is definitely unexciting.

Sprinting, or How to Succeed in Cycling Without Really Trying, enjoys, probably because it is more exciting than any other form of cycling competition, the most universal international acceptance (subject to debate by some who accuse me of bias). Ideally, sprints are run on banked one-fourth mile oval tracks, preferably built of hardwood. Special track bikes are used which have no brakes or gearshift, and on which speeds of 40-45 mph are reached.

For those who are now entranced by the foregoing absurdity, there will be an opportunity to observe an excellent example of cycle competition. There will be an intercollegiate cycling meet the morning of Sunday, October 6, to be held at Prospect Park — about six block east of the downtown area — on Pikes Peak Avenue. The course is an excellent one: one mile in length with numerous turns.

The race will consist of three one mile sprints, held every third lap. Points will be awarded for three sprints. Thus, though points will actually be given for competition only in three laps, the cyclists will have to keep up their high speeds in the off-laps, so that they will be in a position to win points in the sprints. Participants will include representatives from DU, CU, CSU, and CC; many of whom are ranked highly on state charts. The more devoted riders of the group will be running "track bikes."

Sponsoring this race will be Dick Oldakowski, the Colorado representative of the Amateur Bicycle League of America. He is the foremost authority on bicycles in a five state region, and the proprietor of the Professional Cycle Shop right across the street from the college, behind Murray Drug. He will be more than willing to help any student who is interested in cycling, a sport that is too often equated with beatniks and Bertrand Russell, but which is nevertheless a sport, for men only.

Tigers Lose Season Opener By Last Minute Touchdown

A last minute touchdown pass was the deciding factor in a 13-7 loss at last Saturday's home opener against Nebraska Wesleyan. Nonetheless, the first night game played in 12 years provided the spectators at Washburn field with something but a dull game, and it is hoped, action that will become the rule and not the exception this year and in following ones. Freshman fullback Ray Jones returned the opening kickoff of 27 yards to the Tiger 31. Seven plays later Mike Mestik culminated devastating 69 yard march with his five yard drive into the end zone and with only three minutes and 48 seconds elapsed on the clock, it looked as if the Tigers could do no wrong.

The Plainsmen and Tigers traded downs for the rest of the period, but lightning struck early in the second quarter when a dropped punt put Nebraska in position on the CC 18 yard line. Two plays later Nebraska quarterback Mike Slatinsky rifled the ball 13 yards to end Dwight Tiejien. Nebraska converted and the score was tied 7-7.

Again neither team was able to mount a consistent drive until late in the quarter when CC pushed down to the Plainsmen's three yard line. Cubby Welch was caught behind the line of scrimmage attempting a pass, and hopes fell when Steve Sabol's field goal attempt went wide of the mark.

The third quarter saw another thwarted drive. This time it was the Plainsmen who moved the ball down to the five, only to meet a powerful CC rush which produced a third down fumble and recovery by the Tiger.

With a little less than a minute left, Nebraska's John Mullin intercepted a Tiger pass on the Plainsmen's 32 and returned it back over the 50 yard line into CC territory. On the next play, Slatinsky dropped back to pass, and despite a hard Tiger push, hit end Dennis Quick in the end zone, providing the margin of victory. Nebraska failed to convert, but with only 45 seconds left it made little difference.

Once more, the Tigers won the game everywhere, except on the scoreboard. The statistics showed that CC rolled up twice as many first downs as Nebraska, and netted over a 100 yards. About this, Coach Gerald Carle said, "We moved the ball, but mistakes in the second half hurt us. In a close game the team that makes the fewest mistakes usually wins."

Top man for the Tigers was Steve Sabol who rambled for 103 yards on 18 carries and set up the single CC tally with his 33-yard gallop to the Nebraska five. Up front, Carle singled out tackle Stan Lathrop, and guards Al Looshi, and Harry Intemann for their performances. "Lathrop did a real job, and Looshi and Intemann were responsible for the success of our trap plays."

Next week, The Tigers meet Ft. Lewis A&M, a team which boasts a multitude of plus 200 pounders, and perhaps one of the best

Chess Club Outlook Excellent

The Colorado College Chess Club held its first meeting last Friday night. At first glance, it appears that this year the club will be larger and possibly better than last year. Although we lost a couple of old guards, we gained eight new members.

The primary business of the meeting was to elect new officers and to set up a position ladder.

Another meeting will be held later this week to mark progress on the ladder and to plan the time and place of the first match. All newcomers will be welcomed and within several weeks free lessons will be given to all interested novices.

This year's officers are: Presidents, Terry Rosen and Sergey Trubetskoy; Vice President, Chas Lanza.

Peter La Farge To Appear at Le Chat Noir

Peter La Farge, folksinger, will appear at Le Chat Noir Coffee House, 7½ North Cascade Ave., Friday, Sept. 27th and Saturday, Sept. 28th for two shows nightly at 8:30 p.m. and 10:00 p.m.

Peter La Farge has been defined as a true folksinger. He is an ex-cowhand, bronco buster, rodeo rider, professional fighter, and of Indian ancestry to boot.

This last bit of heritage has been the source of his album of modern Indian songs—"As Long as the Grass Shall Grow." Other albums he has recorded are "Iron Mountain," "Peter La Farge Sings of the Cowboy," "Ira Hayes and Other Ballads," "A Day on the Ranch—Children's Songs and Games," and "Broadside No. 1 with Pete Seeger, Freedom Singers, Dylan and others."

La Farge appeared in New York City at the Town Hall on Sept. 13th, and was a guest singer at Carnegie Hall on Sept. 21.

He grew up on the Kane Ranch at Fountain where his mother now lives. He is now living in New York City where he records, makes personal appearances and composes many of the songs he sings. A writer said of La Farge: "What is a folksinger? There's nothing mysterious about it. The folksinger is someone who comes from the people or goes to the people—it doesn't matter which as long as this basic tie exists—and creates out of people's and his personal experience, humor, tragedy, and struggle the substance and the music he sings."

That sums up the work of Peter La Farge. —Adv.

IN MEMORIAM for four children who were victims of a controversy they could have known little about, Sunday's march was a moving event for the wide cross-section of the community which took part in it.

Group Expresses Publicly Feelings of Sympathy And Grief in Memorial March Sunday Afternoon

By Mike Pleasants

Businessmen, teachers, working men, housewives, high school and college students, pastors, professors and children of all ages gathered in front of a small Colorado Springs church. They had come in all their diversity to express publicly a common feeling of sympathy and grief, sympathy for the parents of the four Negro girls killed so tragically on a similar Sunday two weeks before in Birmingham.

At the appointed time the group fanned into quiet ranks, children in the front, and moved slowly along the street. It was a solemn moment to walk together, black and white, young and old, feeling as one. The painful heaviness of guilt and then, so close, the silent forgiveness of those one walked among.

In front and behind filed hundreds of men and women and children whose step was not only the measured toll of mourning for the inhumanity of weeks gone by but loud protest against those countless voices never raised in protest—that cowardice or plain indifference which looks on the covert bigotry and injustice of northern and western cities in the hypocrisy of silence.

As the throngs moved smoothly toward the steps of the city hall where memorial services were to be held, many on-lookers came forward hat in hand and joined the marchers quietly. A congregation just spilling from their service stood by and watched, like other knots of curious people leaning in the shadows. Unlike these, however, who perhaps were simply unaware of what is being said to them in the streets, were others known more sorely missed, who knew the day and hour of the march. For every person who came and marched hundreds had remained silent, had lost the opportunity to acknowledge openly the shame which their society must bear and the personal guilt which they must feel within themselves for the actions of hate-crazed men. They failed to pledge themselves to new and deeper understandings among men of different races and backgrounds.

Rev. R. J. Paul in his eulogy, delivered from the topmost steps of the City Hall, warned against the human inclination to violence in times of great grief and public outrage and said that only greater shame would be its fruits. "We do not need the hotheads who are motivated by emotion alone but those who are concerned with the welfare of man and the means of arriving at a better understanding. . . . We are in need of sober thinking, sober planning, and careful unity of all men and the need to struggle together until brotherhood and love would dispel the prejudices and petty feelings of narrow minds.

At the end, strains of the new familiar "We Shall Overcome" drifted out into the streets. It seemed as if perhaps the words were at last falling on ears that heard and reaching hearts that were moved.

Notice

This afternoon at 4:00 in the WES room, faculty members among them Professors Boyce, Brandt, Clayton, Gilbert, Fox, Le-long, and Seay, will answer questions about university life and academic conditions in the countries in which they have lived so that students who plan to apply for Fulbright Fellowships now or in future years will be better informed. The meeting is open to all students.

Job Situation Is Dismal Says Local NAACP Chief

The basic attitude of most people in Colorado Springs about integration is "Don't wake the sleeping giant," said Sam Hunter Jr., head of the local chapter of the NAACP. He went on to say that "This is the major attitude to be hiked." In the rest of the interview Mr. Hunter went on definitively to deal with the present status of integration here.

Q—Approximately how many Negroes are there in Colorado Springs?

A—I would guess, and it's only a guess, 5,000 to 6,000 Negroes.

Q—General Heintges at Ft. Carson said last summer that there is no discrimination in Colorado Springs. What is your reaction to that statement?

A—it is evident that the General is not abreast with the problems of his troops in town. There the general made the statement to the effect that it was hoped the general knew more about military matters than he did about the racial situation in Colorado Springs. I definitely take issue with his statement.

Q—In what area is discrimination most prevalent in Colorado Springs?

A—Housing. The Negro has difficulty finding the house he wants in the area he wants for the amount of money he can afford to pay. His freedom of movement is severely limited.

Q—Has there been any block-busting you know of in Colorado Springs?

A—Not in the sense that the term is normally used.

Q—Have there been cases of white owners wanting to restrict Negroes from buying into white neighborhoods?

A—Not that I know of. In fact the Negroes' main advances have been through owner sales. However there hasn't been a proper climate for the real estate agents to work under.

Q—What is the job situation of Negroes in Colorado Springs?

A—Dismal. There are about half a dozen Negroes employed by the city. The same holds true for the county government.

The telephone company employs less than 10 Negroes, mostly in maintenance.

In schools there are only 11 Negro teachers out of a 1,000 total, and one Negro who works in maintenance.

In the banks the situation is no better. There is not one Negro with a position higher than that of a messenger.

The retail stores employ, I think, two Negroes in the whole county. That will give you some idea.

Q—Are you for some type of quota system?

A—No. The Negro wants a chance to compete on an equal basis for jobs, to be judged on his ability, not to be given preferential treatment because he is a Negro. I should not hope for any redress of grievances by a quota system, just that when the next job comes up that there is an open attitude on the part of the employer.

Q—What about educational opportunity for the Negro child in Colorado Springs?

A—it is good. I would say a Negro has as good an educational opportunity here, if he applies himself, as the white child.

Q—Then you think the drawing up of school districts has been fair?

A—Yes, the lines are fair. However the housing situation has created some situations where an integrated school soon becomes a segregated school. But that is housing.

Q—Is there any discrimination among public accommodations?

A—Public accommodations are pretty well in control except for the isolated incident which occasionally crops up. The only trouble has been with motels but, in this area, the motel association in town attempts to do right. There is not any widespread discrimination left in public accommodations.

Q—How active has the NAACP in Colorado Springs been in the past? What of the future?

A—The NAACP was in the background of a case that eliminated segregation in theatres in the 1940's; generally though the organization has been passive. Except for the march last Sunday there have been no demonstrations. However, the entire approach of the NAACP underwent a reappraisal at the Chicago convention of last summer. A decision was made to stress more direct action in the future in order to focus attention on the Negro's problems. We, in Colorado Springs, would like to see the situation worked out satisfactorily by negotiation. If that doesn't succeed, there may be more direct action taken here by the NAACP.

Q—What do you think the basic attitude of the people of Colorado Springs is toward the Negro and discrimination?

A—A complacency. Don't wake the sleeping giant. This is the type of attitude we have to whip.

The election committee of ASCC extends its apology to the class of 1965 for the unconstitutionality of their recently held class elections. There will be another Junior class election next week on Tuesday, October 8th. Voting machines will be set up in Rastall Hall.

The three candidates for the final election are Terry Foville, Coleman Robinson, and Jim Schultz.

FRESHMAN ELECTION RESULTS

Gordon Aoyagi, vice-president
Richard Lopez, secretary-treas.

Homecoming Preview

The Colorado College Homecoming Weekend, October 17-20, sponsored by Blue Key Honor fraternity, offers a variety of worthwhile events for the entire college community. Friday, October 18, the main event of the afternoon will be the inauguration of President Lloyd E. Wornat at 2:00 p.m. in the Central Quadrangle near Perkins Hall followed by a reception. For interested theater goers, the CC Players will present George Bernard Shaw's play "Arms and the Man" at 8:30 on Friday and 7:15 p.m. on Saturday in Perkins Hall. Tickets are $1.25 and will be on sale at Rastall desk.

The theme of this year's Homecoming will be "TV Commercials." There will be house decoration competition among men's and women's social organizations. The houses will be displayed Friday and Saturday nights. Judging of the house decorations will start at 8:00 p.m. Friday night.

At 9:00 that evening the pep rally for the Homecoming football game will be held in front of Cassitt Hall. At this time the Homecoming Queen will be crowned. Queen candidates are as follows: Sue Halton, Alpha Phi; Sue Somerville, Delta Gamma; Carri Jacobson, Gamma Phi Beta; Nancy Bowers, Kappa Alpha Theta; and Sharon Schackelford, Kappa Kappa Gamma. Following the rally will be a dance in Cassitt Gym featuring the Cotton Club Band.

On Saturday, after the football game with Concordia at Washburn Field, the fraternity houses and sorority lodges will have open houses.

The highlight of the weekend will, of course, be the Homecoming Dance (semi-formal) from 9:30-1:00 a.m. in the Broadmoor Hotel Ballrooms and Main Dining Room. This dance will feature two bands, one twist and one dance band. The whole floor of the hotel (including bar) will be available to students.

For further information, contact Matt Railey or Steve Sabol, homecoming chairman.

Letter to the Editor

A Letter Directed to Members of ASCC

To Whom It May Concern —
This note is directed toward those who are still strongly disatisfied with the results of this year's freshman orientation. Black and Gold realizes that some individuals were connected with freshman week who had no desire to participate in such activities. This is an unfortunate circumstance and our organization intends to do what it can during the remainder of the year to dispel the general feeling among some factions on the campus that our only goal is to incite riots for one week out the year. We already have two social functions in the planning stages, and judging from the turnout for the last two football games and Greek Weekend, I feel greatly encouraged that these functions will produce favorable results.

Concerning next year's freshman week, take heart! Many of our rowdy and infamous members will be removed from the picture by graduation, and their replacements will be taken out of this year's freshman class. These new members who were so violently opposed to the year's orientation week this year will undoubtedly have quite a stabilizing effect on the organization and insure that this sort of thing does not happen again. — John Barker, pres., Black & Gold

Again it seems more relevant to cover the topics at hand in the last ASCC meeting than to go over the function of each of the committees. Also, it would be rather nice to refrain from discussing these committees as the chairmen have still not been appointed.

The main topic of interest was the discussion concerning the Junior class presidency. Contrary to some belief on the campus, any problems which arose with the election did so because of the executive council rather than because of any of the candidates. Constitutionally, the election was held illegally. It stipulates in the constitution that only three persons may run for a specific position. This is somewhat different when the class commissioners are selected as there are three positions to be filled. When a vacancy is filled it is stated, ARTICLE I, Section 5m, that the nominations will be taken in a class meeting and in the event that more than three candidates are nominated, there will be a primary at the class meeting to narrow the field down to three. The final election is to be held among the three only. Because of the fact that the ASCC election for Junior class president did not follow these standards, the Executive Council voted unanimously to hold a re-election from the point of the nominations. In other words, the original four candidates will be considered nominees and will answer questions to narrow the field to three. In the case that one of the original candidates should decide on his own to withdraw, only a final election will be necessary, otherwise the final election will follow the primary. It is hoped that all juniors will vote.

Respectfully submitted,
Karen McVaine,
ASCC Secretary

Fulbright Anticipants

From Scandinavia to Pakistan, Colorado College faculty members have studied and lived in every corner of the world. To aid those students interested in the Fulbright Scholarship program, Professors Boyce, Clayton, Fox, and others will answer questions about university life abroad at 4:00 to 4:30 p.m. in WES room at Rastall Center. All interested students are urged to attend.

Prejudice Is a Result of Training According to Researchers on Topic

By Professor Van B. Shaw

"Why prejudice?" is a question that has been investigated by many persons from different academic disciplines and with widely varying frames of reference. Although total agreement has not been reached, most of the research shakes down to the proposition that prejudice is not "natural" in the sense of being innate, inborn, or inevitable but, rather, that it is an acquired trait which is the product of learning — learning from conscious instruction, from observation or from personal experience and faulty generalization. What is said about prejudice in general is, of course, equally true about racial prejudice and prejudice toward various minority groups.

Simpson and Yinger, in their book, Racial and Cultural Minorities have summarized three major approaches that have been used to explain the presence of prejudice.

Much, perhaps most, prejudice, they contend, can be explained in terms of enculturation. If an individual grows up within a society or group which is thoroughly prejudiced, the prejudiced point of view is all that is presented to him. He learns it as he learns other aspects of his culture. If no opposing or contending points of view are presented, the individual comes to think of the cultural position as natural, as the way things are. Other ideas do not even occur to him. Only under highly exceptional conditions would he think of any alternate point of view. Later exposure to less prejudiced viewpoints must contend with the fact that prejudice has been firmly set in his personality organization. They do not have an equal chance for acceptance by him because the prejudiced point of view is so thoroughly ingrained. Furthermore, his experience reinforces his prejudice, since the discriminations engendered by the existing prejudice will usually assure that the group which is the object of prejudice is, indeed, loath, poor, subservient and seemingly "inferior." Thus a vicious circle has been created: prejudice denies opportunity, lack of opportunity results in lowly status and lowly status is used as a proof of essential rightness of prejudice itself. Only dramatic, perhaps forced, conditions can operate to break this vicious circle.

Although the logic of this approach explains the presence of prejudice as a group phenomenon at a given time, it does not explain how the prejudice got underway in the first place, nor does it explain why one group rather than another is chosen as the object of prejudice.

Two other sources of prejudice have been suggested as explanations of its origins. The first of these is a personality "needs" theory and depends upon the oft-cited relation between frustration and aggression. It is frequently entitled the scapegoat theory. In simple form this approach maintains that persons who are unusually frustrated by having their progress toward their goals and ambitions blocked, build up frustrations which lead to an unhealthy accumulation of "free-floating" hostility which leads to aggression. When this aggression cannot be directed back against the frustrating agent (that agent may be unknown, may be generalized social process rather than a specific human being or group, or may be too powerful to attack without the danger of severe retaliation) then the aggression is often displaced onto minority group members. This is especially true if they are not in a position to strike back and if they have already been designated as an appropriate object of aggression.

Having directed his aggression against the minority group, such a person is likely, however, to have an unconscious sense of guilt, a hidden knowledge that, somehow, he is not playing the game quite fairly. To obviate this guilt he often uses two psychological mechanisms. The first of these is rationalization: the citation of socially acceptable, instead of the real reasons for his actions. One of the most popular of these is the position that the minority group member is biologically or intellectually inferior and could not profit from equal treatment anyhow. As this is challenged, new rationalizations (separate but equal, for example) arise to help assuage the guilt feelings of the prejudiced aggressor. A second psychological mechanism often employed for similar purposes is projection: the process of attributing to the object of prejudice the "evil" traits and motives which are actually his own. For example, historically, sexual exploitation across racial lines has most frequently been practiced by white males. Some authorities have attributed the wide-spread feeling that Negro males desire sexual relations with white women and the consequent elaborate protective screens thrown up around white males to projection rather than a realistic appraisal of the situation.

A third explanation of prejudice is sometimes designated the sociological or group-conflict theory. It maintains that many material (money, goods, services) and many social (prestige, praise, recognition) needs are in short supply. In the struggle for such short-supplied commodities, individuals join with others to have them, and while they want. Others have done the same and groups come into conflict in seeking "their share." To win, one must fight aggressively and prejudice can serve as a ready weapon. It can justify one's conflict behavior both to himself and to the public at large. Since it is group conflict, the process of stereotyping enters—all members of the opposing group are categorized as being alike, allowing no play for individual differences. It is, perhaps, no mere chance that anti-Japanese prejudice was fanned in election years in California, that Southern politicians appeal to the local prejudices to win elections even though they, themselves, may be relatively unprejudiced, and that it was California truck farmers (against whom the Japanese-Americans were very successful competitors) who were among the strongest backers of the movement to relocate the Japanese during World War II.

This cultural transmission, personality needs, and group conflict have been cited as major causes of realistic appraisal of the situation. These theories explain everything. One explains how prejudice is transmitted but not how it originated. Another explains, at least partially, how prejudice may have arisen, but not why it is applied to one group and not to another. Still another may explain why specific groups are chosen as an object of prejudice but not why there are different levels of prejudice among individuals in the prejudiced group. We can probably safely say that the greater amount of prejudice will be found among those individuals and groups in which all three sources converge.

Lantern for the Future

America is a country without a memory. Forced to the forefront by its history, a history it does not understand, America seems confounded in deciding what direction it should follow. What we have succeeded in doing is to seduce ourselves into believing that it is our wealth and power, given to us because of some intrinsic righteousness, that has made us great. What we fail to remember, or merely devalue, is that we were for most of our history the country other countries looked to for guidance. This was before we had either wealth or power, for we had an ideal. We said all men are created equal, and we seemed to mean it. We said that men could worship as they pleased, and we defended it. Sometimes we equivocated and took a step backwards from the meanings of our ideals. But the whole force of our history has been toward increased freedom for everyone.

The challenge of this generation is to remember this direction and value it by increasing its momentum. We must not forget that America is the coming together of all the persecuted peoples of the earth. Therefore, more than any other country, we should not tolerate persecution within our midst. We are a country that revolted against the status quo; therefore we should understand better than others the aspirations for freedom in the countries undergoing the revolution of greater expectations.

We cannot allow ourselves to let our universal ideals become particularistic in nature. We cannot let America become a private preserve of the privileged. If we longer value our ideals, millions in Africa, Asia, and Europe do. Let us not let ourselves be caught in the anomalous position of trying to tamp down the desire for universal freedom that our own beliefs have caused. But we need not fear any of this if we can remember the meanings of our past, for if we do we will need no other lantern for the future.

CC-The Time Is Now

Colorado Springs has discrimination. There is no denying it. But this statement alone has little meaning if it remains a statement, a sentence spoken and a problem unsolved.

What we must admit is that the time has come for us to act, and to act decisively. To do less is to compromise our belief in American Freedom.

Our course of action is simple; we must live what we believe. We must replace prejudice with trust, discrimination with dignity. This does not mean we should seek out Negroes as friends, but that we should accept them, and other less striving minority groups, as people. The rest will take care of itself.

In some ways, the recognition of discrimination within and without the college community is a test of our commitment to our basic values. We must be willing to actively destroy prejudice by personal and social introspection. We must agree to picket, if necessary, or publicly protest if we witness discrimination.

Colorado College cannot stand passively by as it has so often done. If we cannot act as a college and as students, then we cannot pretend to seek anything but meaningless idealism and lofty sentiment.

Perhaps it will be on this issue that the question of the potential greatness and sense of involvement of the college will be determined; if we can effectively mate our idealism with reality.

We must speak now, or forever hold our peace.

—Heckman

Biological Bases for Segregation Subject of Booklet by Dr. George

By Merle C. Ricklefs

"We should value every man according to his merit—within his own race," states biologist W. C. George in a recent publication, "The Biology of the Race Problem." The 1962 booklet, prepared by commission of the Governor of Alabama, presents the alleged biological bases for segregationist views on the race problem.

In attempting to give a fair account of Dr. George's arguments, it was found impossible to avoid occasional lapses into editorialism. Therefore, the article should not be judged upon as completely unbiased. But then again, neither is George.

The former head of the Department of Anatomy, University of North Carolina Medical School, contends basically that the "gene pool" of the Negro race is such a unique program leading to Negro-American mixture would be detrimental to this country, and the progress of western civilization in general. His report is based on the findings of some 41 authorities in a wide range of academic fields, and this writer assumes that his evidence is impeccable, although his conclusions, perhaps, are not.

Professor George begins by stating that individuality is evident in infants even before there has been environmental molding, and that these differences may be properly traced to different general characteristics: physical, emotional, and intellectual. In short, not only are babies not born alike, they vary so greatly and in such complex ways that the differences may be said to be infinite. As soon as discovers, however, that his "infinity" of differences is severely limited by the racial factor.

Non-morphological racial differences are first considered, which include the apparent Negro tendencies toward lack of initiative, undependability, etc. His sources for this view are studies of African natives including an 1892 work describing the characteristics of the "savages."

Intelligence

He comments that, in various types of intelligence tests, six times as many whites as Negroes fall in the "gifted child" category, whereas six times as many Negroes as whites fall in the range of the "feeble-minded." Quoting Columbia psychologist Henry E. Garrett, Professor George insists that the "greatest Negro 'lag' is in tests of an 'abstract nature—for example, problems involving reasoning, deduction, comprehension . . . the functions called for in education above the lowest levels." He points out that even in areas where the Negro has been granted educational equality (for example, in Wilmington, North Carolina, for "decades" after 1865), there has been no significant change in data.

It is indeed unfortunate that Dr. George does not bless the reader with a genealogical explanation of the fact that "Differences between Negro and white children increased with chronological age, the gap in performance being largest at the high school and college levels." Even more unfortunate is that he does not present the views of a companion article to Dr. Garrett's (U. S. News and World Report, Aug. 14, 1961), in which Dr. D. J. Kling, head of the Department of Psychology, University of Chicago, deprecates the testing conditions, and points out that intelligence ranges within the races are far greater than any possible average difference between them. But it is in his discussion of crime that the author's evidence becomes most interesting.

Crime

Dr. George demonstrates that the crime rate among Negroes is considerably higher than that among whites. Here he recognizes the role of environment, but maintains that there is likewise a large racial factor that may be disregarded only at great human cost. "This is one of the few points in his essay at which Dr. George gives no biological evidence. He does point out, however, that the crime rate of South African Negroes is much higher than that of United States Negroes, but regrettably makes no comment as to the advisability of mixture of the two groups.

In Chapter VI he considers "Inheritance of Intelligence and Behavior in Man," and demonstrates the existence of hereditary factors in the appearance of genius, crime, and mental abnormality. The point is made that these tendencies seem to prevail in certain families, from which fact the writer concludes, ". . . heredity is an important factor in determining the character of a population." It must be admitted that the sudden leap from family to population (and, by inference, to race) is a little appalling to those uninitiated in Dr. George's system of logic.

His final conclusion of a biological nature is that racial differences are hereditary. "Genes in Negroes and whites are common to both races, to all races of men . . . Many other genes, and the traits that result from them, are characteristic of one race or the other." He neglects to define which groups of characteristics are part of the exclusive genetic heritage of each race, however.

Then, turning briefly to history, Dr. George demonstrates that the Negro race has never created a civilization of note. "The white man's part in history is predominant," he says, commenting also on the contributions "of Mongloids in China and in pre-Columbian North and South America . . . and of . . . people of unknown race in southwestern India." After refuting the various arguments supporting environment as a primary factor in the lack of a great African Negro civilization, he concludes with a "Guide to Social Justice and National Greatness."

The Future

It is "our opportunity and clear duty," he maintains, to "1) 'Avoid those actions that seem destined to bring about deterioration in the quality of our genetic pool . . . it means the avoidance of any compulsory programs that would tend to bring about the mating of well-endowed, potentially creative people with poorly endowed, uncreative people.' The reader should apparently assume that the term 'well-endowed, potentially creative' is synonymous with 'white,' whereas its opposite is equatable with 'Negro,' since the author makes no case for the selection of proper mates within the races.

(2) "Adopt programs that have good promise of raising the quality of our pool of genes and so increasing the number of able and wise people in our population." What these programs might be, he does not say.

(3) "Improve the quality of our environment so as to permit and stimulate the fruition of all our good genetic potentialities in order to further increase the chances for the production of wise leaders and able people at all levels." Again he does not clarify the point, only commenting that "it is apparently more difficult to tell what is good environment than it is to tell what is good heredity."

(4) "White people should assist Negroes in providing as good an environment for their children as they are capable of; but for the parents to send their children to school in as bad an environment as Negroes can and do create is neither social justice nor wise national policy."

This sudden emphasis on environment rather than "gene pools" is a little unnerving, but even more so is his final apology for the necessity of hurting the feelings of "some fine and able Negroes, but the alternative is greater tragedy." In George's view, even these "fine and able Negroes" cannot be trusted to aid in the preservation of our "gene pool," in which float, apparently, all hopes for humanity's future. The role of the "poorly-endowed" white in all this is unclear, although he never denies his existence.

It has been the attempt of this article to be fair both to Dr. George and to the reader. Hopefully, the temptation to use trivia as "fodder for refutation" has been successfully avoided, and only the more basic and telling of the biologist's points have been considered. The author's contribution has been great, for the virility of the traditions of scientific inquiry depend upon the ability of someone like Dr. George to ably present views of an unorthodox nature. And to consider the race problem from an exclusively ethical, legal and moral viewpoint would be unrealistic, if there are also pertinent scientific materials.

Professor George's data remains unrefuted; his writing style is excellent; his credentials are impressive. One can only hope to take issue with his logic, a not inappropriate mode of analysis, since Dr. George himself is quite concerned with the logic of issue.

He comments in conclusion, "I can do little more than present the facts. Study and action by the American people are necessary to correct the condition." This writer can only add a quiet and humble "Amen."

Comparative Study of Employment Practices Made

By Genevieve Vaughn

A comparative study of the employment of members of minority groups (Negro and Mexican) in Colorado Springs in 1957 and 1963 shows little change in the number of minority group members hired, or in the capacity in which they work, with the exception of a noticeable increase in sales workers and a small increase in professional employees.

In 1957 the Unity Council sent 100 questionnaires to firms in Colorado Springs. Of those who received 80 answers; 7 firms declined to answer, and 13 could not answer accurately, or did not have time. In answer to the question, "Do you at present hire members of minority groups?" 21 replied that they did not. The firms employing members of minority groups employed 20 in unskilled labor positions, 34 in custodial or domestic service positions, 15 in skilled or semi-skilled labor, 5 for sales work, 8 as clerical workers, 6 in supervisory or managing positions, and 3 in a professional capacity (undefined).

In September of 1963, a survey conducted by the TIGER, in which volunteers interviewed 223 store managers, showed similar results. Seventy-two of the firms contacted hired members of minority groups in the following capacities: unskilled work, 20; custodial or domestic service, 35; skilled or semi-skilled labor, 16; sales work, 23; clerical workers, 9; supervisory or managerial, 15; professionals, 8.

The same question with regard to hiring practices in the past showed similar results except for a marked increase in sales workers since 1957: (5 to 23).

Owners of small firms tended to be more reluctant. Large firms usually had a national policy of non-discrimination in hiring. It was in large firms also, that members of minority groups held more responsible positions. This is due probably to the size of the firms and their greater job opportunities as well as to their non-discriminatory policies. Beauty salons and loan companies tended to discriminate.

Eighteen firms contacted by the TIGER declined to answer. Only about half of the firms had received applications for work from minority group members.

Forty of those who had never hired a member of minority group added of their own accord that they were willing to hire qualified people regardless of race if they had an occasion to hire. Three declared they would not "for personal reasons" or because "the public wouldn't like it." A few others were evasive when questioned. One interviewer was bodily removed from the premises. One was told that demonstrations are not the American way, but Communist. Many of those interviewed showed genuine concern for the problems of members of minority groups. Several felt that lack of education and training were a major factor in the concentration of minority group members in unskilled occupations. This also was brought out in the 1957 survey. One real estate agent was disturbed because Negroes who were poor financial risks sometimes felt they were not sold to because of prejudice. The same man said often members of minority groups were silently defiant, but he felt this should be ignored, and cited an example where this defiance disappeared when the person in question was reassured and made to feel welcome. One man said, "They should all be put on a boat to China and the boat sunk. They just think they have problems."

A woman said she believed some stores have hired minority group members only since discrimination became an issue, either out of conviction or because it was a wise policy. This may explain the rise in sales personnel hired. One man said members of minority groups were poor workers. Another praised them highly. Several people "didn't want to get mixed up in this racial business." Most people felt that Colorado Springs had no racial problem at all. In many cases it could be inferred, if one observed their manner and the way of speaking, either unsure or flatly confident, that they preferred to believe this, and avoid the problem altogether because of a refusal to admit they did not really wish to have anything to do with members of minority groups, especially Negroes. This refusal to admit there is a problem, said a Negro minister who was interviewed, is the greatest problem to be faced.

To evaluate the accuracy of the survey in describing the position of the minority group member is somewhat difficult. The rise in sales personnel is a positive sign. The vehement reaction of a few people and the evasiveness of others is an honest admission of discrimination in a few others speaks for itself.

The Unity Council report indicated that there was a fair degree of reticence to hire a minority group member in a non-management position. The poll taken by the TIGER did not touch on this point. The minority member's known disadvantage of a poor education was underlined. The lack of applications and expressed willingness of quite a few employers to hire any qualified person was encouraging. However, it was definitely shown that there exists a sizeable percentage of the population who simply put the question from their minds.

America the Beautiful

By Terry Winograd

To see the real meaning of a problem, it often helps to take a step away and look at it from an objective viewpoint. When it is a national problem, the best way to do this is to hear the views of those from other nations. This week, four of our foreign students were interviewed on the subject of racial discrimination. Here is an indirect transcription of the interviews of Abiodun Afonja, Tom Althaus, Eygio Eyjolfssdottir, and Solomon Nkivane.

Q—Have any of you been personally involved in any cases of racial discrimination?

Sol—In general, I have run into very little of this. There was one particular incident here in Colorado Springs which was bad. The first year I was here I needed a place to live between the end of school and the beginning of summer school. I checked at every motel in the area and even had the help of three professors in doing this. But one place would give me a room and I ended up going to a cheaper one. This happened again after summer school.

Usually I avoid situations which might lead to trouble. I'm here for education, and there is probably a lot of discrimination I don't see because I don't look at it that way. As a foreign student, I am often treated differently than an American Negro would be.

Abbe—That is very true. A friend of mine who is a journalist was visiting this country a few years ago. He went into a church one Sunday, and when he sat down to a pew, the family sitting there moved away. Later during the service, the minister announced that there was a visitor from Africa. Afterwards, the man who had moved away came up to my friend and apologized and even invited him to dinner, saying that he was sorry—he hadn't known he was an African. This is the same attitude found in a lot of places. My skin is just as black as an American Negro's. Prejudice must be based on something else or something makes them see past my skin.

Q—What is the general feeling about this problem in your country?

Tom—There are a lot of people in Europe who think that Americans are bad, but most are confused. We haven't had the history that you have, so we can't understand the situation. It could occur in many different ways in other places—depending on the history involved. For instance, in Switzerland we have a minority of Hungarian immigrants. There are some Swiss who feel that these are all "gay good for nothings," much the same way some Americans feel about Negroes. There is a difference in the fact that for us it is never more than a matter of prejudice, not discrimination. Also here you have whole states preaching this denial of human rights as official policy.

Eygio—We have no Negroes in Iceland, so the problem is hard to imagine. When I came to New York, I was disgusted at the way I was treated. I stayed with some Icelandic people who had been here for just a few years, but they were already beginning to think like Americans in being prejudiced.

There is a lot written about it in our newspapers, and most people are disgusted by the situation. When I friends said "You can't go to America. Before they let you in, they don't you have to kill two or three Negroes?" She was joking, but it shows how a lot of people feel.

Q—Do you think this is strictly an American problem?

Abbe—There are prejudices of some type almost everywhere. It is a human problem which everyone faces. The difference is that in America the Constitution promises equality to everyone, but the people don't give it to Negroes. In South Africa, for instance, there is discrimination, but it isn't this hypocritical. They don't say one thing and do another like you do. We can at least plead with them to change.

In Nigeria we have no racial discrimination. There isn't even any feeling against intermarriage. We have tribal prejudices, but these never involve the refusal of rights.

Q—Do you think we are coming closer to a solution of this problem?

Sol—The problem will be solved over a long period of time, but it is not being done in the right way. This fighting and violence will lose more than it wins, for when it is over there will be hate left in the hearts of Americans, stopping the chance for meaningful human relationships.

The thing people must do is commit themselves. Those who say much but do nothing are hurting the situation. They must be willing to sacrifice for a commitment. Until they do, there will be strife.

Abbe—After people have been oppressed for so long, they reach a point where they don't care if they live or die. The older generation of Negroes was willing to take the situation as it existed, but the new generation has reached the breaking point. The violence cannot be avoided. It will happen because of the situation—because of history.

Tom—The important thing is for Americans to realize that this is a human problem, not the "Negro's problem." They have to think of them as an equal human beings, not as members of an inferior group fighting for their rights. Many times, even those who consider themselves liberals are not thinking on this basis, and they must for any good to be done. This will eventually come about over a period of two or three hundred years, as the older generations die out and history becomes more distant.

Eygio—If Negroes are different, it is because the white man's society has made them different. It has built this difference to maintain its own prejudice. This is too old and deep-seated to be ended without much difficulty, but eventually there will be an end.

GLAD RAGS

The homds of spring are on winter's traces. Soon buds the crocus, soon trills the giant eodcor, soon come the new spring fashions to adorn our lissome limbs.

And what will the American college student wear this spring? Gather round, you rascals, and light a Marlboro Cigarette and enjoy that fine mellow tobacco, that pure white filter, and possess your souls in sweet content, and listen.

As everyone knows, campus fashions have always been casual. This spring, however, they have gone beyond being merely casual: they have become unkeshifi.

The object is to look madly improvised, gaily spur-of-the-moment! For example, why don't you glide try wearing a peasant skirt with a dinner jacket? Or madador pants with a bridal veil? Or Bermuda shorts with bronze breastplates? Be rakish! Be impromptu! Be devil-take-the-hindmost!

And, men, you be the same. Try an opera cape with sweat pants. Or a letter-sweater with kilts. Or a strait jacket with hip boots. Be bold! Be daring! Be a tourist attraction!

But all is not innovation in college fashions this spring. In fact, one of the highlights of the season turns time backward in its flight. I refer, of course, to the comeback of the powdered wig.

This charming accoutrement, too long neglected, has already caught on with undergrads everywhere. On hundreds of campuses the bossa nova is giving way to the minuet, and patriotic undergraduates are dumping British tea into the nearest harbor. This, as you may imagine, does not sit well with King George III who, according to reliable reports, has been stamping his foot and uttering curses not fit to reproduce in this family newspaper. For that matter, a lot of our own people are steamed up too, and there has even been some talk about the American colonies declaring their independence of England. But I hardly think it will come to that. I mean, how can we break with the mother country when we are dependent on her for so many things—Insney-wadsey, Minik balls, trouser snuffers, and like that? See, on the other hand, relies on us for turkeys, Marlboro Cigarettes, and Route 66. So I say, if Molly Pitcher and those other Radcliffe hotbeds will calm down, and if gentlemen will cry "Peace! Peace!" we may yet find an amicable solution to our differences. But let not our British cousins mistake this willingness to negotiate for weakness. If fight we must, then fight we will! Paul Revere is saddled up, the rude bridge arches the flood, and the ROTC is armed!

But I digress. We were smoking Marlboro Cigarettes—O, splendid cigarette! O, good golden tobaccos! O, pristine pure white filter! O, fresh! O, tasty! O, soft pack! O, flip top box! O, get some!—we were, I say, smoking Marlboros and talking about spring fashions.

Let us turn now to the season's most striking new feature—pneumatic underdrawers. These inflatable garments make every chair an easy chair. Think how welcome they will be when you sit through a long lecture! They are not, however, without certain dangers. Last week, for example, Rimlaund Signifos, a sophomore at the University of Pittsburgh, fell out of a 96th story window in the Tower of Learning. Thanks to his pneumatic underdrawers, he suffered no injury when he struck the sidewalk, but the poor fellow is still bouncing—his seventh consecutive day—and it is feared that he will starve to death.

© 1963 Max Shulman

Fashions come, fashions go, but year after year Marlboro Cigarettes, sponsors of this column, bring you the tastiest tobaccos and a pure white filter too. Try Marlboro soon.

Greek News

Alpha Phi

Congratulations to our new pledges—Sue Davis, Beth Fincke, Carole George, Marsha Hayes, Carroll Herndon, Andy Miller, Kris Pochelon, and Mary Gray Sharp! We're glad to have you with us!

Following the regular Monday night meeting, a tea was held with members of the faculty. Refreshments were served, and the evening proved to be most stimulating for everyone.

Delta Gamma

At the Delta Gamma House excitement reigns, As our pledges we welcome; here are their names:

There's Lynn Boyce, Kathleen Clark and Jane Humphrey to name a few, Plus Judy Lockwood, Barb Murray and Sandy Wood too. Congrats to you all as you join us right now, We're happy and thrilled so please take a bow.

Good times we did have with the Phi Delt last week, As we "picnicked" together and a football win we did seek. To their house the DGs went right after the game, For dancing and fun right 'til the end came.

Now congratulations we give to our great new pair, As Chuck Mauritz gives Sara Grogan his Phi Delt pin to wear.

Greek Weekend was here with fun for us all, As we joined the bonfire, open house and football. Greek Games brought excitement as we all shared the fun, And on a rope with the Fijis we tugged 'til we won. The pig was also ours, Judy and Lynn, thanks to you, We all had a good time, we hope you did too!

Kappa Alpha Theta

The Kappa Alpha Theta's welcome five new pledges: Sheila Bachar, Margie Galluzzo, Marsha MacInnes, Ellen Meis, and Nancy Seaman. We were so glad they could join us in the Greek Weekend festivities. Thanks to our "brothers," the Phi Gams, for the picnic held before the game on Saturday. We also wish to thank Ann Herlihy, who did such a good job with George Klein on the Greek Weekend Committee.

The Thetas and the DGs will don costumes depicting "hill-billys" from their home towns to-night at the Theta-DG costume dance held at the Cliff House.

Kappa Kappa Gamma

I guess the first order of business is to say that the Kappas have a tremendous new pledge class. We all want to welcome Peggy Hoover, Becky Connell, and Kathy Pitner, and extend them our fondest congratulations.

Monday night, the Kappas held a chapter dinner at the house, at which some of the alums, and Rev. Burton and family were guests.

We also want to congratulate the Greek Weekend Committee for the marvelous job they did in setting up the program this year.

Other than that, I guess our lives have been rather dull.

Beta Theta Pi

The hard-working Beta football team, worried about its chances in the new flag-ball competition, was delighted by its 31-6 victory over the Phi Delt a week ago last Tuesday. With the confidence attained by this victory and an increase in ability gained by one further strenuous practice, we set out to whittle the Z's out of the Zetas on the following Thursday. Score: Betas 12, Zetas 20. Well, with our confidence reduced, we are again a major threat.

The Betas are proud to have received the all-fraternity Scholastic Trophy during the Greek Weekend assembly last Sunday. Following the assembly, it was placed in a spot of honor in the house. However, unaccustomed as it was to being in the Beta House, it mysteriously ran away sometime during the night. So, if you find a delectable Scholastic Trophy, with "Brasso" running from its eyes, sitting on a curb or hiding somewhere, like the trunk of your car or maybe your closet, please report the find either to us directly or to the F.B.I.

Sigma Chi

Sigma Chi welcomes three new pledges: Bob Ward, Scott Calhoun, and Fred Long. The "Orange Flash," a product of Ray and Denny's Speed Shop, was unable to reach its top speed during the chariot races last weekend due to uncertain difficulties. The competition was very tough this year with such great contenders as the Fijis' "Little Wagon" and the Beta "Flyer." Sigma Chi did win the bike race, thanks to the mighty efforts of Steve Ebert.

This Saturday night the Sharks meet the Jets at the Sigma Chi costume dance, whose theme is from West Side Story. It will be held at Monty's Tavern and the sounds will be provided by Little E and the Green Flames Band from Denver City.

Notice!

Basketball equipment will be issued the afternoon of October 15th. Anyone interested in trying out for the squad should contact Coach Eastlack before that time.

Greek Discrimination?

By Peter Bonavich

The question of discrimination in fraternal organizations has been steadily growing in importance since the end of World War II. At that time, with many veterans returning to college or attending for the first time under the GI Bill, there was considerable outcry against unfair membership practices encountered in both fraternities and sororities.

In the years since 1945, there has been action by the faculty or administration of a number of colleges, both public and private, to curb discriminatory practices in fraternal organizations.

In general, this action has taken the form of an attempt to assert the autonomy of the local chapter of a national organization, to assure the local's independence from outside interference in its pledging and initiation activities. This assertion of local and of undergraduate independence has aroused a storm of protest and retaliatory action from the national fraternal organizations and alumni.

Pressure from National Orgs

When the board of trustees of Lake Forest College issued two edicts in 1961, forbidding national control of fraternity and sorority membership policies, five national sororities revoked the charters of their local chapters. The five were Alpha Delta Phi, Alpha Phi, Alpha Chi Delta, Chi Omega, and Gamma Phi Beta.

In late 1962 the University of Colorado suspended the CU chapter of Phi Delta Theta when that chapter was unable to assert that it was not compelled by constitution, ritual, or government to deny membership to any person because of race, color, or religion. The chapter was later reinstated when the national organization permitted it "local autonomy" and exemption from the "social acceptability" clause of the national constitution.

Also in 1962, the University of Colorado Board of Regents threatened to suspend Delta Gamma sorority if they became convinced that the national organization's action in suspending its Beloit College chapter was prompted by that chapter's pledging of a Negro girl. The national body declared that the Beloit chapter's suspension came as a result of financial mismanagement and had no connection with the question of discrimination.

Subtler Pressures Affect Sororities

Both of these instances deal with explicit pressure, or the possibility of such pressure, from the national organization exerted on the local chapter. There are other, more subtle measures of control often exerted on the local.

Sorority alumnae chapters exert almost without exception an extremely autocratic control over the local chapter. Unlike fraternities, which are generally relatively free of alumni control, the sorority local is subjected to constant scrutiny from its alumna chapter. The local alumna chapter must pass on every girl before she can be either pledged or initiated in most cases. In addition, each potential pledge must obtain a favorable "rec" or recommendation from her hometown alumna group. If the alumnae fail to approve, the girl may not be pledged or, obviously, initiated. The effort, then, has been to free local chapters of fraternities from the fetters of discriminatory pressure from the national organization in the form of constitutional requirements or simple pressure, and to free local sorority chapters from these pressures plus the influence of their domineering alumna chapters. It is an effort to allow the chapters on each college campus complete freedom from all interference in choosing members.

The Local Situation

For Colorado College this effort has taken the form of study and recommendation, with decidedly halting gradual progress toward local autonomy.

In a series of 1958-59 reports, the committee on Undergraduate Life examined the membership requirements and procedures of the Colorado College men's and women's social fraternities. Its mandates were:

(1) To discover whether discriminatory or restrictive clauses designed to exclude persons from membership on racial or religious grounds exist in the constitutions, charters, by-laws, or other written documents of the social fraternities and fraternities at Colorado College.

(2) To discover whether influences outside of the college community interfere with the freedom of student members of social sororities and fraternities at Colorado College to choose new members without regard to race or religion, whether or not discriminatory or restrictive clauses exist in constitutions, charters, by-laws, or other written documents.

The results of the survey showed in relation to (1), that 3 fraternities apparently had no such restrictive clauses in their national constitutions; one contained a reminder that members of each chapter must be "socially acceptable" to other local chapters; and one had a bona fide white clause. According to the Dean of Men J. Juan Reid, this bona fide white clause has since been amended to remove the white provision. Presumably the fraternity with the "social acceptability" clause has retained it.

The inquiry on (2) concluded that fraternities are subject to no mandatory sponsorship procedures; that there are no restrictions on freedom to sign up for rush; that both pledging and initiation are at some point in the local chapter's procedure only by unanimous vote; and that data cards sent to the national in four or five cases did include racial and religious data. It was determined that no formal interference in either pledging or initiation activities had been encountered by the local chapters, nor had membership ever overtly been denied to a student here on account of race or religion. It should be noted, however, that at that time (mid-1958) no Negro had ever signed a fraternity rush card.

The Committee noted that its study had met considerable interference and suspicion, evidently generated at least in part from external factors.

Sorority response to the Committee's study was surprising and disconcerting. All five sororities were found to be free of any overt discriminatory clause in their national organizations. Two required alumna recommendation for membership purposes. When the Committee began, however, to attempt to determine the local chapters' degree of freedom from external control, all five local chapters felt constrained to refer the matter to national consideration, and four of the national organizations then declined to cooperate in the study. One sorority declined independently. Again the committee noted a decided air of suspicion, with the sororities obviously responding to influences outside the college.

The concrete result of this study by CUL was a faculty resolution advocating freedom for all fraternal organizations on the Colorado College campus from ANY outside interference, from outside sources as well as from the college itself, in freely and independently choosing their members.

The issue is at best a cloudy one, and current information is extremely skimpy. The question of outside interference in fraternal membership procedures, and the question of discrimination by fraternal organizations per se remains a lively and a crucial one.

Shore Chapel

Sunday, October 6, 1963
Preacher: The Reverend Clyde Miller

Worship leader: Professor Kenneth Burton

The preacher this coming Sunday in Shore Chapel will be the Reverend Clyde Miller. Mr. Miller is a very fine young Negro minister of the Church of the Good Shepherd on the south side of Chicago. Mr. Miller is the Associate Pastor of this church and is mainly responsible for the Christian education of his congregation and he has done particularly fine work with the high school and college age youth. He participates in a radio program every Sunday evening and acts as moderator for a discussion by young people of issues and concerns which effect them. This has been highly effective.

Sunday evening, 5:00 p.m.

There will be a discussion with Rev. Miller in the W.E.S. Room. The Religious Affairs Committee's guest will speak from his own experience on the nature of prejudice and the vital social issue of racial integration in our country today. He will speak of the desperate struggle of the Negro to overcome the prejudice of those who consider him to be less than a person. A light supper will be provided at a nominal cost.

Monday, October 7th, 4:00 p.m.

W.E.S. Room. Mr. Miller will speak on the subject of particular interest to himself which he developed while taking his theological training and BD degree at the University of Chicago. His discussion topic will be on some aspect of "Theology and Contemporary Literature."

All members of the college community are cordially invited to participate in any or all of these meetings.

TAX REFORM PROBLEM

All members of the Colorado College community are invited to attend an open meeting of Alpha Kappa Psi business fraternity on Wednesday, October 9, in the WES room of Rastall Center at 4 p.m.

Mr. Hotson of the Economics Department will speak on "The Tax Reform Problem." Refreshments will be served following Mr. Hotson's discussion.

Discrimination In Manitou Motels?

By Trish Soule

Twenty-three motels out of 40 consulted in the Manitou Springs area are expecting a Mr. and Mrs. Herbert Jackson from Fort Talmadge, Alabama, Saturday. Twelve of these 40 proprietors might not have been quite so reluctant about accepting this American Negro couple (as their one night guests) had they realized their indeed non-existent status.

The investigation, carried out by telephone, assumed basically the following proportions: An attempt was made with each hotel to secure accommodations for a Mr. and Mrs. Jackson traveling up from Alabama. Of the forty motels with whom contact was made, a number were closing for the winter (5), and some had no vacancies (3), leaving thirty-two motels. Of these three made it a policy of only renting out to customers in person. But with the remaining twenty-nine, reservations were quickly and satisfactorily secured (in a few cases pending deposits) until the point in the conversation where a closing qualification was interjected with "... just one last thing; I would like you to realize that these people are Negro. Is that all right? I'd hate to cause either party embarrassment upon their arrival."

The most startling response here was "That's quite all right, I'm a Negro myself." But for the most part, this statement was followed by a long silence. And in many cases the person just a minute before so accommodating would leave the phone for an obvious consultation. Twenty-three did in the end adhere to their previous arrangements, but accompanied at times by such remarks as, "You know we have to take them."

It was more often the case, however, that upon realization that these customers were to be Negro, the establishment at hand would try to avoid the issue by suddenly throwing out such undefined conditions "Well, we might decide to close before Saturday." Another such reversal occurred in three successive stalls. Accommodations were secured without hesitation for the uncolored Mr. and Mrs. Jackson. Before the conversation had finished, however, policy had altered to one where rooms were not held by reservation, and with voice rising to the defensive, bluntly stating thirdly that they were planning to close down soon and probably would not be open.

The final stand taken in regard to the Jacksons was the outright admission that their presence would be incompatible with business interests in terms of white clientele. This motel admitted quite apologetically that they couldn't afford to take Negro tenants because of the pressure of the white tenants already holding their apartments. At a Manitou lodge, the room which was originally appropriated for Mr. and Mrs. Jackson, happened to lie between two units occupied by Georgians who were traveling together. Startled at first, the lady proprietor explained, "Oh, that will never do," but she very happily arranged for another room across the court and seemed to show no personal antagonism toward the race, despite her sustained feeling that was necessary for the comfort of both parties that they be separated. In a similar case, a unit was held by Louisiana people next to that at first relegated for the Jacksons. The owner in this instance bluntly stated with regard to the Negro couple that "They wouldn't be happy here." Under interrogation, he admitted it would be the Louisiana people who might not be quite so happy, suggesting another motel, with a meek "I'm sorry," at the end. At the last establishment they just quietly said, "No, we don't make it a policy." Many were reluctant, the majority casually indifferent at the end.

For the most part, the attitude was one of nervous apology, insidiously slandered by their refusal to alter their "so called adherence to business interests." Only three dared the definite NO (three out of twenty-nine). But out of the twenty-nine also, few allied themselves to the opposite cause as uniquely and solitarily expressed by the hall and hearty response received from the Garden of the Gods Motel, "No, we won't cause them any embarrassment. They're AMERICAN people and we've got rooms to rent."

CC Tigers Beat Fort Lewis Team Colorado College Glee Club Formed

After one year and two weeks of fruitless competition in ten consecutive games, the Colorado College Tigers finally won a game from the Fort Lewis kids hailing from Durango. The victory at Washburn Field was not a surprise to many people, in that they felt this year's Tiger squad was too talented to lose incessantly.

The game was almost a repeat performance of the last season's events because it was tied 7-7 at half time; even though the Tigers had eleven first downs to the kids two, and had 209 yards on the ground compared to the Fort Lewis team's 102.

Most of these statistics were compiled by quarterback Cubby Bickel's use of three new plays that had been added just for the Fort Lewis defense. These consisted of a pitchout with special blocking, a passing play that featured both Colorado College quarterbacks on the field (one playing "back" and a play known as "Flood Special" in which halfback Ray Jones took the ball directly from the center.

However, the first drive only managed to go to the eleven yard line where a penalty killed the drive. After some very tight defensive work, the Tigers got the ball again and proceeded to march on the field with fullback Steve Sabol doing much of the running. The Bengal team seemed to be regressing down again on the 10 yard line, when Dave Dupree, a fullback just called up from the JV, caught a clutch pass for the touchdown. Sabol's kick was good.

The Fort Lewis Kids quickly marched right back with fullback Earl Moreno receiving a pass from quarterback John Fennelly. Moreno was responsible for most of the yardage on this drive when he chopped off 60 yards on one trap play.

The rest of the first half was devoted to incomplete passing and punting duels on the part of both

Judo Club Meeting

The Colorado College Judo Club will begin the year under the leadership of John Parker and Bill Lange, black belt, Korean Judo Academy.

Last year the CCJC was entered for the first time in the Rocky Mountain Judo Conference along with AFA, CU, CSU, and Colo. Mines. This year the CCJC, besides playing these schools, will send players to the area AAU tournaments and to the National Collegiate Tournament.

Beginning, intermediate, and advanced judo will be taught and sessions with top players in the area will also be held.

All students interested in learning judo or wishing to further their ability are invited to attend the meeting Tuesday, Oct. 8, 7 p.m. in Rastall Center, Room 20'.

Hockey Contest

All students, in particular members of the art department, are invited to submit their ideas for a cover design for the 1963-64 hockey programs. Entries should be submitted to the Athletic Dept. secretary before Tuesday, Oct. 15. The winning design will win for its creator two complimentary tickets to the Peter, Paul, and Mary performance to be held Oct. 17.

CC Soccer Team Downs Aspen Club

On Sunday, September 29, at 1 p.m. the CC soccer team met the Aspen Soccer Club for an exhibition game. The day was sunny, with a light breeze from the south. For three quarters, there was no score, and only in the fourth quarter of a hard-fought game did CC score. Four and 1/2 minutes into the fourth period, center halfback Dick Knight scored with a direct kick through a hole in the human wall Aspen put up in front of the goal. The hole was provided by Captain Tony Bryan, who ducked at the last second as the ball went through where he had been, to surprise the Aspen goalie. Knight also scored the second goal, this time on a penalty kick after an Aspen player touched the ball with his hand inside the penalty area, 8 1/2 minutes into the 22 1/2 minute quarter. The third goal was scored by John Weed, playing left inside, with an assist from Colin Pease, at right inside, who set him up with a beautiful pass, only four minutes from the end of the game. The CC players seemed to be in good shape, and lasted well—a very necessary thing in a game with 45 minute halves and limited substitution, and in general exceeded expectations. On Saturday they play their first league game against the School of Mines, there, at 2 p.m.

Lacrosse May Come to CC But Support, Money Needed

It appears that after several years of thinking, and very little action, lacrosse might come to CC this year. How long it will remain, however, is another question, and one that should be answered by the end of this academic year.

Over the past few years, a few interested individuals approached former President Benezet and Athletic Director Gerald Carle in the hope of receiving the administration's support in organizing a lacrosse team at CC. At those times, none could be given. Soccer was still trying to get off the ground. Nor did the administration feel that it would be wise to subsidize a sport that existed only on paper. But now that soccer has been made a major sport, the administration is willing to aid lacrosse—on one condition. That is: those people interested in initiating lacrosse must demonstrate to the college that lacrosse is not just a fly-by-night affair here, but a sport that will continue to attract students in years to come. This burden rests fully on the undergraduates of the college.

The service of a competent coach, always difficult to find in a sport so seemingly bizarre as lacrosse, has been obtained in Dr. Stabler who has played a great deal while in college and in following years. His services will be extremely valuable, not only as a coach, but also as an organizational force in helping lacrosse get started.

At a recent meeting of interested students only 22 people signed up for the sport, of these 14 have had some experience. For a start, this is an encouraging figure, but more names will be needed. Lacrosse is a grueling sport and, like hockey, many players have to be replaced at regularly short intervals. To even field a team of ten members, about twenty reserves will be needed. Experience is not necessary. We are not in the Rocky Mountain Lacrosse Conference. We do not have to make any significant show of force. We do have to have a large enough group to show that there is interest in the sport worth the administration's support.

Perhaps the largest problem facing lacrosse is that of money. Not including goals and goalie equipment, it costs from $40-$70 to outfit each individual player with the basic necessities of a stick, gloves, helmet, cleats and shoulder pads. Uniforms, of course, would raise this figure considerably. The goals and some other equipment can be obtained from Bacharach-Rasin in Baltimore, free of charge. However this equipment is not a gift, but a loan to encourage the initiation of lacrosse at places like CC. The Denver lacrosse club has also agreed to supply some sticks, and there are, hopefully, one or two interested people in the state who will give some money. Still the problem is an acute one and one that must be met. Enthusiasm, unfortunately, is not enough. Money is needed.

As far as a schedule is concerned, several suggestions have been made. We might play the Air Force Academy, which is anxious to play CC. Also the Denver lacrosse club has agreed to come to CC and play an exhibition game here early in the spring, combining CC team members with theirs to make two fairly equal teams. As yet, no other contacts have been made with other colleges playing lacrosse in the area, but it should be fairly easy to schedule more games, if there is enough interest.

Official practice will begin in the spring, and will be held there times a week on a field which does not yet exist. However, any interested students should start practicing as soon as possible in small groups. If you have no stick, contact either Dr. Stabler or Bill Weiss and they will put you in touch with someone who will lend you one.

As can be guessed, this article is a plea, more than anything else, to encourage CC students to think about, and take a look at lacrosse. Without this support, lacrosse will remain only a dream, and not a valuable reality in the CC athletic program.

Colorado College Glee Club Formed

Sunday, September 29 was the first meeting of the newly formed Colorado College Glee Club.

The club was formed with the idea of giving some of CC's shower songsters a chance to perform for the student body, and gain public recognition on the campus scene. Members are given the opportunity to exploit any ideas they may have in so far as arranging and composing, and individuals who have instrumental talent are encouraged to use this talent in conjunction with the voices of the group for special numbers. Because nearly everyone can carry a tune in the shower and has a fair ear for music, membership in the club is pointed toward these people and not specifically toward the overly talented individual. In short anyone and everyone is welcome.

Projects planned for the organization include everything from serenading the girls' dorms and participation in school talent assemblies and special events, to singing special numbers in church services in the area. Thanksgiving and Christmas programs are being planned in advance.

The Glee Club was initiated by Dave Friend and Dwight Kramer. Dwight, a junior, has had an extensive background in choral and gleeclub directing, and will direct the club, and assist in planning engagements. Dave, a freshman, will act as musical co-ordinator and arranger for the group and be its spokesman. In addition to special arrangements done by Dave, collaboration will be had from professional arrangers and composers at Michigan University and North Texas State University. Since all members' ideas are taken into consideration in the format of the club, its scope is unlimited; everything from Fred Waring to the Limelights to Brahms will be sung—this is why the CCGC is unique on the CC campus.

In its current membership drive, Colorado College Glee Club still has openings for 10 to 20 members. Those wishing to gain recognition for their undiscovered voices and have a lot of fun in the process, come to the next meeting, 2 o'clock Sunday, October 13 in the Shove Chapel Room. Membership is open to freshmen, sophomores, juniors, and seniors.

HELP!

The Colorado College hockey team needs a cover for their hockey program for the current 1963-64 season. This invitation pertains not only to the art department but any interested student. If your drawing is selected as the cover you will receive two tickets to Peter, Paul and Mary. Your entries should be submitted to the Athletic Secretary at Cossitt Hall on or before October 15.

Pantomime Artist Appears Tonight in Perkins Hall

FRANS REYNDERS, MIME, will perform Friday, October 11, at 8:15 p.m., in Perkins Hall.

Fulbright Scholarships

A Fulbright Scholarship is neither a joyride for the student who wants to spend a year abroad nor simply a reward for a high academic average. Fulbright Scholarships are granted according to the student's general record and his ability to do a particular job in a particular university in a foreign country.

All applications by CC seniors for Fulbright Fellowships for 1964-65 must be in Dean Curran's office by October 15th. Applications are available from Professor Paul Bernard, Jackson House. Today's meeting will deal with questions of interest both to graduating seniors and to underclassmen who are considering applying for Fulbright awards in the future.

Under the Fulbright-Hays Act, the US Government makes direct grants for students wishing to study abroad. It also supplies travel funds for students who receive grants from other countries.

The qualifications required for these grants vary considerably. Some countries, particularly Scandinavian countries and nations in Asia, do not require the knowledge of a foreign language for most of their awards. Others, such as France and Germany, require that all students be fluent in the national language. A knowledge of French and German is useful in many countries throughout the world.

Applicants for fellowships need letters of recommendation, a report of their competence in a foreign language (if one is required) and a statement of the project they intend to pursue abroad. Basically this project statement is an explanation of why the student wants to go to a particular country to study a particular subject. It does not require a prospectus for a Ph.D. or even an M.A. thesis. Students may seek the help of the chairman of their major departments, their language teachers, and Professor Bernard, the campus Fulbright advisor, in completing their applications.

Pantomime is an art which throws the entire burden on the expressiveness of body and face, without the beguilements of colorful costumes and settings, the aids of language, or even the insistent rhythms and athleticism of the dance. The number of its exceptionally talented interpreters in any generation is limited to a mere handful.

Frans Reynders, mime, will appear at Colorado College for a performance on Friday, October 11, at 8:15 p.m. in Perkins Hall.

Reynders was a teen-ager in Holland during World War II, and was a member of the Dutch Underground. He has since been a house painter and university and a technician and star of musical comedy in The Netherlands. For more than a year he owned a marionette theatre, for which he wrote the scripts and executed the puppets.

In addition to his appearances in mime performances, Reynders is a free-lance scenic and costume designer and lighting director for theatre, television and motion picture. He came to the United States of which he is now a citizen, after his marriage. He and his American-born wife, who is a psychologist, have a daughter who was born in 1956.

His visit to this campus is one in a series Reynders is making to several colleges and universities in various parts of the nation. He is performing for the fifth season under the auspices of the Arts Program of the Association of American Colleges. As an "extra dimension" of the Arts Program's visit plan, he will give an informal talk on "Principles of the Mime," or as an alternate will conduct a two-hour workshop on the technique of mime and mime improvisations. An original as well as versatile artist, most of his program encores are on-the-spot improvisations on subjects suggested from the audience.

Olin Wins Award for Distinguished Design

Colorado College's $1,500,000 Olin Hall of Science, dedicated a year ago, has won an Award of Merit for Distinguished Design in the 1963 Texas Architecture Competition.

The four-level building was designed by the architectural firm of Caudill, Rowlett and Scott of Houston, Tex. It was built under a grant from the Olin Foundation of New York.

The jury selecting the Colorado College science building consisted of three well-known architects, John York of the University of Oklahoma; Gyo Obata of St. Louis, Mo., and Donald Stevens of Albuquerque, N. M.

NO ELEMENTS OF COMPLEX near completion. The Ice Rink and Freshman Pool will open around November 1.

Elements of Complex

Opening Set for November 1 As Rink, Pool Near Completion

CC's new ice rink and swimming pool will probably be in operation around the beginning of November. The completion date was presently set for the beginning of summer semester. Partially because of questions concerning building materials, construction has been slowed.

The swimming pool is "L"-shaped. The height of the "L" represents the swimming end (which standard olympic size), and the "L", the diving end. There will be one- and three-meter diving ends. Although the pool is necessarily completely enclosed, walls will be windows to the south and east to bring the outdoors in. A final development is scheduled to take between the pool and the ice rink.

An area of Cossitt Hall will be devoted to swimming pool locker rooms, and a covered ramp will meet them with the pool. When completed and a new gymnasium is finally constructed in the old building, Cossitt will be converted to the women's gym and aerobics rooms.

The ice rink is an exact duplicate in size of the Broadmoor Ice Arena, thus facilitating hockey practice. A system of 9.6 inches of pipe winding under the floor and pumping brine at a rate of 1500 gallons per minute maintain the ice. Brine is a salt and water solution which keeps the freezing point of water. A heating plant was more than sized in size to meet this new end.

Dr. Jerrel Lear will be the pool manager and swimming coach, and Tony Frasca, former hockey coach, will be rink manager.

The entire sports and recreation complex, when completed, will include Cossitt Hall, Rastall Gymnasium and Van Dusen Field, Washburn Field and Van Dusen Field, and the ice rink. Hoped-for additions to the building housing the new pool are: a gymnasium, three handball-squash courts, racquetball courts, wrestling and judo areas, modern locker rooms, classrooms, and offices. CC's new gymnasium in Cossitt is standard basketball court size. The complex is being financed through special gifts and alumni private contributions gained from the Colorado College Campaign. A total of $1,500,000 is needed to complete the entire complex. Only $1,000 has thus far been raised. The pool will be named for Gerald Schlessman, the donor of the $150,000 special gift of $150,000. Schlessman is an alumnus of Colorado College. The pool and locker rooms are being built at a cost of $1,000,000.

Peterson Explains Dadaist Movement

Capturing the true spirits of Dada by reading a brief section from the Colorado Springs telephone directory, Dr. Robert Peterson, Assistant Professor of French, introduced his lecture on "Cosa Nostra and Dada: An Exposure" last Tuesday, October 8.

Founded in Zurich, Switzerland in 1916 by French, German and Swiss artists and writers who were disgusted by the insanity that seemed to have gripped mankind during the First World War, Dadaism was created in revolt against all contemporary moral standards and was anti-art, anti-intellectual, anti-society in character. The name of the movement itself was chosen at random from a dictionary in symbolic protest against traditional aesthetic values.

Dr. Peterson noted that the three main innovations of Dadaism were simultaneous poetry, "noise" music, and the collage. Marcel Duchamp's exhibiting a plain porcelain urinal was a typical "trick" by the Dadaists that reflected their view of art and society.

While not many Dada paintings and poems have been preserved, the movement is important in that it foreshadowed Surrealism, which many Dadaists joined after the death of Dada in 1920. Modern authors and painters, such as Jean-Paul Sartre and Jean Miro, show the influence Dadaism has had on present day art.

Having studied the Dada movement while in France, Dr. Peterson is well qualified to speak on the subject. In Paris he knew Tristan Tzara, one of the founders of the movement, and became acquainted with other ex-Dadaists and Surrealists.

ASCC Notes

This week the topic of major concern before the ASCC Executive Council was that of the special paper which the Tiger put out last week. It was brought to the attention of this Council that this paper which the Tiger put out the discussion it was brought out that this information should have been made public for three reasons. Firstly, it is that allowance of seven pages of the Tiger to a discussion of racial prejudice tends to imply that the student body is backing those viewpoints which were presented. The second question is that of whether or not it is proper for the paper to run such articles at the expense of school news. The third question is whether or not the Tiger should run such articles when we must consider that through this medium, the complexion of the Colorado College is being reflected to the outside, whether or not those views represent the views of the individual students. These problems could have been skirted had the Tiger made its intentions to run articles of this type known.

Ray Jones, the president of the Freshman class, stated that it would be incorrect to act negatively and publicly rebuke the Tiger but rather that the ASCC should work up positive suggestions for the bettering of our news medium.

Since the Tiger is technically the "voice" of the students of Colorado College, it is important that those members of the campus with feelings on the matter notify the Tiger. Mr. Jaffe has promised equal space to anyone who feels differently that the last issue might have implied. The issue presently at hand, then, appears to be one of whether or not it is in good taste to proceed with the special issues of the Tiger and if so, how they can be more effective. It is hoped also that should this trend continue, the Tiger will notify the student body of its intentions to run a special issue and thereby allow anyone who may have something to say about it, and also to inform the readers of that issue that it is a special.

Sermon Title: "Of Love and Desire"

Individualism has brought both blessing and curse to the twentieth century. It has offered the chance for a new kind of personal dignity, but it has also raised the specter sometimes desperate "aloneness". We strive for the experience of Community—though without sacrificing individual identity—but frequently find instead that we are a danger to each other. If Community fails, we try to bolster our strength in more material ways, but these are no less disappointing. It is to this situation that Christianity is supremely competent to speak—though its word is not precisely what most of us are wanting to hear, so by a process of "selective inattention" we reduce it to harmless, and unhelpful platitudes. If we will listen without prejudice, however the ancient message of the Church may prove to be relevant even for us.

VARIETY SHOW

Auditions for the 16th annual Student Variety Show will be held from October 7th through the 26th. All those wishing to try out contact Chief Tyree, Donora Sue Jones, Chuck Cornell, or leave a note in the radio box at Rastall desk with your name, act, and address.

The Springs and Things

Paul, Mary and Peter will be at the city auditorium on a one-night stand this Thursday, October 17. Tickets for this event are still on sale at Rastall Desk. Even if you don't like folk singing it would be worth your while to go just to hear Paul's sound effects.

I am told that "The L-Shaped Room" shouldn't be missed, so don't miss it. This week it's at the Broadmoor theatre.

"Lillies of the Field" starring Sidney Porter, "Women of the World" (not "Wordly Women"), Shirley Eaton in "Carry On Nurse," and "Sword of Lancelot"—another version of the Arthur Guinevere—Lancelot triangle, this time with Brian Aherne, Jean Wallace, and Cornell Wilde—are all playing as single features this weekend.

"Fama la Douce" (Shirley McLaine and Jack Lemmon) and Judy Garland's picture, "I Could Go On Singing," are at the Alceida. Marlon Brando and Sandra Dee share the bill at the 8th Street Drive-In in the "Ugly American" and "Tammy and the Doctor" respectively. "Critic's Choice" with Bob hope and Lucille Ball, and "Bye, Bye, Birdie" will be at the View. It looks like drive-in entertainment quality has come to But then again, that nightmare of every CC night matron, "Worms in a Girl's Dorm," (Jim Heckman says it's great!) is playing at the Starlight with Bo Karloff in "Corridors of Blood" Uh-huh!

The Phi Gams have asked me mention that their formal is this Saturday. They're having a cocktail party first, so perhaps they won't mind if a few of you want to crash the dance.

There are rumors in the air of an all-school marshmallow roast to celebrate the fact that we are actually having autumn this year—so save your leaves.

The dogs are still racing and the Broadmoor, at least, has left we won't wait until November 1.

The only party this weekend is being given Sunday afternoon by Professor Robert Ormes for the 17th-20th Century Lit. class. Of course, knowing Mr. Ormes, this may be a swing.

LETTERS to the EDITOR

The letter regarding the situation in the library needs comment.

No one will contend that the library is what it should be, a place of quiet, intended for research and study. However, the letter submitted last week concerning this problem shows remarkable immaturity, insecurity, and down right stupidity.

To brand any particular students responsible for the bedlam in the library merely because of the fact that they are members of college fraternities and sororities, and therefore "frat rats," is in the realm of cheap name calling and classification made prominent by Joseph McCarthy. There is no more validity to these classifications than there is to other well known ones such as "Commie fink," "fuzzy intellectuals," "fratist racist," ad infinitum.

I deeply resent being classified as a library hell-raider merely because I am a fraternity member. Cheap name calling is one of the very things condemned by those who consider themselves to be especially enlightened by their stringent intellectual pursuits. Obviously they support and condone what they condemn. Sign your name. —Fredrich Luft

Dear Sir:

Recently the women students of Colorado College were presented with an unprecedented and, I believe, unprincipled attack on their personal right and privileges as members of the Colorado College Community. As a result of the sacrosanct decision to prohibit the wearing of "cut-offs," the women students have had their private individual lives trespassed upon, and the trust they placed in their Judicial Board betrayed. Apparently those who formulated this decision confused the antiquation of puritanical conformity with what they believe is the obsolescence of personal inalienable rights.

As a male member of Colorado College, I protest the charade of democracy which sired this social injustice, and attempted to ram a comfortable, attractive, and modern style of dress from the Colorado College campus. —Sincerely Joe English

Rights Struggle Is Extension Of Revolution, Farmer States

By Terry Winograd

"The civil rights struggle of today is an extension of the American revolution in its fight for individual freedom." This is not a particularly surprising thesis, nor one which requires deep philosophical insight as its basis. It holds a message which has been often repeated, and which each individual can easily understand. But last Friday night, it was expressed in such a captivating way that it could not fail to stir everyone who heard it.

James Farmer, national director of the Congress of Racial Equality spoke to a gratifyingly large crowd in Perkins Hall. When he began to speak, it was immediately apparent why he holds a high national position in the civil rights movement, for he has the power to sway people and almost religious fervor with which to denounce and maintain loyalty. His deep, carefully controlled voice and his knowledge of subtle speaking techniques cast a spell over the audience as his rapport was immediately established and held through the use of anecdotes, personal experiences, and emotional appeal. The story of a four year old boy learning that he is a second-class citizen rocks much greater punch than any analysis on prejudice which could be written, and its effect was obvious, as the audience was caught by Mr. Farmer's feeling.

The basis of the present movement was reiterated, but again with a new impact, as it was told by one of the founders. The North is condemned along with the South, and therefore worse form of segregation. Mr. Farmer expressed deep concern that there was actually less progress in the part of the country fancying itself as liberal.

Perhaps he did not shake the emptiness of the audience enough, stating that one could be neutral—those who did not take part for civil rights were working against this cause. He did not emphasize personal action in his speech. It was comforting to most to be put with him into the same category of guilt for the Birmingham church bombing, but it wasn't really convincing if one thought of the life he has devoted to the struggle for rights.

The audience didn't want Mr. Farmer to stop, and when the discussion proceeded to Slocum Hall they resisted the lure of punch and jokes to crowd into the lounge, where the talk took a different life. The discussion centered on personal experiences of freedom riders and of Mr. Farmer himself. Some of the stories took on a nightmarish quality, as he described escaping a lynch mob in sears, and told of freedom riders receiving savage beatings with little standing mutely by. It is not for us to picture state troops riding people down on horses and chasing them with cattle prods and it is even difficult to understand the causes which could have produced such an intense zeal and courage in those who are persecuted.

This was the message which hit harder than the original speech. Each person in the audience who considered himself liberal had to ask the question, "What would I be doing in these circumstances?" Professing ideals of equality may be all that is called for here, but I would have the courage to take mental and physical harassment to the point of death for something in which I believe." Mr. Farmer provided an example of such fortitude and this was the most disquieting thing about his appearance. Through what he has done, he is calling for a commitment of every individual. Not a hollow statement of sympathy, but a wholehearted active participation. Not until people of this country held this call, will we be on the way to a solution of the problem.

Kinnikinnik Plans to Increase Scope of Audience Appeal

This year, Kinnikinnik, the campus literary magazine, plans to increase its scope of audience appeal, and hence, its circulation. To this end, several changes have been made in the publication. There will be only one issue, which is scheduled for distribution in May, 1964. The hundred page booklet will include, depending upon submissions, prose, poetry, visual arts, including dramatic literature, musical compositions, and a new category of factual articles. The last type of literary form enables those students or faculty, whose creative ability lies on a more scientific plane, to have their ideas published. Any well-written topic, such as a report on the latest psychological experiment or views on economic principles, will be considered.

Any student or faculty member at Colorado College is encouraged to submit his work to Kinnikinnik at the Rastall Center desk. All material will be considered as submitted and will be retained by the staff until time of publication. Any questions or suggestions may be directed to Phil Le Cuyer, magazine editor, Craig Miner, factual articles editor, Sue Phillips, prose and poetry editor, or Bruce Colvin, visual arts editor.

Others on the Kinnikinnik staff include George Moore, in charge of circulation, Kathy Bevin and Janet Perry, in charge of layout, Lynda Spickard, business manager, and review board members, Mike Pleasant, John Fernie, Ted Prescott, Bob Straight, Paul Tatter, Kitty Kroger, Jim Fox, Charlie Bates, and Merle Rickiefs.

G. Springs Symphony Begins Season Soon

The Colorado Springs Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Walter Eisenberg, opened its concert season on October 10 with a program of orchestral music.

The 1963-64 season will present six concerts, including the appearance of three outstanding guest artists.

Robert Gerle, violinist, will appear with the orchestra on November 21, the second concert. On December 12 the orchestra and a chorus, made up of Colorado Springs singers, will perform the Verdi Requiem.

Byron Janis, pianist, is to be presented on January 30. The renowned artist gave a memorable concert with the orchestra two years ago. Adele Addison, soprano, is scheduled for the March 12 program, and the final concert of the season will be on April 2 with all-orchestral music.

The season marks the tenth year in which the organization has been directed by Eisenberg. During that decade the Colorado Springs Symphony has grown to be the largest in the entire Rocky Mountain region and has gained a reputation as one of the best community orchestras in the country.

Each concert is on a Thursday evening at 8:30 in the Palmer High School Auditorium. Season tickets are now available either by writing to P. O. Box 1692, Colorado Springs, or by phoning 633-1602.

NOTICE!

The National Poetry Press announces that the annual closing date for the submission of manuscripts by college students is November 5th.

Any student attending college is eligible to submit his verse. There is no limitation as to either form or theme. Shorter works are preferred because of space limitations. Each poem must be typed or written on a single sheet, and must bear the name and the home address of the student, as well as the name of the college attended.

Croneis to Give Roberts Lecture

Dr. Carey Croneis, chancellor of Rice University in Houston, Texas, will deliver the third annual Harold D. Roberts Memorial Lecture Oct. 17, opening Homecoming Weekend.

The lecture, open to the public, will be delivered at 8:15 p.m. in Shove Memorial Chapel.

Chancellor Croneis joined the faculty at Rice in 1954 as provost and professor of geology. He previously was president of Beloit college. He has a bachelor's degree from Denison University and a Ph.D. from Harvard University.

The lecture series has been endowed by the family and friends of the late Harold D. Roberts. It was inaugurated in 1961 by Dr. Hermann J. Muller, Nobel Prize-winning geneticist at Indiana University. Dr. Walter Orr Roberts, director of the National Center for Atmospheric Research at Boulder, Colo., delivered last year's lecture.

New Opportunities For Study Abroad

On Thursday, October 17, at 4 p.m. in Rastall Center, the CC Foreign Student Committee will sponsor an informative panel of speakers who will describe the possibilities open to CC students for study abroad. Included in the discussion will be a description of the existing study programs sponsored by other U. S. universities and approved for Colorado College students.

Dr. Peterson of the French department, assistant advisor of the FSC, will send up trial balloons over the good possibilities of chartered plane flights for CC students who wish to vacation or study in Europe this coming summer. Further, Dr. Peterson will explain the possibilities of summer study under accredited programs at Bordeaux and other European universities. Other features on the program include John Levis, as well as informed students and faculty who have participated in various programs in Europe and Mexico. All interested student and faculty are urged to attend and get their questions answered.

Unaffiliates Questions On Sororities Answered

(Editor's Note: The Panhellenic Council offers this description of Sorority Life for the information of all unaffiliated women.)

What does it mean to belong to a sorority? What is Greek life? These are natural questions of any unaffiliate.

The basis of sorority life is the fellowship of individuals as they grow toward womanhood. This basis has many aspects, each important in its own way: scholarship and standards concern, work projects, coed social events, all-women fun activities, and the building of friendships.

Scholarship enthusiasm is usually the responsibility of one officer. She may set up a program such as study tables or study hours, or arrange for tutors. Banquets and special speakers are often also a part of the scholarship program. There is a friendly rivalry among the five groups to have the highest cumulative average. When figured, the all-sorority average is consistently above the all-women's and the all-school averages.

Last semester, the sorority women cumulatively achieved a 2.81, while the all-women average was 2.6 and the all-school average, a 2.5.

The standards concern of a sorority is a very important part of each group. Attitudes and information in this field are discussed and emphasized as a part of maturity.

The Panhellenic groups represented on this campus all have national projects such as relief for French children, Foster Parent plan, camps for underprivileged girls, aid to the blind, and cardiac aid. The local chapters plan their own participation in these as well as other activities. Last year some of the work projects were helping at the School for the Blind, assisting at the School for Retarded, and collecting for various funds.

Each year the sororities sponsor a number of dances for their chapter. Generally there is one informal dance per semester. This fall, for instance, there will be costume dances soon, to be followed by Christmas formals. There are also many exchanges between fraternities and sororities in hosting at desserts at the houses or giving picnics.

Discovering pledge mothers, taking class sneaks, being a part of a pledge class and assigning secret sisters for birthdays or Christmas are all a part of the special chapter traditions. Each sorority also observes many national customs and rites such as initiation and Founder's Day. The lodges provide a home for relaxing, singing, talking, or cooking. Many times girls find their house is a wonderful place to study, to drop in for a snack from the pantry, or to bring a date after a movie.

All in all, sorority life includes many things to share with other women whose outlook on life is similar to your own.

Faculty Lectures On Radio KCMS

The three Colorado College faculty lectures will be heard over radio station KCMS-AM and FM Oct. 13, 20, and 27, at 8 p.m. The three lectures, delivered originally in September, were concerned with "Conflict."

The lecture by Prof. Hervig Madrugá of the French Department, will be heard over KCMS on Oct. 13. It is entitled "The Conflict of Emotions: The Concept of Love in French Literature."

On Oct. 20, Prof. Wilson Y. Gately of the mathematics department will discuss "Mathematics in Conflict."

Prof. Paul T. Bechtel of the economics department will talk about "The Collective Bargaining Crisis" on Oct. 27.

Peter, Paul, and Mary

When the lean intense looking trio walks on the stage of the City Auditorium in Colorado Springs on Thursday, October 17, everyone will immediately recognize America's No. one folk singing trio, Peter, Paul, and Mary. Peter and Paul with their beards and the tall, svelte Mary with her long, honey-colored hair, are trademarks unto themselves. Though they look like they might belong to the hills of Scotland, Tennessee or the Balkans, actually all are American born. Mary Allin Travers was born in Louisville, Ky., and Paul Stookey grew in Birmingham, Michigan, before they converged on Peter's native New York City.

Life-long interests in folk music led all three to Greenwich Village where Al Grossman, manager of Odetta, put them together as a trio. They spent seven months in the crucible working up their initial repertoire of 18 numbers, with the help of Milton Okun (formerly with Harry Belafonte) to polish their arrangements.

The results are now known all over the world and the name of Peter, Paul and Mary is a byword in the folk field. Their records sell in the millions and their song, "Puff, the Magic Dragon," is on top of the hit parade.—Adv.

USIS Offers Employment to College Grads

The United States Information Agency offers certain employment opportunities in the United States and abroad for liberal arts college graduates, and also offers summer training programs. These are opportunities for qualified individuals to serve in Bi-national Centers Programs as English teachers, student affairs, grantees, and directors of courses. In addition, there is an International Broadcasting Intern Program (Career) and an International Broadcasting Trainee program (Summer). Applicants for these summer programs should be pursuing college courses in such fields as foreign affairs, political science, foreign language, area studies, or other relevant fields.

In addition, there are opportunities as Foreign Service Career Reserve Officers for the U. S. Information Service.

AFSC Work Camp

A Denver Weekend Work Camp schedule for the fall months has been announced by the American Friends Service Committee Office in the new United Fund Center at 1375 Delaware in Denver. Dates for the fall Weekend Work Camps are October 18-20, 1963; November 15-17, 1963.

Two Weekend Work Camps were held in Denver last spring, the first to be organized in this area by the AFSC. This year it is expected that the program will be expanded to eight to twelve such camps, each one planned for about 15 students.

Work campers live for the weekend in an inner-city church or neighborhood center. Projects vary from work on children's playgrounds or giving a "face lifting" to a community recreational facility to scrubbing, cleaning, plastering, painting, or repair work in individual family homes.

Interested students should contact Dr. Paul Kutsche, Palmer 33, X371 or 634-4278.

Chicago Minister Delivers Sermon, Discusses Race Issue

By Sue Ludwig

Sunday, October 6, the Rev. Clyde Miller, a young minister from the Church of the Good Shepherd in South Chicago, presented the chapel sermon on the subject of "What Does Christ Require of Christian Man?" As Mr. Miller stated, "It is one thing to say 'I am a Christian,' and quite another to lead a Christian life."

In answering the topic question, Mr. Miller used material from the book Mr. Blue by Miles Connelly, which defines the three important requirements of Christian living: man must be obedient, humble, and teachable. Obedience to Christian principles involves works of love and mercy and not selfish desires for material things or demonstrations of false piety. Humility is the need for forgiveness. "All relationships in life are sweetened by the quality of humility, for no man is so perfect that he does not need forgiveness." A Christian must be teachable; his mind must be kept open to the Christian understanding of learning, this understanding being that "a learned man is a humble man, a man who is also ignorant at the same time."

Later in the afternoon Mr. Miller led a discussion concerning the critical social issue of today, the racial crisis, and he presented a number of thoughts, which are based on his own experiences with racial discrimination.

Mr. Miller's views on this situation arise from his own understanding of Western culture, which has taught us that each of us is an historical being. Within each individual spirit are pointers which direct man in the humanizing process. These pointers can direct in beneficial or harmful ways, and it is the tension and struggle between these positive and negative influences which is affecting the American conscience of today.

In the words of Martin Luther King, the American crisis now "is the struggle of the Negro to recover his sense of somebodiness." Contrary to common belief, "no new Negro has appeared on the scene." The difference between past and present conditions is that the Negro voice is now produced with greater strength and is heard with new understanding.

"Power is never freely transferred; any change in authority is brought about through force, either violent or non-violent. The non-violent approach to the struggle for racial equality is "a force with a real moral power behind it." It involves submitting to the law while striving to change it, and it brings to trial the ideals about human dignity which are presented in the great documents of our culture.

Strikes, demonstrations, boycotts and selective buying and patronage have now warned the U.S. that it must decide now its democratic principles are to be taken seriously. The present struggle is not one-sided, for as Mr. Miller stated, "The Negro is the hope of this country. You need me just as much as I need you. It is the image of God which links all men to each other. We're involved with each other whether we want to admit it or not. Man must be allowed to fulfill himself within the bonds of his culture."

Folk Singing Tryouts To Take Place Oct. 13

With a hoot and a holler, a folk singing try-out will take place Sunday, October 13 at Rastall Center Patio starting at 2:15 p.m.

Over 100 similar sessions will be taking place this same week on as many other campuses throughout six Midwestern areas—Kansas City, Minneapolis, Denver, St. Louis, Oklahoma City, and Dallas.

The occasion of these folk singing shindigs is the first step in finding the best example of genuine folk singing on each of these campuses.

Not the least important of the activities at the CC Try-out Hootenany will be the selection of the campus act that is to compete with other campus acts in the area for a personal audition with two other acts from the area by the CLANCY BROTHERS and TOMMY MAKEM, JEAN RITCHIE, OSCAR BRAND, JUDY COLLINS, and JOSH WHITE, Jr. The act they select will appear with them on the Inter-University Hootenany to be held November 11 at Denver University. Our campus winner will have seven hurdles to make to be crowned Midwest Collegiate Folk Singer(s) and receive an agent's contract from MJW Theatrical Enterprises Incorporated—plus a check for $500.00.

Local Entry Forms plus Official Information sheets may be picked up at Rastall Center Desk. Hurry, all entry forms must be turned in at Rastall Desk before 5 p.m. tomorrow, Saturday, October 12.

LOST—Vicinity of Tutt Library. Silver and turquoise inlay pin, round, with uneven edges. Reasonable reward. Call 633-4279 after 5 p.m.

NOTICE!

The next Peace Corps placement test will take place on October 19, 1963, at the Main Post Office in Colorado Springs. Interested students are urged to take this test. For details they may see Dr. Sonderrmann at Peabody 101.

NOTICE!

To whom it may concern:

Anyone interested in participating in Rastall Center Board planning may do so by joining a committee of the Board. To participate, please contact Suzanne Bensus, extension 294. No talent needed—just interested!

CC Young Republicans Discuss Civil Rights

In refutation of this year's handbook, the largest Colorado College political organization held their first meeting September 17, and are off to another good year. During the meeting the Colorado College Young Republican group discussed their goals for the following year. It was decided that the main purpose is to be one of gaining information on pertinent political issues.

The agenda also includes attending the Colorado YR College Convention during the second semester of the school year as well as organizing other YR clubs in the colleges of Colorado.

The first discussion, held on civil rights, opened with the presentation of an article from U. S. News and World Report, by Mr. Fuller, a leading Negro businessman in Chicago. Mr. Fuller expresses optimistic views pertaining to the Negro in relation to our capitalistic society and the opportunities open to him for advancement. Many interesting and intelligent views were brought forth in the discussion that followed.

Meetings are held every other Tuesday afternoon at 4:15 in Room 207 of Rastall Center, the next meeting being held October 14. Everyone is invited whether your goal is to challenge, learn, discuss or just sit.

ALPHA PHI

Monday night, the regular meeting was climaxed by a serenade with the Sigma Chi's in honor of Leslie Eckert and Mike Traflet. The cake was delicious, and fun was had by all.

On Thursday, October 10, a tea was held by the alums in commemoration of Founders Day.

DELTA GAMMA

Dessert at the Sigma Chi's on Tuesday, Oct. 1 with Eating and singing was nothing but fun.

Laughter and dancing were shared by all during the Theta-DG dance on Friday at the Cliff House.

As we donned hillbilly duds from our own locale.

Grogan—Sara, that is, and Chuck Mauritz had their serenade Mon. night.

As the Phi Deltas joined us for singing and cake.

Mandy Hamilton was congratulated when she announced her engagement to 2nd Lieutenant Ray Hodges, USAF.

Men also were the topic when Jan Perry passed a candle.

Announcing her pining to Rich Bricker, Phi Kappa Alpha at DU.

GAMMA PHI BETA

Monday, the 30th of September the Gamma Phi gave a party for their five grand new pledges. We give a hearty welcome (and congratulations to us) to: Janet Smith, Sally Starsmore, Eileen Wilson, Dottie Davis, and Frankie Keller.

A special candle was passed for Kay Crouch, now of CU. It was announced by members of the present neophyte class that Kay is pined. Our best wishes go to Kay!

Happy birthday to Mom Cunningham (Oct. 5)! Any male visitors in the house on weekends—Beware!! Mom was presented a pretty bedjacket from the chapter.

Formal pledging for our new pledges was preceded by dinner at the house on Tuesday, October 8.

Thanks to all the Betas for their nice serenade Monday night!

KAPPA KAPPA GAMMA

Monday night following the weekly meeting, the Kappas entertained the Phi Gams at a dessert. The function was adjourned early so that the members of the two chapters could attend the Junior Varsity football game.

Wednesday night, the Kappas joined the four other sororities for an all-Panhellenic dinner in Taylor; Rev. Burton gave a short talk. Other guests included Miss Moon, Miss Roberts, and the five housemothers. The purpose of the dinner, to bring the five organizations into closer harmony, seems to have been very well fulfilled.

This coming Sunday afternoon and evening, the Kappas will hold a mock rush party, at which the part of the rushees will be played by the Colorado Springs Alums. Following the party, a chapter dinner will be held.

BETA THETA PI

A new pledge. Monday evening Bill Weiss, class of '66, was given a pledge pin following the active meeting. Welcome and congratulations, Bill.

Anybody you see around campus with bleeding knuckles and taped shoulders is probably a Beta. The old tag game called "Zant" was recently reintroduced to the chapter by "Razorknucks" Wingate and "Roundhouse" Fred Davis. One of the game's principal rules is that the person who is "it" remain conscious at all times.

KAPPA SIGMA

Although we have been quiet for two weeks, it has not been because we are off campus. No doubt you have been following our weekend social events, so those need not be stressed.

We would like to congratulate our surely pledges on their recent entrance into the house. They are: Garrett Boughton, Carl Clay, Duncan MacNaughton, Rick Arkus, Bob Halsband, and last but not least B. O. Steekles, brother of B. M. Steekles.

Don't miss our dance this weekend in the basement, the theme of which will be "The Rise and Fall of Dictatorships in '63".

PHI DELTA THETA

After a semi-successful intramural football team last year, the Phi has retrogressed to their most frequently frequented position of glory with a very close 31-6 defeat at the hands of the Betas, and a heartbreaking 21-19 moral victory loss at the hands of the Zetas.

Monday night was the formal pinning dessert at the D. G. house for Chuck Kennett, who was recently pinned to Jane and Debby Morgan.

Last Wednesday night's dinner guest was Prof. Ray Werner, who discussed current trends in CC athletics and enjoyed one of the better meals of the week, pressed ham.

The Phi basement was the scene of an informal party Saturday night after a tough workout on the Broadmoor ice.

PHI GAMMA DELTA

This week the Chi Sigma Chapter of Phi Gamma Delta is proud to announce the initiation of nine new actives. They are: Pat Smith, Steve Prough, Jim Johnson, Randy Ware, Rolf Hiebler, Jeff Reed, Mike Carter, Ed Huwaldt, and Reno Van Patten. In addition we have a new pledge class whose members are: Louis Jaramillo, Pete Richards, and Pete "Crazy" Susemil.

The Fijis were pleased to welcome Reverend Burton and Reverend Clyde Miller to dinner last Monday. A discussion on the Fraternity system followed and we all felt that the exchange of views was very helpful.

Congratulations are in order for Alums Dan Ketchum and Wayne Deutscher, who visited us this week. They will soon depart to farflung battlefields of America where it is hoped that their patriotic and inspired leadership will help carry on the fight for freedom.

SIGMA CHI

Congratulations to Robert Workinger, who pledged last week bringing the new fall pledge class up to eight. Last Monday night, the Sigma Chi's serenaded Mike Irsfeld and his pinmate Leslie Eckert at the Alpha Phi House.

Last week's West Side Story Dance turned out to be a big success. The folk singing of Professor Lewis, Ed McCarrall, and Jim Lucey, and Chuck Deaver's talented rendition of that old standard, "Bony Moronie," were added attractions. Thanks to Ron Rishagen, alias Chuck Wagon or just Plain Ron, for his great job on building the beautiful patio in our back yard.

Gridders Produce Win Over Cal. Lutheran

The Colorado College Tigers defeated the California Lutheran Kingsmen 9-16 at Thousand Oaks, California, Saturday afternoon. The victory extended the Tiger winning streak to two games and evened their season record at two wins and two losses.

The contest was an action-packed one, with the Tigers marching to an early lead on a touchdown and a missed conversion. Mike Mestek was responsible for the first tally when he ran the ball in from the 15.

The Kingsmen were ready to come back on the following kickoff, when quarterback Tim Gaudin passed three yards to halfback Alex Kravett for 6 points and a good conversion for the lead by George Enzdahl. Colorado College was unable to do anything with the ball after this, and finally was forced to attempt a punt from the end zone. For some reason, the snap from center slipped through fullback punter Steve Sabol's hands, and the Kingsmen had six more points on a recovery by guard Steve Sutherland. The conversion by Enzdahl was again good. The Tigers were forced to leave the football field on the wrong side of the score board despite the slight statistical lead they had established.

The second half started on about the same note as the first, with the Kingsmen getting two more points on an automatic safety when the CC punter dropped the ball in the end zone.

At this point the Tigers got possession of the ball after some fine defensive line play and scored on a drive that was engineered almost entirely on the fine running of fullback Steve Sabol. The big CC back also made the conversion good on his own touchdown.

Again the Kingsmen refused to die and came marching back down the field. The defense managed to hold, however, on its 15 yard line. The ball then changed hands between the two teams several times until the last 5 minutes of the game. At this time, the Gold and Black Bengals realized their last chance to pull the game out of the hole on two passes that covered half the field, one to end Lee Muller and the other to end Bill Jankowski. An incomplete pass and a first down on a trap play set the stage for the final climactic play when quarterback-hero Warner Resser dropped a perfect pass into Mike Mestek's hands. The conversion was good.

A very nervous defense went onto the field and held the California team until the clock ran out.

The victory allowed the team, which had President Worner and several faculty accompanying them, to enjoy a lively weekend observing some of the more publicized of the Californian idiosyncrasies before returning to Colorado Springs Sunday night.

The Tigers have a tough job to look forward to next week when they travel to Greeley, Colorado, to take on Colorado State College. The last Tiger victory over this team came three years ago, and CC has had only two victories against this conference opener in the last 15 years.

Sigma Chi's Win Golf Intramurals

The Sigma Chi's four-man team toured the Patty Jewett golf course in 350 strokes' last week to win the annual intramural golf championship. Kappa Sigma was ten strokes off the pace, and Phi Gamma Delta finished third with 366.

Mike 'The Weasel' Irsfeld, led the Sigs to the team title with a fine one over par 72, which was also good for the lead in the 36-hole competition for the individual title. Other members of the winning Sigs were Dave Wahlfeld, Bill Hybl, and Bob Grant.

The low nine men and ties for the first 18 holes will play an additional round this week with the 36-hole total determining the individual championship. Those who qualified were Mike Irsfeld, 72; Dick Knight, 74; James Amidon, 78; Brad James, 81; John Rinderknecht, 81; John Wells, 81; Ed Skoeters, 82; Dave Wahlfeld, 83; and Bill Campbell, 83.

Rastall Center Forms Two Bowling Leagues

The Rastall Sports and Outings Committee has initiated two new bowling leagues this year in the Rastall lanes in addition to the regular Wednesday night Women's League. These are the Girls' League, which will bowl on Tuesday night at 7:00, and the Men's League, which will bowl on Thursday night at 7:00 also. The Girls' League is made up of four 3-girl teams, and the Men's League is made up of four 4-man teams.

Weekly team standings and high games and high series will be published every Friday in the TIGER to keep all concerned informed.

INTRAMURALS

After a very successful and enthusiastic pushball season, the Colorado College Intramural Program turned to the fall program of flag football and golf. With up-coming becoming the rule rather than the exception, the Slocum American and National flag football leagues have two games separate the teams from the last place team, but the favorite is yet to emerge from the pack. West 4, South 3, and the Miners in the American League, North 4 and West 2 in the National, are the only undefeated teams—the best record a 2-0 won-loss record shared by South 3 and North 4. When the leaders encounter each other in the coming weeks, it is a monopoly any team expects have will undoubtedly end. The intramural league varies little from the Slocum American, with the Miners and Kappa Sig teams sharing the top spot, while the latter are in the fight for runners-up honors.

With the addition of a tryout for a varsity golf team as added incentive, the short 6,538 yard Patty Pettett Golf Course took a beating. The CC's intramural golfers. A low score of 72 set the pace for the top nine qualifiers and all ties. The hard-surfaced, short playing course yielded nearly a dozen 82 or less rounds.

In addition to the qualifying rounds of 72, 74, 79, 81, and 83, numerous less fortunate, but no less enthusiastic, individuals were to be found near the very respectable mark of 85. The final championship round to be played the week of October 14, additional near 90 in a super can be expected. As homecoming weekend rapidly approaches, everyone is reminded of the up-coming one and one-half mile cross-country race. To be held at the half time of the CC-Concordia football game, this activity enables any participant to add to his team's total while enjoying himself.

Soccer Team Loses Season Opener, 2-1

Last Saturday's trip to Golden proved disappointing for the Tiger soccer squad. Keenly anticipating a visit to the home of Coors Beer, they dropped their season opener to Mines 2-1, only to find that the factory had closed at 4:00.

The game, marked by poor officiating and inadequate conditioning on the part of both teams, was not as exciting as the score indicates. Outplaying the Miners in the first half, the Tigers were unable to put in a goal. Sol Nikiwane and Tony Bryan both missed penalty shots, but it looked as if the odds would catch up with the team from Golden.

The second half saw both teams tiring and the Tigers' long passing game went awry, while lack of conditioning did not seem to hurt the Miners' short game as badly. Mines tallied, as a result, but CC came back when Jon Hetzel put in a goal that both teams later admitted was illusory. The winning score came on a penalty kick by Mines on another disputed call.

Stabler to Coach CC Bowling Team

The 1963-64 bowling season has opened with the appointment of Doc Stabler as the coach of this year's CC bowling team. Doc has been a booster of the team for quite some time and has decided to take an active hand in its organization this year. Last year the team had a most impressive record and Doc has expressed his feelings that the team may even better last year's season.

Some members of last year's squad are returning, but there are vacancies on the team.

Tryouts will be held Tuesday afternoon, October 15, at 4:00, in the Rastall Lanes. The team's organizational structure and its objectives for the year will also be discussed at this time. Interested men are asked to contact Bill Pelz, chairman of the Sports and Outings Committee, and last year's team captain, before the tryout date, if possible.

CC Cycling Team Hosts Invitational Racing Meet

The 10 mile cycling race last Sunday, sponsored by the CC Cycling Team, was characterized by close sprints, wild driving, body contact, and spectacular break-aways.

The one mile course in Memorial Park had two difficult hills and two sharp turns, for which brakes are needed. The second turn, which one racer failed to make, and another failed to see, was decisive, since it was followed by a flat stretch of road where the competitors sprinted across a line in the fourth, seventh, and tenth laps. Points were awarded to the first five racers in each sprint only, so the poor fellow who placed consistently in each sprint got no points at all.

The race had its contrasts. Weller (CU), Ian (CC), and Bennett (CSC) who finished the first sprint in that order were all within six inches of each other. Robert Schwaigerhofer, who had worked until 7:00 that morning, broke away from the seven man pack in the five mile high school race and held his lead to finish about a third of a mile ahead of Brian Madden of Denver.

The 10 mile race was won by Tom Allen of Denver. He failed to make any points in the first sprints, but broke away from the 11 man pack to win the last two sprints.

The junior high school race turned out to be the best of the three. The race was so close between the first finishers, that Clarke Ross won by actually throwing his bike across the line only inches ahead of Charles Halasi.

This meet introduced many Colorado Springs residents to cycling and certainly will do a great deal to raise the caliber of competition in this area, and to further this really crazy and colorful sport.

Dr. Worner to Be Inaugurated As First CC Alumnus President

By Sue Ludwig

Colorado College will inaugurate Dr. Lloyd E. Worner as its first alumnus president today at 2 p. m. on the Central Quadrangle. All those attending the Inauguration Ceremonies are invited to a reception in Tutt Library following the program.

Dr. Worner, the ninth president of Colorado College, succeeds Dr. Louis T. Benezet, who is now president of the Graduate School and University Center of the Claremont, California, complex of colleges.

When Dr. Benezet announced his resignation last April, Mr. Armin Barney, chairman of the board of trustees, expressed these feelings: "It is hard to imagine a brighter period in the life of any institution than the eight years of Dr. Benezet's presidency of Colorado College. Our splendid new buildings and steadily rising levels of financial support are readily apparent. Still more significant for the long term are the new strengths of our faculty and of our student body, and the revitalization of our educational program in the best tradition of the liberal inter-college ideal."

During the last eight years Colorado College has rebuilt its physical plant, gained a new curriculum, a larger and stronger faculty, an increasingly able student body, and a successful fund-raising program which has added approximately $10 million in capital assets. The fund-raising activity has allowed an extensive building program which includes the $1,250,000 library, the $1,500,000 science building, the student union, the heating plant, student housing facilities, the sports complex, and a new infirmary. As Dr. Benezet stated, "In every way the college is in a strong position, moving forward on new programs in teaching and campus life. The next president can see Colorado College fulfill her finest years."

Dr. Worner, a 1942 graduate who has served as dean of the College for the past eight years, therefore begins his term of office at an exciting and crucial point in the ninety-year history of the college. Dr. Worner, who returned to the Colorado College campus from the University of Missouri in 1946 to teach history, has viewed the life of the college from all angles: as a student, as an instructor, and as an administrator. As an undergraduate, he was president of the student body, president of the Beta Theta Pi fraternity, a member of Red Lantern (men's honorary society), and an outstanding golfer. As a member of the faculty, he helped establish the honor code, which was the first system of its kind to be used on a college or university campus in the Rocky Mountains.

In accepting his appointment last spring, Dr. Worner said, "I recognize that the presidency of Colorado College carries with it grave responsibilities, as well as immense personal satisfactions. I will give it everything I have."

The inaugural address, entitled "Liberal Arts in the New Age," will be presented by Pres. Elmer Ellis of the University of Missouri. Greetings will be given by Choussin E. Manning, '46, provost of Oberlin College, on behalf of the liberal arts colleges of America; by Prof. Charles W. Penland, representing the Colorado College faculty; by Mr. Harris Sherman, representing the student body, and by Mr. William O. Haney, '42, president of the National Alumni Association, speaking for the alumni of Colorado College. Mr. Barney, chairman of the board of trustees, will administer the inaugural oath, after which Pres. Worner will give his response.

Active Weekend Planned For Returning CC Alumni

The activities of Homecoming Weekend, Friday, October 18 to Sunday, October 20, are not only for undergraduates but also for returning alumni. General events have been arranged especially for the alumni throughout the weekend.

The Fifth Annual Alumni Reunion Meeting of "Freedom and Authority" will take place in the seminar rooms of the Charles Leaning Tutt Library at 9:15 a.m. Saturday. The topic will be "Racial Equality and Personal Freedom." The subject was suggested by James Baldwin's best seller, The Fire Next Time.

At 11 a.m. President Worner will give a report to the alumni in the annual meeting of the Alumni Association in the WES lounge of Rastall Center.

This meeting will be followed by the annual luncheon and rally. This informal get together will include the awarding of prizes.

Later that evening there will be a party for C-Men, their wives and friends.

At 7:30 p.m. there will be two class reunion dinners. The class of '38's twenty-fifth reunion will be held at the Peak-View Golf Club. The class of '53's reunion will be held in the Green Room of the Broadmoor Hotel.

Registration for the alumni will be from 9:00-11:30 a.m. Friday and from 8:30 a.m.-2:00 p.m. Saturday at Rastall desk.

Other events of general interest are the inauguration of President Lloyd E. Worner '42 in the Central Quadrangle at 2:00 p.m. Friday, the presentation of Show's "Arms and the Man" by the CC Players (tickets available at Rastall at $125) both Friday and Saturday nights, the football game with Concordia College of Nebraska Saturday afternoon, and the Homecoming Dance at the Broadmoor Hotel Ballroom and Main Dining Room Saturday night.

The weekend's activities will close on Sunday morning with the Colorado College Homecoming Memorial Service in Shove Chapel.

Coffee Session Given For Alumni, Faculty

A special alumni-faculty coffee session is being planned for all former Colorado College students returning here Oct. 17-20 for homecoming weekend.

Presiding at the informal coffee session, which gets under way at 10 a.m. Oct. 19 in the Rastall Center lounge, is Dr. Ray O. Werner, associate professor of economics and business administration.

Professor Werner said the coffee session will provide alumni an opportunity to renew acquaintances, meet new faculty members, and chat with former professors. All 115 college faculty members have been invited.

The economics professor says informal sessions such as the one planned for Oct. 19 gives teachers and their former students a chance to discuss new developments in their common fields.

A half-day, unofficial, semi-impromptu symposium bearing the title, BAD, will be held at Colorado College Saturday, October 26, and according to its sponsors, BAD means exactly what it spells—BAD.

BAD will be comprised of a series of informal talks and panel discussions beginning at 1 p.m. October 26, in Perkins Auditorium. Nine experts in the fields of art, history, literature, music, physics, psychology, and religion will speak.

BAD will be devoted to the bad in these areas.

"However, we certainly don't wish to convey the impression that BAD is all bad," declared Dr. Gilbert Johns, assistant professor of psychology, who is the chairman of the committee of faculty members presenting BAD.

"Our BAD committee very much hopes that BAD will constitute a force for good," Professor Johns continued.

He stressed as the important aspects of BAD the following:

1.—Its voluntary and democratic nature. No one is required to attend, and all but the truly stodgy are welcome. A good BAD attendance is naturally hoped for.

2.—Its liberal arts character. BAD is not confined to a single realm of human knowledge, but embraces indiscriminately the sciences, social sciences and humanities.

3.—Its revolutionary approach to education. Whereas, conventional education methods emphasize the good as a basis for value judgments, BAD will accentuate the good by pointing up the bad.

"To capture the essence of BAD," Professor Johns went on,

"picture Santa Claus in a black beard. He would then symbolize BAD well—the figure we automatically accept as GOOD goes sour. BAD does not propose to explore the obvious that is bad. Rather it will be dedicated to examination of that which is not obviously bad in the obviously good—for example, Picasso, Shakespeare, and Beethoven.

"We do want to emphasize the essentially serious character of BAD," the BAD chairman concluded. In the other hand, if BAD were to get too serious that would be too bad."

Resource persons on the BAD faculty committee with Professor Johns are Professors Bernard Arnest, art; Paul P. Bernard, history; Kenneth Burton, religion; Carlton Garner, music; E. Robert Peterson, French; Thomas Ross, English; Wilbur Wright, physics.

Coincidentally, these same men will be the BAD speakers and panelists.

A member of the BAD committee who requested that he remain anonymous revealed in an off-the-record interview why the symposium has been called BAD. "Whoever," he demanded belligerently, "heard of a symposium entitled GOOD?"

Freedom and Authority Alumni to Hold Reunion

Scores of alumni of the Freedom and Authority seminar will gather at 9:15 a.m. Oct. 19 for a half day discussion of "Racial Equality and Personal Freedom." The reunion will be held in a seminar room of the new Charles Leaning Tutt Library.

Alumni planning to attend the seminar reunion already are reading James Baldwin's best-selling book, "The Fire Next Time," assigned for the discussion.

The Freedom and Authority reunion will be especially meaningful this year to alumni, since Dr. Lloyd E. Worner, who helped to establish the seminar 13 years ago, will be inaugurated during homecoming weekend.

Former Freedom and Authority seminar teachers are scheduled to take part in the homecoming reunion. Among them are Prof. J. Glenn Gray, Guggenheim Fellow and co-founder of the course; Prof. William Hochman of the history department; Prof. Milton Garner of the music department; Prof. Wilbur Wright of the physics department; Prof. J. Douglas Mertz of the political science department; Prof. George Mills of the anthropology department; Prof. Douglas Freed of the psychology department; and Prof. Thomas Ross of the English department.

New Selection Dates for Tiger Editor, Bus. Mgr.

The reason for changing the selection dates of the Tiger editor and business manager is to make it possible to set up a budget for the entire school year from fall through the spring rather than from mid-year to mid-year as it now stands.

The editor may assume his position before the end of this first semester with a working "apprenticeship" with the present editor for two or three issues after he takes over. The business manager may take over at the semester break after working with the present business manager for the remainder of this semester.

Both offices will terminate with the selection next spring of an editor and business manager for the school year 1964-65.

At that incumbents may re-apply. The deadline for applications is Wednesday, October 23rd, at 6 p.m. Interviews with the Publications Board will be arranged shortly thereafter. Any questions may be directed to Ben Lyon, Chairman of Publications Board.

We Come Back, Alumni of CC

A New Tradition

In the past months there has been much talk about the direction and purpose of Colorado College. It is true that we are at a decisive moment in our history, and that we must make crucial decisions which will shape or abort the growth of the college. We are fortunate to have president Lloyd Worner to guide us through this period.

Colorado College has gone through a dynamic eight years of rebuilding and now it is time for us to consolidate our gains. Therefore, working within the existing framework, President Worner will attempt through a constant heightening of our academic goals to elevate CC to among the unquestioned first rank of colleges. President Worner is ideally qualified for this task for he represents a dynamic intellectualism in that he formulates his ideas into actions. He has done this in the past, especially with regard to the Honor System, and he promises to continue doing this in his years as president.

Steeped in tradition, President Worner is not a traditionalist. Rather, he is a scholar who can lead Colorado College to a position of greatness by re-examining our old traditions and creating new ones. It is on this note of hope and expectancy that we welcome the inauguration of President Worner.

OPINION

By Dee Wilson

"We are for those things and policies that help to win the war in Vietnam and we oppose what interferes with the war." — John F. Kennedy

"Militant rationalism and militant revolutionism seem to be contemporaneous." — Eric Hoffer

The latest comedy is called "The Cold War." The first two acts aren't very funny, but it promises to have a brilliant ending. There seems to be some disagreement among the audience as to who is hero and who is villain.

There's this one guy who chases all the girls (who are all, if you want to know, conceited as hell) promising them a better life, a good job and escape from and revenge on their parents (who in most cases are not to be admired, the way I see it. They hog the house or did, push the girls off into a little corner where they nearly die from lack of air—or did) if they'll only marry him. Some of the audiences are crazy over this guy. There's this other fellow who also chases the girls and promises them equality and freedom in marriage and a lot of other things too.

He is sort of rich and gives the girls a lot of gifts. He is very popular with some of the audience. Both guys promise to protect the girls from the other guy who is portrayed as evil incarnate.

My own view is that they're both hypocrites and out after only one thing—and that's not marriage. It's . . . well, you know. The brutes.

Well, they both hate each other, which I didn't understand for some time. They have so much in common. Why, they even work for the same organization, Industrial Assets it is. But now I understand. They hate each other because they are after the same things (heh-heh). They are always calling each other dirty names and getting into fist fights over the girls; it's shocking because sometimes even the girls get hit. (Well, like my mother once said, if the girls don't get it one way they get it the other.)

Now, this author is a very subtle guy. Both these heroes believe their own story and believe it so fervently they have even got most of the audience believing it, despite all evidence to the contrary, and there is plenty of that. I think I know why. They believe it because they need to believe it to

Class of 1967,

Your newly elected representatives to the ASCC, Rick Lopez, Gordon Aoyagi, and myself extend to you heartfelt thanks for your support in the elections. The fact that you have elected us indicates your faith that we will represent you well. We hope that that faith shall be fulfilled.

Officially, we are your voice on campus, and as such, invite you to discuss with us those things which you feel must be brought up for the good of the class and the of the school. Be assured that your every reasonable wish will be aired and considered in ASCC.

May it be known, however, that in keeping with our policy of original leadership, reason shall prevail with us more than public opinion. We will not allow ourselves to be unduly swayed by the crowd.

Much is expected of this class. There are many tasks which we clearly must accomplish. Everyone's cooperation is needed and expected. This is not unreasonable for we are all parts of that great whole—the class of 1967.

Sincerely yours,

Raymond D. Jones,
Pres. of the

keep their high opinion of themselves. They both think of themselves as pretty moral fellows, you see. They both think that they really want to help these girls—they really do. There's something else, too; both heroes are out to impress the audience, and the audience, being petit bourgeois, are impressed by respectability.

Funny thing about the audience; it's educated enough to be at the play but uneducated enough to be taken in by pious moralisms. This rich guy is very concerned over being popular, so concerned it's almost touching. This other hero becomes more like this guy as the play goes on, which goes to show another thing about these characters. As the play progresses, they become more and more alike in personal characteristics and in tactics. They both want to be nice guys, to be liked; both think in terms of good and bad; and most important, they are both intensely proud. I would have expected it to be a beautiful friendship.

I would probably dislike these guys for their stupid pride, their pig headedness, if I wasn't so understanding. They need to be understood. They can't help it. Yes it's true. There's something about this Industrial Assets place that is responsible for their characters. It fosters such pride, such intense egoism, that the people in the firm are constantly fighting over this or that. These guys, being pushed to the top of the organization fairly recently are natural enemies. They compete in everything; they don't need the girls; they're sort of a status symbol, a way of hitting at the fortress of the other guy. Such insecurity—ah well, these nouveau riche!

They'll grow out of it, if they give themselves the chance, but now both are wearing six guns (property of Industrial Assets) and may shoot it out any day. This may be the brilliant ending if you know what I mean. However it's only Act Two and there are other possibilities. There's this other guy (who is not at all a nice guy) screaming and yelling and throwing his weight (considerable and growing) around who is coming up in the organization. There is a chance that our heroes may both turn their six guns on him if he challenges them too strongly. However this wouldn't end the play; a lot of other people are coming up in the organization too, and already they bear a marked resemblance to our heroes, which will never do. Now get this: Some of these people are the very girls who our heroes are chasing. Like I said, you don't need to worry about these girls—they are conceited as hell. Always thinking about themselves and as little as possible about our heroes. Anyway the girls are on to these guys' number. They handle them beautifully, playing one against the other, encouraging one and then the other, playing for time till they can work their way up in the organization. This Industrial Assets is gradually making them like the two guys; they are always fighting among themselves and everything. They are even adopting the pious moralism of our heroes. I'm afraid pretty soon they may start carrying six guns (Industrial Assets is great on six guns) and then think of all the chances for a brilliant ending. It's Act Three now; yes there they go, putting on six guns . . . "Don't pull the trigger . . ." Well, the damn fool! Curtain.

Dear Editor:

As a subscriber to the TIGER (my third year), and as a parent, I wish to express an opinion.

I am a victim of misrepresentation. In a letter received early this semester I was given to understand that if I would subscribe to the TIGER, I would receive a weekly newspaper devoted to the affairs and activities of the student body at Colorado College.

Instead of a newspaper, I am receiving (and I might add, a week after it is issued) what appears to be an editorial magazine. What are you doing: conducting a course in English composition, or are you acting as a propaganda medium for CORE or the NAACP? In short, what are you trying to prove?

Frankly, when what is supposed to be a weekly newspaper devotes more than 60% of its space (October 4th issue) to editorial propaganda, I think it is time someone protested. I would suggest a change of policy. Make the TIGER what it is supposed to be, a newspaper with news.

Respectfully yours,
I. R. Heller

Shore Chapel

It seems fitting on this Homecoming Weekend, which will inaugurate of President Worner's official begins a new era in the life of Colorado College, that some kind of statement should be made to the college community and the alumni, concerning the relationship of the religious quest of the times and purposes of a liberal arts education. It is hoped that this in the sermon this coming Sunday. A brief look will be taken at the kind of freedom toward which the college strives and the necessity for religion to listen to learn from this effort. At the same time a statement will be made concerning the distinction between commitment of religious faith and in turn the relationship of it to the liberal arts academic enterprise.

The college choir under the direction of Professor Donald Perkins will sing at this service. The service will also be broadcast on the college radio KKCC.

ASCC Notes

For the first time this year the ASCC Executive Council was able to function with a full group, all of the vacancies have now been filled. The new committee heads who were appointed by Harold Sherman are Rick Lopez, Traffic Committee; Terry Fonville, Rules and voting members of Publications Board; Chrissy Moon will look into the junior year about program and Gordon Aoyagi will work on the communications. Ray Jones will work on any special project which may come up.

The Enthusiasm committee promises many fun and interesting new activities which will be coming up in the near future. After the Academic committee outlines the activities which it will sponsor soon. Both of the groups have some good, new ideas so keep your eyes open for further developments.

Mike Durfee, Bill Pelz, and Lucey (with the aid of anyone who can talk them into it) will look into the possibility of having a bathing beauty contest . . . in on the CC campus . . . to kick off the opening of the new swimming pool.

A new skate sharpening unit has been moved into the old Cell Shop in anticipation of the opening of the new skating rink. On Saturday morning, Don O'Brien warned against using the ice before it is announced to be ready as this could seriously endanger the chances of using it Saturday. Any ice which is messed up must be removed and put down again.

Terry Fonville suggested that the ASCC Notes of last week were slanted and that the secretary should take more care in presenting the actual happenings of the Executive Council meeting. If it is true, the secretary's apology to the student body for leading them astray. It was certainly intentional and the feeling of the committee seemed to be divided as to whether or not the violation actually occurred. Nevertheless, constructive criticism which will be made about the ASCC Notes will be considered in following editions.

Respectfully submitted,

Karen McIvaine
ASCC Secretary

NOTICE!

The October 25 issue of the TIGER will be a special double devoted to the consideration of campus issues which are deemed to be of wide significance for the Colorado College student body. Questions concerning this edition may be directed to the editor.

New Ice Rink to Open Homecoming Weekend

Mr. Tony Frasca, Ice Rink Manager, reports that work is presently underway on the refrigeration units of the new rink and if all goes well, a preliminary general skating session will be held on Saturday, October 19 from 9 a.m. until 12 noon. Testing will continue until the opening hour and Mr. Frasca points out that it is very important that there be no traffic on the surface until this time.

Only Activity Card carrying students, faculty and staff of Colorado College will be permitted to use the ice rink and the card must be shown at the time of entry onto the ice and when renting skates at the Rastall Center Games Area Desk.

Mr. Frasca emphasized the importance of safety and control on this private facility and he urged everyone in the college community to acquaint themselves with the following important points.

General skating will at all times be supervised by an ice attendant who carries full authority and the responsibility to maintain safe and orderly conduct for the protection and enjoyment of all. Schedules for general skating periods, P.E. classes, hockey practice, intramurals, etc. will be posted weekly at the rink and in Rastall Center.

Because the rink is for use by Activity Card carrying CC students, faculty and staff only, there will be no charge for skating. Rental skates are available to the above at the Rastall Center Games Area Desk for $.50 and a skate sharpening service is also available at this desk for $.50 per pair. A certain period will soon be set aside each week for dependents of the students, faculty and staff to skate while accompanied by their parents.

Questions should be directed to Mr. Frasca or Mr. Oden in Rastall Center.

The rink opening reminds us of our approaching hockey season which starts on November 29-30 with a series against the U.S. Olympics Team at the Broadmoor World Arena where all our intercollegiate contests will be staged.

Reynders Successful In Mime Performance

By John Giances

The ancient Greeks were often amused in their plays by the antics of a clown on stage. He was called Machus and was the object of ridicule and the brunt of jokes in the production. Machus was the world's first mime. Last Friday night in Perkins Hall, Frans Reynders, a modern day Machus, began his evening with a short history of his medium. After Greece the mime is next seen in the "Comedia dell'Arte" during the Italian Renaissance. At this time it enjoyed some success and became widespread both in Italy and in France.

With the death of the "Comedia dell'Arte" the comedians drifted into England and Scandinavia, primarily as circus clowns. The next time mime is seen as a serious performing art is in 1830 when Battisto des Benaux revived a Pierot act. The present day school of mime in Paris is highly successful under the direction of Etienne de Crew. Most successful present-day mimes have studied at this school. Marcel Marceau is the most famous person to have studied there.

Mr. Reynders' program consisted of several short sketches designed to fit with the mood and temperament of every member of the audience. The first number was entitled "Parkbench" and was meant to reach everyone in the audience by the simplicity of its plot. The most popular act with the audience was "Man at the Table," in which Reynders portrayed a glutton who ordered everything on the menu and then proceeded to "shovel it in."

Perhaps the most artful of these sketches was also the most romantic, that of "The Marionette." It is the story of a marionette who, after the puppet-master has gone, releases himself and, while he is free, has a few ecstatic moments with a guitar. At the end the marionette re-hangs himself to the wires again in preparation for a new day with the puppet-master. Reynders "Surgeon" approached the surreal and had a rather nauseous effect on the audience when the "Surgeon" proceeded to remove the top of his own head to play with its contents and then replace the whole mess and sew it up again.

I am sure that members of the audience would agree with me in saying that Frans Reynders is a man very accomplished in his art. His timing, grace, and vitality on stage were very nearly perfect. If there is room for improvement in his art, it lies in an increased use of facial contortions to help more definitely express the more subtle emotions. Special thanks go to Diane Wieden for her assistance in Frans Reynders performance which made for a very entertaining and stimulating evening.

Debate Team Begins Season With Success

The Colorado College Debate Team got off to its most successful start in several years by completely dominating the Great Plains Collegiate Association tournament held at Hastings College, Hastings, Neb., October 11 and 12.

Using a squad, half of which were freshmen, CC easily won every event at the two-day meeting. Three of five debate teams were undefeated and the other two teams lost but a single round. The Colorado College record of 10 wins and two losses was good for first place finish in debate, with Doane College and Nebraska Wesleyan tying for second with identical seven win and five loss records.

Teams composed of Barbara Keener and Arlene Kaplan, Judy Sundquist and Linda Marshall, and Bob Knight and Jody Komor were undefeated. Teams composed of Susan Caudill and David Bitter and David Helms and Jo Helms each won two rounds and lost one. The national debate topic resolved: That the Federal Government should guarantee an opportunity for higher education for all qualified high school graduates was debated by all teams.

Barbara Keener and Susan Caudill tied for first in the extemporaneous speaking event, and in the discussion CC students, Bob Knight, Judy Sundquist, Arlene Kaplan, and Barbara Keener were awarded four out of five superior ratings.

Manning to Speak at Meal Honoring Worner Following Inauguration

Dr. Thurston E. Manning, provost of Oberlin College in Ohio, will be the principal speaker at a "family dinner" following the inauguration of Dr. Lloyd E. Worner.

Attending the dinner in honor of President Worner will be trustees, faculty and staff members.

A native of Denver, Colo., Dr. Manning received his bachelor's degree in physics from Colorado College, summa cum laude, in 1946. He taught physics and mathematics at Colorado College for two years before receiving his Ph.D. at Yale University. Dr. Manning joined the faculty at Oberlin in 1949.

The Alpha Phi started this past week off with a bang with their scholarship dinner on Sunday evening. We would like to thank Dr. Middleton for keeping the chapter in laughter for about an hour. Also a big thanks to OLR Sigma Chi bashers. We really did appreciate the work you did for us—especially if you had to trip over couches!

The Alpha Phi are looking forward to homecoming weekend and all of the activities. (That is if they live long enough to enjoy it). Congratulations to our new President, Worner. We are very happy to have a CC man guiding our work and lives here on campus.

The DG's have been at their ABC's during the past week. A is for Anticipation of homecoming. We are all anxiously awaiting the fun and excitement. B is for Busy and we all are as the house decoration near completion.

C is for Come to our open house Saturday, right after the game. Everyone is invited.

D is for the DG pledges who had a sneak with the Phi Delt pledges last Saturday at dawn. Everyone who was able to drag themselves out at the early hour had a great time.

E is for Everyone: Have a wonderful homecoming weekend.

Gamma Phi Beta

The Gamma Phi has been working hard this week and last on homecoming decorations. You can tell a Gamma Phi this week by her blue hands and chicken wire scratches! A certain Pat McClain has been seen around with very coral hands, and Terry Lumley was last seen carrying bags of paper napkins into the house. Cut, fold, slash, ouch! It's been a hazardous two weeks for all concerned—homecoming comes but once a year.

And then we were wondering why we didn't see a lot of Shirley McCullough this weekend. She was out getting herself pinned to John Sidor of the Air Force Academy. Best wishes, Shirley!

Kappa Kappa Gamma

The weekly meeting was adjourned quickly so the Kappas could get to work on homecoming decorations. The Kappas anticipate a busy week of working on decorations and preparing for our debate next Monday with the DG's. The debate "Birth Control" will be judged and promises to be quite interesting.

After the game this Saturday the Kappas will be on hand to welcome guests to our open house. Sunday night at 6:00 our Scholarship Banquet will be held at the Swiss Chalet.

More warm congratulations go to newly-pinned Barb Couey and Sam Coleman!

Kappa Alpha Theta

The Theta seniors returned from their senior "sneak" to Taos, New Mex., just in time to plunge into homecoming activities. The house is staging "Operation Crepe Paper," giving a prize to the girl who can get most entangled in the decorations. Seriously, the Thetas are diligently and enthusiastically working to complete house decorations for homecoming.

Our thanks to the Sigma Chis for the wonderful dinner and social evening last Sunday.

We are so proud of Nancy Bowers, our candidate for homecoming queen, and wish her the best of luck.

Phi Delta Theta

It was erroneously reported in last week's TIGER that Chuck Kennett was pinned to Jane Morgan at a DG dessert. In order to placate the injured parties, let it be known that Chuck Mauritz was pinned to Sara Grogan and Curt Kennett to Jane Morgan. The printer offers his humblest apologies.

The Phi's are happy to welcome new pledges Don Cheley and Bob Bohac. That is, we were happy until Sunday evening, when they ungraciously contributed to the trouncing of the actives in the annual football game.

Saturday morning, at the ungodly hour of 7:00, it was discovered that the Phi Delt pledges had skipped. They were later found romping in the woods with the DG pledges, and both active chapters then joined in the revelry.

Brother Sam Coleman finally pinned former Homecoming Queen Barb Couey, it was announced Monday night.

Phi Gamma Delta

This week saw the climax of the Fiji fall season in our formal, which was held last Saturday evening. (Continued Page 10)

BOOM!

Today, foregoing levity, let us turn our keen young minds to the principal problem facing American colleges today: the population explosion. Only last week four people exploded in Cleveland, Ohio—one of them while carrying a plate of soup. In case you're thinking such a thing couldn't happen anywhere but in Cleveland, let me tell you about two other cases last week—a 45-year-old man in Provo, Utah, and a 19-year-old girl in Northfield, Minnesota. And, in addition, there was a near miss in High Point, North Carolina—an eight-year-old boy who was saved only by the quick thinking of his cat, Fred, who pushed the phone off the hook with his muzzle and dield the department of weights and measures. (It would, perhaps, have been more logical for Fred to dial the fire department, but one can hardly expect a cat to summon a fire engine which is followed by a Dalmatian, can one?)

But I digress. The population explosion, I say, is upon us. It is, of course, cause for concern but not for alarm, because I feel sure that science will ultimately find an answer. After all, has not science in recent years brought us such marvels as the maser, the bevatron, and the Marlboro filter? Oh, what a saga of science was the discovery of the Marlboro filter! Oh, what a heart-rending epic of trial and error, of dedication and perseverance! And, in the end, what a triumph it was when the Marlboro research team, after years of testing and discarding one filter material after another—iron, nickel, tin, antimony, obsidian, poundcake—finally emerged, tired but happy, from their laboratory, carrying in their hands the perfect filter cigarette! Indeed, what rejoicing there still is whenever we light up a Marlboro which comes to us in soft pack and Flip-Top Box in all fifty states and Cleveland!

Yes, science will ultimately solve the problems arising from the population explosion, but meanwhile America's colleges are in dire straits. Where can we find classrooms and teachers for today's gigantic influx of students?

Well sir, some say the solution is to adopt the trimester system. This system, already in use at many colleges, eliminates summer vacations, has three semesters per annum instead of two, and compresses a four-year-course into three years.

This is, of course, good, but is it good enough? Even under the trimester system the student has occasional days off. Moreover, his nights are utterly wasted in sleeping. Is this the kind of all-out attack that is indicated?

I say no. I say desperate situations call for desperate remedies. I say that partial measures will not solve this crisis. I say we must do no less than go to school every single day of the year. But that is not all. I say we must go to school 24 hours of every day!

The benefits of such a program are, as you can see, obvious. First of all, the classroom shortage will disappear because all the dormitories can be converted into classrooms. Second, the teacher shortage will disappear because all the night watchmen can be put to work teaching solid state physics and Restoration drama. And finally, overcrowding will disappear because everybody will quit school.

Any further questions?

© 1953 Max Shulman

Yes, one further question: the makers of Marlboro, who sponsor this column, would like to know whether you have tried a Marlboro lately. It's the filter cigarette with a man's world of flavor. Settle back and enjoy one soon.

AFA Outmans Soccer Tigers

Substituting freely and frequently, often by the squadron-load, the Air Force Academy outmanned and outheaded CC's soccer Tigers last Saturday, 4-1. For the most part, the players played very creditably for the Academy, though they seemed more interested in the football game in Lincoln, Nebraska than in soccer. One cadet forgot that the object of the game was to kick the ball and in a true dedicated defense of his goal kicked Tony Bryan's head instead. An Air Force major stepped up to take charge, his medals clanging their authority, and hustled the groggy CC captain off towards his car. En route, the major remembered his radio, and the out-ranked Capt. Bryan couldn't deny the major, who rushed back to retrieve it—just in time to catch the closing minutes of his football game.

The refs, for the most part reffed. Being Air Force officers, they discharged their duties with valor. As true gentlemen of the service, they introduced everybody to everybody else, and made sure all players saluted them before entering the game. They watched and listened with vigor—watched the F-104's overhead and listened to the football game. When asked where he had played soccer, one nattily attired official pondered the profound question and finally guessed that he played at West Point. So as not to disturb anyone, the refs politely refrained from blowing their whistles for the better part of the game. To the end of not disturbing the emotional, dedicated, fierce spirit with which the cadets enlivened the game, the officials allowed all the spectators to reserve illegal aspects of the game—such as handling the ball, pushing, sliding tackles, and climbing on opponent's backs. Dr. Bernard commended these hardy officials for being able to perform the dubious task of swallowing their whistles.

When word spread around the Academy grounds that Abi Afonja had had the audacity to score a goal mid-way through the third period, bringing the score to 2-1, the rank and file poured over the embankment, battalion upon battalion to give aid. Quickly and noisily, like so many high school cheering sections, they formed ranks and attacked the field, grunting go-go-go. And their machine did not fail; two more goals were quickly scored.

Again, the Tigers fell short of the Air Force as far as stamina was concerned, and the legions of reserves did not aid the cause. CC played well, but was outmatched and outrefied.

Abi AFONJA AND UNIDENTIFIED FRIEND vie for the ball in last Saturday's soccer game. Our guy finally zoomed away with it, leaving his opponent extremely blue.

CC Tigers Downed By Colo. State Bears

This year's Tiger football team has played great defensive ball at times, only to lose on some last moment desperate pass by an opponent. It has also played some great offensive ball only to lose its momentum due to some mental lapse and a resulting penalty. But throughout the entire season until last Saturday the Gold and Black Bengals have always had a consistent and steady defense. However, on this warm fall afternoon the Bengal line was riddled off-tackle and the ends until the final score told the story of a 32-14 loss to the Colorado State College Bears at Greeley.

The game opened with Captain Al Loosli winning the toss and the Tiger offensive club taking immediate charge owing to one quick first down before getting a personal foul and an off sides penalty in quick succession. Being forced to punt, the Tigers gave Greeley control of the ball, and they immediately started a march down the field that resulted in a score. It should probably be mentioned at this point that the coaching staff was unable to get its defensive squad into the game until too late due to the new N.C.A.A. rules which the Tigers played under for the first time this season. However, the Tigers went right back into the game and on a newly found passing attack scored six points on a Reeser to Mestek pass. CSC came right back again after an exchange or two of the ball and scored on a 70 yard drive with Ken Sorg going over from the 2 yard line. The conversion by CSC was not good, and the score remained 13-7 at half time.

During the intermission it was discovered that Captain Al Loosli had injured his right hand and was unable to make use of his upper appendage while tackling. This was only the first of a series of blows that were to stun the Tigers the rest of the afternoon.

The Tigers returned to the field with Captain Loosli playing only an offensive game, and when they got control of the ball they soon put it across for six more points with Warner Reeser dazzling the crowd with his pitcher to acrobatic end Lee Muller. Sabol's conversion attempt was good and the Tigers once more had the lead.

The defensive team held, and the offense was back 3 plays after scoring their go ahead tally. Again Reeser found Muller open several times, but this time the Bears were looking for the aerials and safety Ed Pittock picked one off and returned it to the Tiger 29 yard line. Several plays later Frank Dakney carried the ball over for the Bear's side.

CC again took the kickoff and started another march down the field. Again Reeser found his receivers open, but again one of his passes was picked off, this time by right corner back Clark Rodman. Reeser, taking the responsibility for the interception, passed Rodman and made the tackle while in the process also managing to separate his shoulder. This was the final blow to CC hopes where alternate quarterback Cubby Welch was on the side line recuperating from a concussion received the week before.

From this point on, the Tigers played a useless game. The Bears turned their second interception of the afternoon into another score. After this it was necessary to have slotback Mike Dennison move to quarterback which he did to the best of his ability. However, the Tigers could not hold the football, and CSC had to drive for one more touchdown before the game ended.

The Tigers play non-league Concordia next weekend and hope to entertain a large homecoming

INTRAMURALS

With the flagball season nearly half over, all attempts teams have made to try to pull away from the runners-up have been futile. That only four of the 20 teams show perfect records lends further substance to the fact that even the last place teams must be recognized as contenders in the final weeks.

The nearest one team has come to monopolizing its league must lie with South 3 of the American league. Having run through four consecutive opponents with scores always near 40 points, South 3 prepares to meet its last hurdle—North 4. After suffering a near first game setback, North 4 has soundly beaten its last three opponents and must be considered a threat to South 3's first place finish because of its sound defense. With the faculty and North 4 sporting 2-1 won-lost records, it is still anyone's guess, however, who the eventual winner will be.

Just as close as the Slocum American league are the Fraternity and Slocum National league. While the Kappa Sigs continue their winning ways, Zetas, now with a 3-0 mark equal to the Kappa Sigs, have moved into contention. The National league finds South 1 and South 2 tied for first.

the first meeting between the two teams ending a 7-7 deadlock.

● Although the intramural tennis doubles matches and the Slocum singles matches are yet to pass the first round, the Fraternity single matches have reached the semi-finals. With firstfeld of Sigma Chi to meet the winner of the Hutchins (Kappa Sig) and Graham (Zeta) match; and Heibler (Phi Gam) to meet either Wadsworth of the Phi Deltas or Caldwell of Kappa Sig, the finals of the Fraternity tennis singles will probably come quite soon, an enthusiastic final match being anticipated.

Ski Movie to Have Clowns, Ski Flying

On Oct. 23, at 8 p.m. in the Broadmoor International Center, Warren Miller will personally narrate his latest film, "The Sound of Skiing." This excellent ski adventure film, presented by Sport Inc. (The Ski Shop), contains several creative and unusual sequences.

"When I arrive at a ski center to gather footage film, I usually look for one outstanding element, snow condition, a race, panoramic views, the problems of beginners, some single feature to film." Thus spoke producer Warren Miller, leader in the world of ski cinematography.

Warren went on to say, "Last spring at the Sugar Bowl, a very picturesque ski resort in Northern California, I was able to bring together five things and film them for 'The Sound of Skiing.'"

From ski flying behind the Iron Curtain to ski chases in California's Sugar Bowl, the presentation of "The Sound of Skiing" at the Broadmoor International Center is the finest in winter sports entertainment. Warren Miller, producer, will be there to personally narrate this 90 minute, color, sound film classic.—Adv.

ning at the Alamo Hotel. A cocktail party preceded the event at the Palmer House from whence we adjourned to the dance. Several alumni joined us for the festivities and a fine time was enjoyed by all.

Our preparations for homecoming were aided and abetted by Brother "Zero" who procured several items from willing donors. Such enthusiastic support from the local townspeople is most gratifying.

Homecoming Events Judged Successful

By Matt Railey

Homecoming, 1963, turned out to be a highly successful weekend. The usual homecoming activities, coupled with President Worner's inauguration and the production of Arms and the Man, provided an ample supply of events.

The actual homecoming events began Friday night when the house decoration judges toured the Greek houses. The winners were announced later as the Phi Gam's and the Gamma Phi's. Later Friday night a snake dance wound its way thru the campus to kick off the pep rally in front of Cositt. At the pep rally the football team was introduced by Coach Carle, the CC cheerleaders led a few cheers, and the CC band provided pep music. The big event of the evening was the crowning of homecoming queen Sharon Shackelford by last year's queen Barb Couey and football captain Al Loozil. A surprise added attraction was the crowning of King Nell, the first homecoming king in CC's history. Art Warwick was M.C. for the ceremonies and kept things moving with his witty commentary. After the rally there was a sock hop in the gym which proved to be a not so successful event because of the lack of a band. However, nobody minded and those that stayed had fun.

Saturday's events began with an all school picnic followed by the biggest event of all, the game. CC's football team truly "made" homecoming as they defeated the Concordia Bulldogs. By playing one of the most inspired, spirited games in CC history, they succeeded in knocking Concordia from the unbeaten ranks and more than that, in giving CC a great homecoming. During the half time of the game the Tigers and Tigresses executed formations, the cross country race was held, and the queen and her attendants were presented. All of this was accompanied by comedian Mike Durfee, who had the crowd rolling in the aisles before the second half began.

Saturday night the semi-formal dance was held at the Broadroom and was enjoyed by all. Mort Man's band provided the music in the main ballroom and the college All Star Twist Band was screaming in the main dining room. Next to the game, this was the most sparkling event of the weekend.

Homecoming provided all the students and some alumni an opportunity to take part in an all school function. Although homecoming has deteriorated from past years when CC was a football power, it seems it is still worthwhile, since so many students wish to take part.

Blue Key puts on homecoming each year and would appreciate criticism and suggestions for next year.

An Analysis of BAD Cultural Revanchism

"The current breakdown in bad moral attitudes in our time is well represented by the cultural revanchism of the forthcoming symposium, with its embelement in contemporary beliefs and principles, its crypto-metaphysical emphasis and suit generis, its mass medium rationale."

—Bernard Arnest

This quotation arrived at our office amid a flourish of excitement which stirred one lethargic reporter to delve further into the subject, later discovered to be BAD. First on the list of suspects was chairman Gilbert Johns, who was apprehended while conditioning a pigeon to operate a typewriter. He was simultaneously composing a monograph on the symposium. He said that:

"The purpose of this scheme is to present a taxonomic dichotomization which would allow for unilateral comparisons. In this way, we can hope to distinguish the relevant variables which determine the functional specificities of symposia topics."

Meanwhile, the pigeon repeatedly pecked away at the keys, "Short speeches on various subjects, short speeches on various subjects . . . being reinforced each time with light refreshments."

This negative reinforcement propelled the reporter to the normally stodgy English department, where Dr. Ross held forth. Writing cryptic Greek messages on the blackboard, he stated:

"As Kenneth Burke has said in his Philosophy of Literary Form (pp. 39-40) 'An explicit ritual of scapegoat transference may, paradoxically, often be the best way of protecting the individual from the deceptions of pseudoscientific objectivity. For in explicit ritual, the vessel is formally appointed, but in its concealed pseudoscientific variants, where one's views are simply 'projected' upon the scapegoat, and taken literally to be an objective, absolute, nonfunctional, intrinsic . . .'"

Dashing madly onward, our man noticed that the Greek phrases, loosely translated, said "Period for discussion after each lecture. Demonstration, visual aid, and musical performances will also be included."

ed." Without attempting to interpret this, the intrepid adventurer decided to venture into the very lair of BAD, Perkins Hall—the BAD location. There Carlton Garner was teaching a class in Shintoinism while composing 16th century madrigals on an old piano with the toes of his left foot. His reaction to questioning was mild dispassia and a quote from Kahl-heinz Stockhausen:

"Differentiation of the intended permutation of timbres is obtained from the complexity resulting from the simultaneous combination of the six formant regions within one sound process, from the varying of the elements or groups of elements, in all their components, according to the series, and of coordinating a special intervallic scale of partials or of medium frequency width ratios in each moment octave."

The madrigal seemed to be a somewhat inaccurate plagiarism of part of an old French Chantre Romanesque concerning a knight who was to meet his fair lady from 1:00 to 5:00, Saturday, Oct. 26. It was BAD.

As sanity began to fade into the amorphous depths of intellectualism, one final note of clarity was heard ringing from the heavens. Revelation was, and at once the true significance of BAD was obvious. It is the complete understanding of the responsible individual in a free society in the expanding cosmos.

Oktoberfest Tonight

Whether you German good speak or not, tonight is your opportunity for a lively and entertaining evening as the Colorado College German Club and the Colorado Springs German-American Cultural Society sponsor the second annual Oktoberfest in the Rastall Center dining hall, from 7:30 p. m.

Besides dancing and the traditional German games, the fest will offer wurst, wienerschnitzel, apfelsinaft, and various exotic Germanic dishes (no Lowenbrau, however).

German Club members and their guests will be admitted free of charge, and all other students are invited to attend at $1 per.

PUB BOARD MEETING

The Publications Board meeting for the purpose of interviewing applicants for Tiger editor and business manager will be open to the student body. It will be held this afternoon, Friday, October 25th, at 1 p.m. in the WES room in Rastall Center.

Pres. Worner's Inauguration Marks Stage in CC History

By Sally Rule

On Friday, October 18th, in a ceremony on the central quadrangle, CC's first alumnus president, Dr. Lloyd E. Worner, was inaugurated. Chairman of the Colorado College Board of Trustees, Armin Bradley Barney, presided at the ceremony and administered the oath of office to Dr. Worner.

President Elmer Ellis of the University of Missouri gave the inaugural address. President Ellis emphasized that the inauguration marked a stage not only in Dr. Worner's history, but also in the history of CC as a leader of liberal arts education. He noted that CC has developed, particularly in the last eight years, from an "outpost of education" in the Western states, to an outstanding college with a promising future. Ellis stressed the fact that now is the time for teachers to examine their success in motivating students to apply classical learning to their own lives, and for students to seek knowledge in order to be qualified to govern the world of the future.

Greetings to President Worner from the perspectives of CC faculty, students, alumni, and a "sister liberal arts college" were given by CC botany professor, William Penland, ASCC President Harris Sherman, William Hauey, president of the National Alumni Association, and Thurston Manning, provost of Oberling College.

All four speakers emphasized the fact that CC did not inaugurate a "newcomer" as president. Dr. Worner was a CC student body president; thus he knows the goals and traditions of the school. In positions such as Dean of the College, and Dr. Julius Baird, or lege, Dr. Worner has worked with CC students, faculty, and trustees. As a creator of the Honor System and the round table discussion, have an alumnus become president of CC while "still an active part of the school."

Music for the ceremony was provided by the Colorado College Choir, under the direction of Professor Donald Jenkins; the CC band, directed by Professor Earl Julius; and Dr. Julius Baird, or lege, Dr. Worner has worked with CC students, faculty, and trustees. As a creator of the Honor System and the round table discussion, Administration Explains Frosh Car Regulations

The regulation prohibiting freshmen from owning and operating automobiles on the campus was adopted several years ago in order to eliminate a major distraction in a freshman's life that might interfere with his adjustment from secondary school to a residential college, such as Colorado College. In the past this adjustment has proven difficult for some, due to the demands on the time outside scheduled class hours. The regulation also helps to develop the idea of a college community, whereby all facets of college life — academic, social, recreational and spiritual — center on the campus.

New students and their parents are certainly made aware of the regulation before accepting admission, and if they choose to deliberately violate the rule it will be interpreted that they have changed their minds about attending Colorado College.

The spirit of the rule must be observed and there may be a few occasions when renting an automobile will not violate the spirit of our rule. Good examples may be when a student has the opportunity to visit with a parent making connections at the Denver airport en route from a business trip to home. Another would be to attend an all-college function scheduled off-campus when no transportation is provided for him.

F.S.C. and the U.N.

Next Thursday at 4 p.m. in W.E.S. room, the F.S.C. will present a critical look at the United Nations. Protagonists in the discussion will include three of our knowledgeable foreign students plus a faculty member. Everyone is invited to attend this commemoration of U.N. week.

ASCC Notes

There were many issues of major concern presented to the ASCC this week. Paul Larson started the proceedings with his presentation of the budget. Because of a lack of funds, it was necessary to cut some of the requests to make everyone happy. The budget will be voted on by the Executive Council next week.

Ben Lyon aired his opinion of what the Publications Board should consist. The Board benefits from the opinions of at least six people directly concerned with the campus publications. Ben's philosophy is that the ASCC appointees therefore ought not to be affiliated with any of the publications. This way they can be more objective in their views. The Council felt that it was advisable to support Ben's proposal and unanimously approved the appointment of Ray Jones to this position.

The next order of business was one of revising the by-laws of the constitution so that a Senior will be eligible to run for editor of the Tiger. This revision was necessary since the Council approved Publications Board's proposal that the Editor and Business Manager of this publication be selected in the spring to hold the office for one year.

Finally, there was much discussion of whether or not the Publications Board meeting where these positions are filled with the approval of the Executive Council should be open to any concerned student. The Council once more felt that this was a legitimate proposal and that it was congruous with that one which Ben had made earlier. In this light it was approved.

The campus photographer then made some obnoxious comments and proceeded to take a picture (or was it two?) of the smiling faces of your hardworking ASCC representatives.

Respectfully submitted
Karen McIlvaine
ASCC Secretary

LETTERS to the EDITOR

Dear Editor:

After the loud repercussion from the October 4th issue of the Tiger — which made one wonder if we hadn't been handed a copy of the NAACP Journal by accident — I had expected that the editorial staff would re-evaluate their position. However, this has obviously not occurred.

I am referring to the sports article "covering" the CO-AFA soccer game on October 12th. Never in my life have I seen a more biased and juvenile example of personal prejudice. If that article had been the only sports column in the paper, or if the others had been written in the same vein, I might have thought one of the Tiger's staff members simply did not understand the principles of journalistic writing. But considering the CO-AFA article to be the CO-Colo. State column. The latter is a fairly good sports article, but the former is simply garbage.

To begin with, I was at the game, and the AFA goalie did not kick Tony Bryan in the head. And the Major who took charge did not have his "medals" clanging! And to say that the referees required everyone to salute them before the game is absurd. Admittedly, the cadet section seemed more interested in the AFA-Nebraska game than in the soccer game in front of them. But if CC had a chance for a bowl bid, I dare say their interest in soccer would be secondary too.

There are many more instances of this foolishness, but I think you get my point. This is not journalism, and it doesn't reflect very well on the integrity and sportsmanship of the CC student body. And I am sorry that the attitudes and childish actions of the minority should reflect on the student body. And it did seem that our boys at the game were very poor representatives of CC. I was ashamed to see them in dirty sweatshirts, tennis shoes that were more holes than fabric, and shirt tails hanging out.

I am proud of CC. I thought our players did a good job and played a credible game. But I was surprised and disappointed that the Tiger editors would have allowed such an article to be printed that so obviously reflects on the student body's maturity and sportsmanship.

Sincerely,

Merilyn Wise

Dear Miss Wise:

Your letter has been brought to the attention of the sports editors of the TIGER and is greatly appreciated.

We would have to argue with some of your analyses of the soccer game and the crowd reaction. We would agree with you that the goalie for the Air Force Academy did not kick Tony Bryan in the head, or on checking with him it seems that an Air Force full-back did.

Secondly, we find it hard to accept the Air Force's lack of attention to the soccer game as being excusable because "if CC had a chance for a bowl bid, I dare say their interest in soccer would be secondary too." After all, if CC were so disinterested in soccer, why would the college have taken on its new athletic policy of student participation and doing away with imported semi-professional athletes? It seems to us that if CC wanted to play in a bowl, we would immediately give out 40 to 60 full time athletic scholarships.

We would also have to say that the shame you suffered because of the dress of some CC students in "sweat shirts and tennis shoes" seems to have little to do with the Tiger sports section. I believe this would mock the appropriately addressed to some section on style and dress.

We must apologize for certain overtones of sarcasm in the article, but at the same time we cannot accept your total rebuke of the paper. We do respect some of your letter as personal opinion and would say it is your right to be right and wrong. — Sports editor

Dear Editor:

Just a brief note to tell you your Tiger stimulating and informative. I found your controversial issue on race relations in Colorado Springs. At a time when the racial issue is of paramount importance in our nation, it is so justifiable for a college newspaper to attempt to deal with it, as you have done, on more than just superficial level.

Sincerely yours,
Carlton Gamber

Dear Editor,

I would like, through the TIGER to thank the following for doing such a fine job of organizing and conducting homecoming:

Steve Stahl, co-chairman; Pat Carson, house corporation; Mike Hecox, pep rally; Mike Hecox, half-time ceremonies; Nancy Deters, half-time ceremonies; Warwick, sock hop; Terry Fong, publicity; Dave Holdorf, dance.

All of these persons contributed a great deal of time and effort to their particular phase of homecoming. I can honestly say I never worked with a better group of people on anything.

I would also like to thank the Bengals, Tigers, Tigrettes, the band, and all of the other group who helped Mr. Oden and Mr. Berger deserve special thanks for their help. — Matt Raley

To the Editors:

The TIGER has been uncommonly good reading this fall for some of us. The conflict between those who want it to be a paper for social and sports news only and those who want to see the paper take stands on controversial issues seems to reflect a larger world with broader concerns that have formerly seen in TIGER pages.

We would like to encourage those students who are opposed to conformist social patterns at CC who are insisting on the life of the mind as the major basis of college, and who want to take a public stand on matters of social justice. They may be in the minority, but this is good training for later life where doubtless the same situation will prevail. We trust that they will continue to question all sorts of things and that some of the other students will come to see that while questioning does threaten the status quo, it also provides the only hope for a better life for us individually and collectively.

Shove Chapel

Preacher: The Reverend Roy Smith, Campus Minister, University of Colorado, Boulder.
Sermon Title: "Faith Is Strength"

Worship Leader: Professor Kenneth Burton

This weekend students from the University of Colorado and Colorado College will be meeting together for a discussion and prayer. The subject will end on the campus of Colorado College with a worship service in Shove Chapel. The Reverend Roy Smith, a campus minister at Boulder, will be preacher at this service. Mr. Smith has been at the University of Colorado for a number of years and has done some fine student religious work in that place. We extend warm welcome to all the students of Colorado College to join with the students from Boulder (about 50 in number) at this worship service. The officers of the preacher group will afterwards be entertained at dinner at Colorado College.

EDITORIAL —

There is, said Aristotle, as great a difference between the educated man and the uneducated man as there is between the living and the dead. It is to this proposition that colleges are constructed: to bring the dead back to the living, to create an environment where people must think. That this is manifestly an unusual circumstance is too patent to be contended.

The newspaper believes that it resides within this special circumstance. Therefore it believes that a mechanical construction of what news is, is sufficient to its needs; to say that news stops at the boundaries of the school is to pander to mediocrity. News in a college is contained in anything that the educated should know. The unexamined life is not worth living and it is to these sentiments that this paper is dedicated.

Rally Round the Standard

THE SCENE: The warm, bustling twilight of Bemis Dining Hall, the place where many students of a small midwestern liberal arts college eat their evening meal. In a corner by the doors, his back supported by a standard, hulks a huge and watchful man. He growls intermittently, and is obviously liberally educated — powerful in stature, rarified in intellect. An undulating stream of color and chatter flows through the doors; the students are entering. Suddenly the man, formerly known as THE AVENGER, here only as THE CHECKER, slams forward and grabs an arm in the crowd...

THE CHECKER: Hey buddy, where the bell's your tie?

ATHAPASCAN (a student): What do you mean? I left my bottle of gangrene repellent at home, so I'd appreciate it if you'd let my arm go.

THE CHECKER: I mean you got no tie on, that's what I mean. (Tightening his grip).

ATHAPASCAN (grimacing): Well, you're right, I don't seem to have one on, do I? But I was in the library all afternoon writing a paper, really quite tiring, and just came straight here so that...

THE CHECKER: You got a tie in your pocket?

ATHAPASCAN: No, I don't believe so.

THE CHECKER: You got no tie. You got a paper. We got standards.

ATHAPASCAN: But this paper is pretty important, and I've had some new ideas that might be pretty good...

THE CHECKER: Nobody made you come to this here college, and isn't nobody making you eat here. You wanna eat here, you gotta remember we got standards. We got standards.

(The standard against which THE CHECKER had been leaning topples, crushing several students. Five Lithuanian woodchoppers appear and swiftly and silently drag them out, subduing the one or two bystanders who do not continue to walk fastidiously forward.)

ATHAPASCAN: But, I have these ideas, and I thought I'd just eat, and then go back...

THE CHECKER: Don't come in here no more without a tie. You gotta wear ties. We got standards.

AFTERTHOUGHT: The writer wishes to bolster an administrator's decision to tack together a bulwark of respectability, on the grounds that:

(1) the college's educational task is "to develop in the student depth of knowledge and perception, breadth of interest, dedication to the continuous pursuit of learning, and a pattern of life-time values individually arrived at," thus making the necessity of tie-wearing obvious,

(2) quite right, the administration, not the students, should make this decision, since liberal arts colleges are by common knowledge administrative breeding grounds, places where administrators practice decision-making and save students from vicious spirals of seediness,

(3) the wearing of ties obviously precludes things like T-shirts and bare feet,

(4) nobody makes us come to this college,

(5) the checker has a lot of very nice (standard) double-breasted suits,

(6) if junior high schools have dress requirements, we can too, and

(7) wearing ties to dinner contributes incalculably to the spirit of family living which so pervades the campus.

— Lopez Strappanzari

CAPT. BLUNTSCHLI (Dale Spall) heartily greets Catherine Petkoff (Lydia Swzec) in last week's performance of "Arms and the Man."

Drama Production Proves Successful in Spirit, Pace

By Cindy Muntwyler

Life is full of surprises, but not many of them are as cheering and relaxing as was the CC Player's production of "Arms and the Man," by George Bernard Shaw. We who saw the play stand in awe—not, primarily, of the acting itself—but of the tremendous spirit of the entire production, seen particularly in its pace.

"Arms and the Man" especially needs to move quickly, even more so than do most plays—otherwise, half of the comedy and most of the point are lost. Apparently all eight of the CC Players realized this, and so there was not the smallest lull. Even the incident on Saturday of Raina's torn dress was camouflaged in professional style, and "the show went on."

A bow and a curtsy are due respectively to Dale Spall (Captain Bluntschli) and Carol Parsons (Raina Petkoff). It is debatable whether Shaw himself expected that his Captain Bluntschli could come alive with the convincing "knighthood" portrayed by Dale. If for no other reason, though there are many, Carol's portrayal of Raina is commendable because the character is very unlike the role and so presented a challenging role. It was fitting that Sergius Sarnoff was played by Houghton F. Randolph, Jr.—for what that name connotes is the exact nature of this hero-turned-villain—and he carried it off excellently. Lydia Swzec (Catherine Petkoff) was also excellent. Clark Corbridge (Nicola) and James D. Mayer (The Russian Officer) both interpreted their parts with a genuine awareness of their servile positions, though perhaps Clark could have expressed a bit more self-confidence. Perhaps the highest acclaim belongs to Joe Mattys, who lived the role of Major Petkoff, the father, on stage. An older character is a difficult one to play in the first place, particularly among all younger ones; but Joe was the Major—comic, masterful, militarily practical, and very human.

Though the actors performed their parts more than adequately, it was primarily the nature of the play and the pace that the performers maintained which made "Arms and the Man" a highlight of the Homecoming Weekend.

BAD NEWS!

BAD will actually be held Saturday, between 1:00 and 5:00 in Perkins Hall. The speeches will all be brief, with question period following each. Light refreshments will be served.

Foreign Student Presents First Impressions of USA

Ed Note—This is the first of a series of articles in which the TIGER has invited the foreign students of CC to present their first impressions of the customs and ways of the United States.

By Emile G. Duyster

At the Foreign Student meeting held two weeks ago, the idea sprang up that every week a foreign student at CC would write a short article on some of his first impressions in the United States. After they have had their say, the series may probably be continued by some American students who will take sweet revenge by telling us about the things that struck them most in our countries.

Yours truly arrived in clammy-hot New York after a cold journey on a student charter ship from Rotterdam, Holland. During the nine days of the crossing, all the Americans aboard had constantly warned us about the notorious customs officers that would welcome us. We were consequently very busy distributing our cartons of cigarettes among our friends that did not smoke, intending to get them back without paying import duties after our luggage had been inspected. In contrast with our expectations, the customs officers did not even bother to look into our suitcases at all and I had a hard time to recover my cartons in the confusion of the arrival.

We stayed only five hours in New York, because a friend and I had decided to take the same bus to Denver on the very day of our arrival. We therefore did not see much of the town with the second largest harbor in the world, but we noticed that both the Statue of Liberty and Times Square were smaller than expected, that the New York skyline at night is overwhelming, that the city is full of fall-out shelters, and that porters and taxi drivers are as talkative as they are expensive.

We soon got used to the penetrating disinfectant smell in the buses and waiting-rooms, but we just could not adjust ourselves to the thousands of ice-cubes that were put in our drinks, turning our stomachs into portable refrigerators. I am sure that most Europeans would shudder at the thought of eating steak, melon, ketchup and a slice of bread loaded with peanut butter all at the same time. The American cuisine is not only completely different from what we are used to, but so are your eating habits. Even at the Captain's dinner, knives were hardly used, while I have seen no American using a knife and fork to eat sandwiches or chicken. Everybody was expected to dress formally on the last night on board, resulting in many of the male passengers eating their dinner in spotless white shirts, ties and jackets, but without parting from your American national costume, i.e. tennis shoes, white socks and Bermuda's. Why the latter are called "shorts" and why so many American girls like to wear them is a riddle for me. Is it that they are afraid to show their lovely legs in truly short shorts?

Unlike the Puerto Ricans in West Side Story, I am certainly not "Sick of America" and chances are indeed small that I ever will be, notwithstanding all your peculiarities, about some of which Tom, from Switzerland, will write in the next edition.

CC Hootenany

CC Hootenany is November 1 in the Loomis lobby. All those wishing to participate please contact Dan Cooper, Ext. 375, or leave him a note in the Rastall Center Board box at the Rastall desk. This announcement does not include those who tried out for the "Inter-University Hootenannies."

Draft

All men who are registered with Selective Service are to report to the College Registrar in Cutler Hall as soon as possible.

It is important that this be done immediately, as the College is required to communicate to the various draft boards certain information that can only be secured from the men in question.

Residential College Enriches The Liberal Arts Education

By Callie Ewing

The opinion of the administration on the subject of a residential campus is a favorable one. In statements by President Worner, Dean Curran, Dean Moon, Dean Reid and Mr. Wood the following views were presented.

The primary objective of a liberal arts college is education, not only in the classroom, but in the dining room, residence halls and recreational facilities. The greatness of this kind of education lies in the fact that the students learn from one another as well as from their professors. All facilities are located in one area to enable the students to easily take advantage of them. Dean Curran stated, "If students in a town like Colorado Springs are to secure their education in an atmosphere that contributes to intellectual life, much of the intellectual life must be provided by the college—which means to me that it must represent a cohesive group."

Colorado College was founded as a residential college, providing living quarters for students from distant places. As the student body increased, there has not been enough room to provide housing for all; therefore some students were forced to live off campus. Better than 80% of the students at the present time live on campus. By the fall of '65 it is hoped that this will increase to 90%, with the addition of a new complex for upperclassmen.

A residential college such as this has certain advantages and disadvantages over a large university. This is a community where classroom and extra-curricular activities are closely connected. There is not the individual freedom one finds in a larger school. Located in a city such as Colorado Springs, this college must be oriented as to provide the opportunities for culture that the city lacks. The symposium and well-known speakers act as guards against the tendency for complacency. Mr. Wood emphasized the fact that a student applying to CC must want a closely cohesive community, where one gains an education in and out of the classroom; if he is not willing to accept the responsibilities of being a member of this community, he does not belong here.

Another interesting aspect of a residential college is that it tends to build loyal alumni groups, who support the college spiritually and financially. CC needs this support.

These members of the administration feel that CC not only functions better as a residential college, but that this is where its future lies. A residential campus is a vital part of a school that is based on the overall concept of a liberal arts college.

Fraternities Supplement To Academic Education

By Dave Holdorf

Each of us is enrolled at Colorado College for one and only one purpose—to gain an education is not exclusively the task of books and classes. The learning process encompasses a much wider scope of activity in preparation for responsible citizenship. No college curriculum pretends to offer the formula for future success.

As fraternities will point out, Greek life is based on the precepts of friendship, responsibility, loyalty, scholarship, and enjoyable social experience. In becoming a member of a fraternity, an individual must accept his responsibility to the group and in return will receive the innumerable benefits of close friendship and mutual cooperation in academic and non-academic endeavors. Our primary loyalties should be directed to individual accomplishment. The Greek system bases its existence upon this fact. It is to the accomplishment of this end that they pledge themselves.

College fraternities would be presumptuous to assume that they offer the only answer to the question of social and cultural development. Nor can fraternities claim to be a guarantee of valid social guidance. They offer one answer, and for many, the best answer. Fraternity living is simply an experience, and an experiment, in group living. The individual research carried on in leadership, competition, management, and service is indisputably of significant value, not for providing any semblance of an ultimate solution, but as an apprenticeship for life. Often the talents of capable individuals are untapped simply because of the absence of encouragement. Fraternities offer the opportunity for every member to assume a responsible position of leadership, and further, to promote its continuance in the college community. In a fraternity, the policies and activities are determined by the members of the house, a task often administered by outside influences. This is not to say that the fraternity house is independent of college influence—neither party would consider this a completely desirable situation—but it is to say that the majority of the responsibilities of residence and activity are delegated to the individuals of the fraternities. The validity of emphasizing leadership experience cannot be overstated.

On the Colorado College campus there exists a desirable situation of a wide diversity of interest and personality. Too often, this diversity is not utilized for mutual benefit, and may, in some instances, even work as a detriment to the college community as a whole. Just as wide a diversification is to be found in any one fraternity, but the diversities complement each other rather than contradict. Fraternities provide the opportunity for associations which quite conceivably might never be made fruitful under normal circumstances.

At Colorado College we are faced with hardly a unique problem. Are the Greek fraternities at Colorado College fulfilling their obligation to the campus? Even more pertinent, are the fraternities capable of fulfilling such obligations? The fraternity exists to serve the ideals of the college. Ten years ago CC was a "sleepy little college in a rich little city, a marrying ground for rich kids." (Sunday Empire, October 20, 1963). In becoming what many call a "free thinker's teaching paradise," CC has undergone a tremendous transformation. With the expanding tasks and goals of Colorado College, the fraternity system has encountered a challenge—a challenge which they have willingly accepted. Let this, then, constitute an answer to our critics—we have accomplished much more than you credit us with, we are capable of accomplishing even more, and we will.

THE VIEWS STATED BELOW ARE NOT THOSE OF THE SCHOOL, THE "TIGER," OR ITS EDITORIAL STAFF. THEY ARE OPINIONS OF INDIVIDUAL STUDENTS AND SHOULD BE INTERPRETED AS SUCH.

Fraternities Detrimental To Life on CC Campus

By Don Adcock

I have been at Colorado College only one year, and yet it has been enough to convince me that fraternities are neither needed nor desirable at this school. There were, of course, several things that immediately struck me. One of the first was the double standard concerning college rules. For example, non-Greeks living on campus are not allowed to drink on college grounds, while a few hundred yards away fraternities men, in the security of their houses, enjoy a couple of beers or something stronger. There are even parties, at which every couple has their own private keg—monogrammed no less. The administration knows what is going on. They simply choose to look the other way. Make no mistake about it, the question here is not whether or not students should be drinking on campus. The question is, why should fraternities men have the right to break rules that other students must follow. It is a question that many independents have been asking for years.

Later in the year there was rush. Fraternity members in erudite conversations will list many reasons for joining a fraternity—first members become better students, learn to live with others, have a more complete campus life. But then listen to the reasons that they give second semester freshmen—sign up and we'll provide girls, cars, and booze—for $24.70 a month. This appeal is the true strength of the rush program, and don't let anyone tell you differently. If fraternities are to be justified on this campus it is entirely on such a basis.

Undoubtedly, many a fraternity men would answer, "What is wrong with social activities?" They are important parts of our college lives. I too believe that nothing is wrong with social activities but I believe just as firmly that (1) there are other undesirable effects from a fraternity system at CC and (2) that social activities are just as feasible outside a fraternity.

Let us turn to undesirable effects. First, fraternities do not encourage studying. There is a definite anti-intellectual sentiment among most frat members. If you will not accept my statement, then accept the facts. Of 61 men on the Dean's List last semester 15 were from fraternities. Good students, who like to have fun too, believe it or not are in the fraternities. In reality, those leaders of Phi Delta Theta who never tire of claiming to be intellectuals must accept the fact that their fraternity has a smaller percentage of students on the Dean's List than the percentage of the student body taken as a whole. Last year this same fraternity, which is generally accepted as the frat for scholars, gave a bid to a friend of mine. He had done only two things—signed up for their rush parties without attending and maintained a 3.7 grade average first semester. That is how interested they were in him as a person. That is how despised the fraternities are for good students.

Much more damaging is the effect of the fraternity system on the unity of the campus. Obviously, under any system social groups will form and conflicts will arise. But these social ties and conflicts should be based on a natural rather than an artificial situation. Under the present fraternity system the unity of each fraternity group is artificially produced in two ways—by emphasizing the supposed uniqueness of each group and by placing the pledges in trying situations. In the first case each fraternity tells its members of its long and glorious history and makes them memorize numbing jumbo for various special ceremonies and gatherings. The second technique is most prominent during Hell Week when the pledges are banded together through trial and are made real "Sigma Chi men," "Phi Gam men" or what have you. One cannot help but be reminded of the old time practices of teenage gangs in junior high. At least I'm sure that is what a certain German exchange student thought last year when the Kappa Sig pledges mistakenly threw all his possessions outside on the lawn. They thought he was one of "the boys." I am sure he didn't forget, so thoughtlessness. The artificiality of the whole system can be seen by the fact that the fraternities require attendance not only at their meetings, rushes, etc., but at their social functions. Several weeks ago, for example, a Freedom March was held in which many independent students and faculty members participated but not one fraternity man. Why—it was Greek Weekend. This artificial basis of Greek organization is an unnecessary driving force on our campus. Each fraternity creates its own unity at the expense of campus unity. With activities involving 1,300, enough genuine dividing conflicts will develop. Why establish an artificial social scheme that makes tolerance and contact between different individuals that much harder?

Some more sophisticated fraternity men will tell you that the particular organization of fraternities has special advantages—(1) It enables you to meet a fairly large number of different type individuals and (2) It helps you learn to get along with other people. This is nonsense on both counts. One need not think long to find that individual fraternities are characterized not by their diversity but by their homogeneity. Furthermore, it is ridiculous to assume that among a small student body of 1,300 those that wish to meet many people could not do so unless they were fraternity members.

As to learning to live with others, two things must be said: (1) Every year the fraternity members with their blackball procedure are ridiculous in assuming to live with certain different or old students and (2) the point that we must learn to cooperate is irrelevant to the issue. Everyone of us, every day is forced to learn this principle regardless of our Greek or non-Greek standing. In school, in business, in science, in community, the trend has been for some time to conform to adjust to the group. As William Whyte has said, it is much more important today that we encourage individuality. Conformity is built into the system and will take care of itself.

Finally, let us consider the possibility of social activities without fraternities. Deferred rush has meant the establishment of friendships and social groups among freshmen before they decide about joining a fraternity. These friendships and social groups are formed naturally by common interests, problems (of significance), and common philosophies. With the belated help of the administration several of these groups were able to stay together and remain independent. The most notable is Lovelace House whose members have set up a regular calendar of social activities without incurring the institutionalized fellowship. There is no reason why such a solution will not work for the campus as a whole.

Conduct Committee Clarifies Authority

The administration wishes to clear up student misunderstanding concerning the fate of the Student Conduct Committee. Following are the facts of its present state and the Committee will retain the name, The President's Advisory Committee on Student Conduct. The Committee will consist of the Deans of Men and Women, two faculty members appointed by the faculty committee on committees, and five students; a senior man and woman; a junior man and woman; and the president of the AS CC as an ex-officio non-voting member.

Mr. Matt Ralley, who has worked hard on the committee, will be the senior man on the new committee, and Miss Stephanie Ralley, who also works on the committee, will be the senior woman. A junior man and woman will be selected from names that have been presented by the officers of student groups.

From now on in the spring of each year it will be the responsibility of the AS CC to select the sophomores; a sophomore man and a sophomore woman will serve as juniors on the committee the next fall. They will also be on the committee as seniors, to give continuity.

The committee will hear cases that are brought to its attention and will determine the facts of each case of charged misconduct. It will also hear cases brought to its attention and cases referred to it by the Judicial Board of AWS or the Intra-Hall Council of the residence halls. It will include misconduct of individuals, groups of individuals or organizations. The jurisdiction shall include violations of social policy by individuals or organizations.

Following determination of the facts, a report will be made to the President of the College and he will decide, after consulting as he sees fit, the circumstances with other what the committee shall be. The Committee will, of course, be able at any time to recommend leniency because of defined extenuating circumstances.

The purpose of this arrangement is to make it clear where the question rests and not to get into questions of over-ruling of authority. There may be disagreement from time to time but the responsibility for all decisions will be clear.

AWS Hallowe'en Party

Everyone's invited to the Halloween Party tomorrow, October 5, sponsored by A.W.S. for 36 freshmen from San Rafael Mission here in town. It's in Loomis Hall from 1:30-3:30. Refreshments will be served and you can watch or bet our little honored guests play the games in their Halloween costumes. Drop by any time and get that Happy Halloween Spirit!

Students Receive Perkins Prizes

Six Colorado College students have been awarded Perkins Prizes for outstanding academic achievement.

President Lloyd E. Worner presented the prizes of $100 each to the two sophomores who had the highest academic averages last year, to the two juniors who had the highest academic averages over the past two years, and to the two seniors who received the prize as juniors last year.

Sophomores receiving Perkins Prizes are Philip J. McCuey of Greeley, Colo., and Martha E. Prater of Denver. The two juniors are Paul L. Carson of Englewood, Colo., and Linda S. Perkins of Denver. The two seniors are David L. Bitters of Lovelock, Kans., and Maria F. Pick of Denver.

Honor or Social Pressure Basis of Honor System?

By Dee Wilson

Something I have been curious about for some time is where is the honor in the "honor code"? I have been unable to find it. Turning in fellow students may be practical (after all there's the curve you know), may be mature (my responsibility to the "campus community" of good grade students), but it has nothing to do with honor. Is it honorable to be responsible enough not to cheat? Hardly! It is not in a student's immediate self-interest to cheat. Thirty proctors are more efficient than one, and the costs of getting caught are too high.

Honor, I thought, was an internalized code of action, not dependent upon enforcement by others, and, in fact, important for the reason that the individual regulated his own conduct because of a belief in certain values and a pride in self. However, the "honor" code makes this definition archaic; a person acts honorably because he is a member of a group that believes such and such and will act as a group to enforce that belief. In fact, one of the reasons it is popular, I think, is that it makes traditional honor unnecessary. Anyone agrees that cheating is bad, but occasionally the temptation is strong. The code helps the person resist temptation by making the choice unnecessary.

I remember last year during freshman orientation week that members gave almost no time to the need for honor; some little greater time in emphasizing that cheating is bad and everyone thinks it's bad and finally the last time to arguing against the fact that turning in a friend was "ratting," or not loyal.

The code works, I think, because there is a universal value or negative value: cheating is bad. It is bad because, in a school where grades dominate learning, students want grading done as fairly as possible; not a situation as in many high schools where cheating helps make the grading system a little less snafu. Since students are grateful for the social pressure into which they can tune their radar when a "moral" crisis is upon them. The concept of honor, I emphasize again, plays very little part. But it might be asked, why should it? Students and faculty want cheating stopped; the code stops cheating, therefore it is good.

Would answer that the code is doing things other than stopping cheating. It stops any personal development in this area. People, to no little extent, are affected by what is expected of them. Since honor is a difficult thing to achieve, most will not develop it; they are not expected to. If they are not expected to have an internalized sense of honor, cheating is sometimes called character) regulating their conduct, generally they will not have one, and so society is furnished with a nice self-fulfilling prophecy: "Men can not be expected to act honorably out of belief and pride: I have created situations where, as much as possible, they do not have to, and where there is no effective social pressure to help men out. Look how they act. Disgraceful. Well, I was right." What, in fact, is going to happen when the threat of an honor council and social ostracism is not there to "help students out?"

I do not know if, on this campus, a real honor code would work or not. In terms of immediate effectiveness it would be. I'm sure, less efficient than the present code. But it might allow personal development; it might allow some to escape from a life based on radar to use Seisman's nice term.

There are two other reasons I think the code is dangerous. It works; anything that works is going to be used again. And the honor principle will be and has been used in situations where there are no universal ideas; used by a majority to terrify the minority, or as in the case with girls' hours, on this campus, used by an active minority to control the majority. Social pressure of this sort is particularly effective and therefore dangerous in a democracy; and often just as tyrannical as state power.

Secondly, calling the code an honor code is, besides the purest sophistry, extremely dangerous. If no decent respect is going to be shown for language, if war is peace, freedom is slavery, social pressure is honor. If we choose to call them so, then not only is communication going to be made difficult, but the original concepts of these words will be degraded and then forgotten. Sounds, because they have been defined one way as thought of one way, receive connotations. If then, these sounds are given new definitions they partake of the old connotations, no matter how different they really are. If I may seem a little enough request to most people to change the name of the code, but it is not little to me nor to anyone who realizes the tremendous molding power of languages. At least change the name to some innocuous something-or-other which will be a little more honest, and a little more honorable, if I can use the term in its increasingly archaic sense.

Off Campus Living Promotes Independence and Social Life

By Jim Heckman

Off campus living does not isolate the man from the campus, but rather gives the individual a chance to be more independent and self-reliant than he might be if he lived in the dormitory system. By living off campus, a student has more control over his immediate environment so that he can more nearly study when he pleases and how he pleases without having to worry about the perpetual noise that is present in even the most efficiently operated hall.

An off campus apartment allows a person to have his own privacy, both personal and social. Perhaps the dormitory experience is good in the Freshman and Sophomore years because it allows students to build up a body of friends who have common memories, but this one advantage is easily outweighed by the numerous disadvantages of residence hall life. Occupants of apartments are not friendly, and as has often been the case, new friendships are formed and old friendships are strengthened when off campus students have parties and discussions that are not possible in the dorm.

This last point raises the principle objection of many students to the idea of a completely residential college. Given the presently antiquated social regulations of the college, the most spartan type of social life is possible within the residence hall system. Such social life would easily stifle the most studious, and would lead, ultimately, to social stagnation, especially among unaffiliated students.

Another objection to the present dormitory system is that some students can find off campus apartments that cost less than the standard dormitory fee, and so they can save money by cooking their own food, and by choosing their own residences. If everyone were required to pay the standard campus residence fee, then we might face the prospect of eliminating certain groups of ambitious, but not wealthy, students who can economize in their own unique way.

Off campus students are not dis-

Variety Show Slated For Early November

The recently appointed production crew for the upcoming Variety Show has begun work on the many fine acts which will comprise the show planned for the week of November 5-8. Donna Jones, Chuck Cornell, and Louie Rottman will be this year's directors responsible for the screening of prospective acts for the show. In charge of the business for the production will be Gary Bouton and Sue White. As house managers, Gordon McNutt and Cubby Welch will be responsible for the theater management during each performance. Working behind the scenes will be members of Mr. Hand's Play Production Class, with Leland Smith, the stage manager. Responsible for advertisement will be Publicity Managers Mike Sabom and Gary Nelson. With the support of the student body, this year's show should be a real success. Any interested performers are urged to contact any of the above crew members for further information.

Honor Intrinsic Quality To Incoming CC Students

By Phil LeCuyer

As a member of the Honor Council, I have been asked "to present the other side of the issues" raised in Dee Wilson's article. As I understand them, his arguments are (1) The Honor System of CC is actually a system of social pressure. (2) While it is effective in stopping cheating, it prevents the development of a personal sense of honor. (3) Finally, our Honor System is built on a negative value that exists only because of a social framework, and when that framework disappears at graduation, no positive sense of honor remains.

Concerning the arguments about social pressure, I would refer back to the student's first contact with the Honor System. On the application for admission to CC is a paragraph characterizing the Honor System. At the end of this paragraph is the question "Are you willing to subscribe to the spirit and enforcement of this system?"

If applicants have questions or doubts concerning their replies, they can obtain detailed information about the system from the Admissions Department. However, all students must ultimately subscribe to the Honor System before they are admitted. The fact that we are students here means that we have all individually agreed to subscribe to the spirit and the enforcement of the Honor System. Thus the system is initially accepted by each student because of personal values, not because of social pressure. The Honor System does not pretend to induce a positive sense of honor in CC students. It merely offers an atmosphere for education based on these values that students supposedly already hold.

Further, the element of social pressure is not the force that sustains the Honor System. Each student has personally agreed to subscribe to its enforcement, i.e. to the maintenance of an atmosphere based on the principles of honor. The agreement pertains to himself as well as to others. When a student fails to act in accordance with these principles, he is violating what he previously accepted. The force wielded against him is not social pressure. It is the force of his own personal commitment. A careful reading of the constitution of the Honor System will reveal that its enforcement involves every possible measure to eliminate the element of social pressure. Instead of being subjected to this pressure, a suspected violator is offered complete protection from it. It becomes a relevant factor only if the accused person himself allows it to be.

I have been writing primarily about the enforcement of the Honor System because that is the subject of Dee's article. In fact, his article gives the impression that enforcement is the single element of the system. I would assert that this is a major error. Each student has also agreed to subscribe to the spirit of the Honor System, and I believe that most of them do. Because the spirit of the Honor

Goals of College Aim for Student Accomplishment

By Connie Cooper

Any institution must have clear cut goals, but it is not enough merely to have goals. Goals are the criteria for evaluating one's accomplishments and as such are more than a statement of objectives. Because they are vital to an institution, they must be continually redefined and interpreted. Mr. Arnest aptly summed up the goal of Colorado College when he said that it is "to begin the production of an educated person . . . one who can think clearly and honestly." In keeping the focus on education, CC endeavors for two things: one, to teach students to think; two, to give them an awareness of the world and of themselves so that they can find their own places within the world. To quote Dr. Sondermann:

"One specific area of future challenge for this, as for every other, institution of higher learning in this country is to communicate to its students, in a variety of ways, more and better information about the world in which all of us live. We must, it seems to me, devise better ways to prepare this student generation more adequately for the experience of living in the world where—as members of the White race, as heirs and bearers of Western culture and civilization, as descendants of the Judeo-Christian religious tradition, and as participants in a wealthy and comfortable society—we are and will increasingly become members of a minority group in all these categories."

Officially the goals of the school are those stated in the catalog. Some faculty members, as well as students, feel that these goals are useless and just for cataloging—at best, good only for promoting images of the school. Others put them to less secondary goals, byproducts, so to speak, of the primary goals of teaching students to think and helping them to find their places in the world. The goal most widely attacked by the students was that of seeking a knowledge of God and providing occasions for worship. The two main trends of thought were: one, it is a false goal, but one which is impossible to achieve since all the school can do is to provide an opportunity for worship which all of three dozen people take advantage of, and, two, (you guessed it) the school has no right to set this up as a goal—it infringes upon the rights of the individual, you know.

Another goal was that of developing self reliance without the loss of humility. Many students feel that this is a particularly amusing statement in view of official restrictions upon student conduct (it might be interesting to some to know that boys are much more indignant about infringements upon girls' rights—hours, clothing regulations, etc. than are the girls). Faculty members had two counter arguments to this: CC was much more liberal than most schools in this respect. It is unreasonable to expect students to invent codes of conduct and live up to them immediately.

With regard to a third goal—that of the development of a sense of control and habits of consideration—CC was pointed out by both students and faculty members that the achievement of this goal depends almost entirely upon the individual students. The last goal listed in the catalog was the preparation of students for active and intelligent citizenship (continued on page 8).

System is the general rule, it does not stand out as clearly as the rare exception, and thereby acquire enforcement. Personally, I do not feel the presence of "30 proctors" in a test situation, and I think that this is felt only by those whose minds are preoccupied with the enforcement rather than the spirit of honor. This preoccupation is a distortion of the Honor System.

This distortion has led Dee to state that "a person acts honorably because he is a member of a group that believes such and such and will act as a group to enforce that belief." I believe it is more realistic to say that a person is a member of the group because he acts honorably and believes such and such and will act to enforce his belief. He concludes that a person will cease to act honorably when the group disappears at graduation. I conclude that the person is not formed by the group in matters of honor, but rather the group is formed by persons who continue to be themselves after the group dissolves.

Alpha Phi

A's Nicotine Charlie and his cig box went out with a spectacular crash Sunday morning as the winds swooped down on the campus. The previous week had been spent diligently preparing Chas. for Friday evening. Scratchy legs and sore hands, not to mention the backs, were the common complaints among the Phis as we worked to the hiarling music of PP&M and the Christy Minstrels. Our grateful thanks to all those brave souls who helped us during the week.

Sunday brought a rather rude awakening for eight, slightly surprised, dumb-founded, and sleepy pledges. They were roused out of their beds at 7:15 by their new pledge mothers and dragged down to the house for breakfast. The early hour was closed with a bit of rousing (?) folksinging—along with Donna and her guitar.

A great big "Happy Birthday" to Mom Lewis for her October 24th birthday from the entire chapter.

Delta Gamma

Congratulations Gamma Phi and Kappas on your house decorations. The Little Old Winemaker at the D.G. House joins us in being proud of third place and we join him in sincerely thanking Judy Dykes and Debbie West for their endless work and never failing spirit.

The D.G.'s are also proud of their third place in sorority intramurals this past year.

The Kappas joined us Monday night for a debate on the controversial subject of birth control. Taking the affirmative were Jo Heller and Annie Doremus for the D.G.'s, and on the negative side were Donna Haraway and Chrissy Moon for the Kappas. Included in the positive discussion was the use of birth control for alleviating the population explosion, for reasons of marital problems, and of the possibility of danger to the mother in bearing children. On the other side of the question, possibilities of psychological and physical harm in the use of birth control measures were discussed. In a very close decision of the judges, the D.G.'s were the winners.

Gamma Phi Beta

Our heartiest congratulations to the Fijis for the good job on their homecoming decorations.

The Gamma Phis wish to express their warmest welcome to our newly-inaugurated President Worner.

Otherwise, things have slowed down for the Gamma Phi and most of us have returned to typing papers, doing research, and reading pages and pages and pages and pages.

Kappa Alpha Theta

Relaxing after a busy weekend, the Thetas are so proud that Homecoming was a success. We wish to congratulate Blue Key and the Homecoming Committee for a fine job.

We are looking forward to our dessert with the Gamma Phi Monday, where we will all play bridge. Among the chit-chat will probably be discussion of the "Bad Symposium" held tomorrow.

That bewitching time of year is coming, and we Thetas are brewing fun and surprises to celebrate Halloween next Thursday. In the meantime we are all enjoying the new ice skating rink, except for a few falls now and then.

Kappa Kappa Gamma

Monday night, following the weekly meeting, the Kappas joined the Delta Gammas for a most worthwhile intersorority event. The two groups held a debate dealing with the very controversial subject of birth control. Although the D.G.'s won by a slight 1 1/2 point margin, all four debaters did a magnificent job of discussing a difficult topic with great frankness and honesty. It was definitely a valuable event, and we wish to thank Linda Dunkin and Sue Caudill for arranging it, as well as Donna Haraway, Chrissy Moon, Jo Heller, and Ann Doremus for participating.

On a lighter lighter note, tonight the Kappas will hold their fall costume dance in conjunction with the Gamma Phi. The dance will be held at the Vail Hi Country Club with a theme of "Suppressed Desires."

Finally, we wish to congratulate Blue Key on the greatest Homecoming Weekend ever.

Beta Theta Pi

Not since the sacking of Troy or the pillaging of Rome has such a diabolical act been perpetrated against the culture and the fine arts. It was tragic. Late last Friday evening a mob of thousands of enraged local citizenry descended on our peaceful property and with sledge hammer, flame, and cries of "Don't you know we got little kids an' zoning laws?" and maliciously destroyed our beautiful — though controversial — Homecoming decoration. When the mob was dispersed by several combat units from Fort Carson all that was left of the glorious, artistic achievement was a charred pile of splintered two-by-fours and crimped crepe.

The silver lining in that blackest of clouds was that the decoration had existed long enough to instill sufficient courage in the hearts of the members of the CC football team so that they were enabled to truly "Ban the Bulldogs."

Yet another pledge. Congratulations to Dave Tarbox who was pledged last Monday.

Kappa Sigma

During this past weekend, a number of behind-the-scenes occurrences startled our house. Hugh Bell has finally found himself and is now a new man. After Friday night's unprecedented early pass, and Saturday's wonderful date, he has reformed. This Friday he will be trading in his world renowned "Silver Steak" replacing it with a '63 red Volkswagen. Chunky Coran Cantwell has finally come to understand his problem and will now try very fervently to carry on normal, mature activities. All of the brothers are understanding, but we see little hope in the future for his pin? Did Dooles see snow Saturday night?

The highlight of the weekend, of course, was the return to CC, for a short stay, of last year's Kappa Sig sweetheart, Vicki Zink-and. Motor was elected to show our favorite daughter the lights of the city, and although we had special plans for Vicki, Motor took her to the dance.

Phi Gamma Delta

This week has been a rather hectic one for the Chi Sigma Fijis. In spite of unforeseen difficulties, we were victorious in the Homecoming decorations. We are much indebted to certain female members of the freshmen class for this victory and would like to take this opportunity of expressing our heartfelt thanks for their efforts. Also we want to thank the members of Kappa Alpha Theta for their help. In addition we wish especially to thank the Dean of men, J. Juan Reid, for his help. Without his wholehearted backing and support, victory would never have been possible. His timely actions turned a rather haphazard attempt into a concerted, united Fiji drive. From a rather poor start we eventually attained victory, and we attribute this in large measure to his efforts. Thank you, Dean Reid.

Sigma Chi

Although disappointed that our magnificent steamroller failed to impress the judges, the Sigma Chis enjoyed Homecoming weekend. Congratulations to the football team for their great victory, and to Sharon Shackelford, Homecoming Queen for 1963.

Just plain Red Blisken pulled a repeat performance in the cross country race during the half-time of the Homecoming game. In top form, as usual, this great athlete swept the field with a staggering pace and left the other runners gasping.

The pledges are busily preparing for the second annual "Bill Hybl Week," which is a highlight of the fall social season.

The Springs and Things

By Caroline Creyke

'Tis with a heavy hand that I begin this week—the Vista Vue has closed for the winter. Sleep well, Vista Vue.

Luckily though, the Starlight (scene of such fine entertainment as "Gone with the Wind" and "Werewolf in a Girls' Dormitory") is yet open. This week, "Blood Feast" and "The Cobweb" are featured.

The many-Oscar winning film "Lawrence of Arabia" is at the Peak, and across the street, at the Ute, "The Man's Three Challenges" (sinba, tantor, tarmangant). For those who have never seen a chase through Disneyland, now is your chance, for this is the highlight of "Forty Pounds of Trouble," now with "Big Red" at the Alreadia. "A Gathering of Eagles" and "The List of Adrian Messenger" at the Eighth Street, and "The Wonderful World of the Brothers Grimm" take care of the movies.

The latest word on campus is "zamboni." It means an $8,000 machine on wheels that cleans and smooths the ice at the same time. It's a nice lil' rink we've got (to go with our "nice lil' college").

I'm starting a one-man campaign to get the Shove machines fixed. All it takes is $8,000.

There are two ways to go about it: 1) upkeep on the rink costs $3,000 a month, but the rink will be useable only from October to April. So, Colorado College can use the $9,000 it saves by closing the rink in September, May, and June to fix Shove, and still have $1,000 to spare; 2) With Mr. Torner's tightening-up policy—to the tune of running $8,000-$10,000 in the black this year—the school no longer has to underwrite any deficit in the food service. This means that more money is left in the general college fund to be used on general college expense. Could some of this be used? Perhaps we could raise some of it ourselves; for every five dollars we raise, the Ford grant will match it with two.

Theological Discussion Retreat to Be Held

The book Honest to God by John Robinson, an Episcopalian Bishop, will be the means of providing discussion on some very lively and controversial theological issues at LaForet Camp the weekend of October 26-27. This book has proven to be a best seller and has been praised and abused in fierce debate by theologians, church people and non-church people. It is a good attempt to present in meaningful language the Christian faith for today. There will be brief presentations at this retreat followed by group discussion. This event is being held in collaboration with a group of students and their advisors from the University of Colorado at Boulder.

The retreat will be held at LaForet Camp in the Black Forest, which is a few miles north of Colorado Springs. For those who need car transportation will be provided. The cost of $7.00 will include all meals, accommodations, and a copy of the book Honest to God. Registration can be made at Professor Burton's Shove Chapel office 10:00 through noon on week days, or by speaking with Professors Burton or Fox.

Kappas, DG's Debate Birth Control Issue

On Monday night, the Kappa Kappa Gamma and Delta Gamma sororities held an informal debate on the controversial topic of birth control. This was the first in a series of debates between the Greek organizations for the purposes of information and enlightenment rather than merely competition. Arbitrary stands were taken by the Delta Gammas for the affirmative and the Kappas for the negative. These viewpoints did not necessarily reflect the personal opinions of the sorority or those debating the issue.

Jo Heller and Ann Doremus, representing the affirmative, stated that birth control should be used on both an international and domestic level for the following reasons. (1) Overpopulation is an immediate crisis. One half of the world's three billion people go to bed hungry every day. Birth control is one of the available methods for raising the underdeveloped peoples of the world above a biological existence. (2) On the domestic level there are certain situations where children are either a physical, psychological or financial burden on the family. When offspring becomes a penalty to the family, rather than a blessing, birth control is desirable. (3) In discussing the moral breakdown of our generation, the affirmative contended that birth control measures are irrelevant to personal standards. Morality that is based only on the fear of pregnancy is not much of a morality.

Donna Haraway and Grissy Moon, representing the negative, stated that birth control should not be used for psychological, medical and sociological reasons. The psychological reasons are based on the belief that the physical act is an integral part of the ideal of love. The use of contraceptives would cause people to become merely creatures of self-satisfaction, rather than responsible individuals who are willing to accept the consequences of their emotions. The utilization of birth control would devalue the physical act by emphasizing its recreative rather than re-creative aspects.

The medical effects of chemical contraceptives are still very much in the shadow because so little is known about the hormonal system. The possibility that a chemical which kills one kind of cell may allow another kind to grow has led the medical profession to have its doubts.

Although the debate was a very lively one, it was handled in a mature and intelligent fashion. The three judges, Dr. Ross, Dr. Ender-son and Miss Claydon declared the Delta Gammas the winners, but by a very slight margin.

citizenship. Many students are skeptical about this; some said that "all this campus does is breed apathy"; others sardonically suggested that this is incompatible with the other goals since the complacent individual gets along best in our present day society. Here again faculty members pointed out that students must take upon themselves the responsibility of developing an awareness of the better possibilities of our society as well as the obvious faults. They must, in short, take upon themselves the responsibility of educating themselves.

That quite a few students do not accept this responsibility is shown by the fact that when asked what they think the goals of CC are and how these goals affect their lives, they reacted with, "I don't know, and I don't want to think about it, so go away and leave me alone." On the other hand there are also many students whose immediate, articulate replies showed that they have a very real, burning desire to obtain an education.

This lack of unity of academic purpose is the most disturbing factor concerning CC to many vociferous upperclassmen and disillusioned freshmen. "But I thought people here were more actively intellectual. I thought they were really interested in thinking and discussing and discovering ideas new to them. They either hole up in their rooms and study all the time, or they couldn't care less about learning." One freshman stated point-blank that CC's reputation is not warranted by its student body, since while many students are serious about obtaining a good education, many more are not. He went on to say that the latter are either innocent of the disparity of purpose or are cynical about it and that in their indifference they have a decidedly negative effect upon this school.

The decisions which the individuals on this campus make in the next year or two regarding what they want and expect to receive from this school will not only shape their lives, but will help to set the academic tone of CC for some years to come. For this reason it is imperative that each student think seriously about his goals and those of the school.

Ed Note: As the ski season begins to show some possibility of getting under way, the Tiger has asked Ski Club to report on its activities in this bi-weekly column.

CC skiers have come up with some exciting plans for this year, and they all add up to FUN. Ski Club advisors and team coaches Professors Kramer and Diller and club officers Jon Prouty, president, Charlie Bates, vice president, Tom Waugh, treasurer, and Pat Reed, secretary, have been busy making plans for a fun-filled ski season.

Those attending the Ski Club meeting last Thursday were entertained by a movie, and a discussion of plans for skiing followed. Tentatively the Ski Club has planned four Sunday ski trips during the winter. There is also a possibility of a ski-weekend if enthusiasm merits it. Discussions are also underway on lessons, ski rentals and equipment.

The Ski Team has also been busy. The boys' and girls' teams have been incorporated and plan to participate in thirteen Southern Rocky Mountain Ski Association meets. Dr. Diller is conducting daily pre-season exercises to help the racers get in shape for a successful racing season.

If you are interested in joining the fun, Rastall desk will gladly collect your $1.50 which will make you a member of Ski Club. Anyone interested in joining should see Dr. Kramer to join SRMSA which costs $2.00.

CC Tigers Defeat Bulldogs For Homecoming Victory

The Tiger football team put on what was probably its finest team effort before a homecoming crowd of 3,000 to beat the Concordia Lutheran College's Bulldogs 13-0 in the final quarter of play last Saturday.

The opening gun saw both teams start drives that lasted only a short period of time before the opposing defenses stalled opposing attacks. After about two duplications of this same beat by both sides, the Bulldogs' offensive machine, that in some cases outweighed Tiger linemen by 60 pounds, began to roll down the field. Not until they reached the two yard line were Tiger linemen able to bury their cleats and refuse their rivals another inch.

From this point Cubby Welch took the team over and marched them out to the twenty yard line, only to have to punt on a fourth down situation. Again the Bulldogs started to march to the CC goal line. Again the Tiger line seemed unable to stop the big men from Nebraska. Finally, as the three yard line appeared as the place of reckoning, the Tigers held for a second time.

Quarterback Welch moved the Tigers out of their end zone and up the field to end the first half. During the intermission the Tiger defensive alignments were changed in order that the Bengals might take advantage of the unusually large splits in the Bulldogs' line.

The Tigers returned to the field and decided to kick off in order to take advantage of the breeze. After three short plays, the Tiger punt receiving unit went into the game. From this point on, the Bulldogs were unable to rush for the rest of the afternoon, although CC was unable to put on any sort of an offensive drive until the fourth quarter.

About six minutes after the final exchange of goal lines, the Tiger team rolled against the Lutheran for a six point tally by Mike Mestek. Steve Sabol's kick was good for the conversion.

The Bulldogs took the kickoff with revenge in mind and caused a few heart beats to stop for a moment while they returned to the 50. A holding penalty moved them all the way back to their 20, however. On the next play from scrimmage, the hard-charging Tiger defense forced a fumble and two plays later had another six points.

The rest of the game saw the Jay Vees in action with quarterback Mike Denson putting on a fine display of running. When the clock ran down the Tigers were on the seven yard line and ready to pounce once more.

Next week the CC coaching staff is faced with the pleasant task of trying to stop Western State College at Gunnison. They are undefeated and have run over such formidable opponents as Adams State. They crushed Western New Mexico University 36-7 last Saturday.

The Tigers will be at a further disadvantage playing under NCAA rules which allow them to substitute two men on the fourth and first downs or else be forced to take a time out. This means that the Tigers probably won't be able to play their highly successful defensive unit as a whole, which was a decided disadvantage against Colorado State two weeks ago. So the Tiger mission this week seems to be one of both physical fitness in order to go "both ways" and psychological fitness in order to take on what will probably be the best team we will play all year.

NOTICE

This is a reminder that the American Friends Service Committee will sponsor one more fall work camp this year. Work campers will live for a weekend in a city church or neighborhood center, aiding in various projects from playground work to repair work in community recreational facilities.

The camp will be held during the weekend of Nov. 15-17.

INTRAMURALS

For the third time in the past four weeks, new leaders find themselves atop the Slocum and Fraternity flagball leagues. While North 3 was defeating previously undefeated, untied South 3's aggregation, West 4, idle during the week's play, regained the top position in the Slocum American League. The top spot in the National League also changed hands when North 1 soundly trounced the division leaders, South 1, in a meeting of the unbeaten versus a second-division team. With Kappa Sigma and the Zetas continuing their winning ways in the Fraternity League, all leagues seem destined for close finishes.

Both the leading offensive and defensive teams of the entire Slocum aggregation, South 3 relinquished its first points of the season in a humbling 26-20 defeat at the hands of twice beaten North 3. The fine defense played by North 3, however, proved to be the leaders' downfall, as South 3 failed to reach their 40 points per game average. With their two remaining games to be against North 4 and the challenging team from the faculty, South 3 finds itself in the position of having to win its remaining games to come out on top.

Just as precarious as the position of South 3 is that of South 1. Previously undefeated but once tied, South 1 needs victories in the last three games to overtake South. With second division clubs their foes, South 3 must still be considered a strong contender and should be expected to put considerable pressure upon the leaders.

Tom Thomsen wanted challenging work

He found it at Western Electric

T. R. Thomsen, B.S.M.E., University of Nebraska, '58, came to Western Electric for several reasons. Important to him was the fact that our young engineers play vital roles right from the start, working on exciting engineering projects in communications including: electronic switching, thin film circuitry, microwave systems and optical masers.

Western Electric's wide variety of challenging assignments appealed to Tom, as did the idea of advanced study through full-time graduate engineering training, numerous management courses and a company-paid Tuition Refund Plan.

Tom knows, too, that we'll need thousands of experienced engineers for supervisory positions within the next few years. And he's getting the solid experience necessary to qualify. Right now, Tom is developing new and improved inspection and process control techniques to reduce manufacturing costs of telephone switching equipment. Tom is sure that Western Electric is the right place for him. What about you?

If you set the highest standards for yourself, enjoy a challenge, and have the qualifications we're looking for—we want to talk to you! Opportunities for fast-moving careers exist now for electrical, mechanical and industrial engineers, and also for physical science, liberal arts and business majors. For more detailed information, get your copy of the Western Electric Career Opportunities booklet from your Placement Officer. Or write: Western Electric Company, Room 6405, 222 Broadway, New York 38, N. Y. And be sure to arrange for a personal interview when the Bell System recruiting team visits your campus.

Tiger Team Plays Well In Spite of Disadvantages

Playing well, but unable to capitalize on numerous scoring chances, the Tiger soccer team was beheld by CSU 7-2.

The game, played in constant rain and on a treacherous field started poorly for the Tigers when CSU scored two quick goals within five minutes of the opening whistle. Immediately it was apparent that the squad was not used to a regulation field, but the Tigers soon settled down and managed to set up Chris Faison, our inside left who put CC on the scoring board.

In the second quarter our booters again dominated the game as they had late in the first half, but CSU's excellent wings managed to convert one of their few break-outs into a goal.

Coming into the second half, the Tigers were still fresh and very much in contention, behind only 3-1. But the Tigers couldn't match their first half effort, and only stalwart defensive work kept CSU's Rams from scoring more than one goal. Abi Afonja luckily scored once for the Tigers as CC managed to stay within reach of the Rams.

Late in the second half with both teams playing strong soccer CSU scored again and relief was sent to aid the now exhausted Tigers with disasterous results. Quickly the Rams scored twice and the game ended disappointingly 7-2.

The Tigers were not as outplayed as the score indicates. 4-2 might have been a more realistic score, but the large field was an unhappy factor and contributed greatly to the loss of endurance towards the end of the game—a loss that cost CC two goals.

Have You Tried 'Jogging' Yet?

By Fritz Kammer

If you haven't, better have you sports IQ lifted. Jogging is the sport for everyone because the Democrats approve. Even if you are a G-T fan, it's for you because there are no rules, no referees, regional, national, government controls: It's as anarchic as a free-for-all. You are lazy. Join the fun; no-one is driving you. Full of energy and go? Drive yourself as hard as you wish.

I learned about jogging last summer from Bill Bowerman, coach of the University of Oregon intercollegiate track championship team and mentor of several world four minute milers. Bill has brought the sport back from New Zealand and it caught on immediately not only on the Oregon campus but also in the town of Eugene and beyond. Oregon now is full of joggers.

Jogging, which is the next best above walking, consists simply of running at a comfortable pace for a short distance or a short period of time, say 50 or 100 or 150 yards, or 5, 10, or 15 minutes, or until you are puffing. Then you walk until you are breathing normal. Keep this up as long as you want. If you wish, set yourself a goal of a mile or two or three, or a certain time limit. You can do this by yourself, in pairs, in groups. City streets, alleys, the campus, Washburn Field or the Pikes Park Road are acceptable sites. Day or night, rain or shine; no matter.

Colorado College

Boettcher Health Center To Be Radical in Design

A radical departure in campus infirmary design is the circular Boettcher Health Center to be built at Colorado College on the present site of Peabody House in the fall of 1964.

The key to the new design is a series of three concentric rings. The outer ring contains patients' rooms, an entrance lobby, and special rooms for X-ray work, consultations, and examinations. The middle ring functions as a study area for ambulatory patients and easily connects to bed-space as the patient load demands. A circular nurses station, the inside ring, offers central control of the entire infirmary by one duty-nurse.

An important aspect of the new Health Center is that it greatly emphasizes facilities such as the study area which enables the student to continue his studies while in the infirmary. The infirmary thereby fulfills the two-fold purpose of keeping the student in school while keeping him healthy.

The new design is the result of a study of present health facilities at small liberal arts colleges throughout the Midwest. Colorado College, Knox College, and Wittenburg University initiated and conducted the study, and Educational Facilities Laboratories, Inc., provided a $10,000 grant for research and experimentation.

The study group concluded that the rule for health centers on American college campuses was a makeshift structure, usually inefficient as well as inadequate. The type of old frame house which serves as CC's infirmary is common to most small campuses.

The final result of the study was a prototype of the ideal health center designed by the architectural firm of Caudill, Rowlett, and Scott of Houston. Under a $25,000 grant from the Kresge Foundation of Detroit and a $200,000 grant from the Boettcher Foundation of Denver, CC's new Health Center will be built along the lines of this prototype. It will be the first of its kind in the nation.

Springs ACLU Hosts Denver Post Reporter

State Senator George Brown of Denver highlighted the fall meeting of the Colorado Springs branch of the American Civil Liberties Union held at Rastall Center Tuesday evening by speaking with power and authority on the current civil rights crisis.

Opening the meeting with a discussion of the recently created Human Rights Action Committee, the president of the ACLU praised the October 4 issue of THE TIGER, which centered on the civil rights problem in Colorado Springs.

A staff member of The Denver Post, Mr. Brown, who is a Negro, told of his experiences in Birmingham, Alabama while on assignment from the Post last spring. This was the period when Police Chief Bull Connor's police dogs and high pressure hoses attempted to halt the student demonstrations.

Mr. Brown described the plight of 1,500 students who were cornered in a small public park by the hoses during the height of the demonstrations. Fully prepared for the police tactics, they took off their clothes, under which were swimming suits. After twenty minutes, the police finally realized that the students were only enjoying what had turned into a swimming party and turned off their hoses against the pleas of the students.

Last spring, according to Mr. Brown, there was a Negro man sitting in the front of a bus who was told to go to the rear. After repeatedly telling the "boy" to get to the back, the bus driver came over to him and threatened the Negro with force if his orders were not carried out. The "boy," weighing 250 pounds and six and a half feet tall, stood up and said to the now enlightened bus driver, "You've made two mistakes, first calling me boy, and secondly, assuming that I'm one of those non-violent Martin Luther King-type Negroes." He kept his seat.

According to Senator Brown there is hope that the Negroes in Birmingham and the rest of the South will outlast the White man's hatred and cruelty. Knowing where he is going and how he is going to get there, the Negro, in the words of the song of the movement, will overcome.

Inter-University Hootenanny Set For November 11

Eight of the nation's top recording and TV folk singing artists will be present at Denver Coliseum in an Inter-University Hootenanny at 8:30 p.m., November 11. Tickets are now available at Rastall Desk for $2.10 student price.

The artists are The Clancy Brothers and Tommy Makem, Oscar Brand, Jean Ritchie, Judy Collins and Josh White Jr. The format of the two and one half hour show has been planned by Brand.

Also appearing on the program will be the best collegiate folk singing act, to be selected from talent on the campuses in and around the Denver metropolitan area.

The Clancy Brothers and Tommy Makem feature the folk songs of Ireland, their homeland. Jean Ritchie sings songs that have been popular in the Cumberland Mountains during the past 200 years. Many are the original ballads from England, Scotland, Wales and Ireland.

Josh White Jr., son of the famous Negro folk singer, carries on in his father's tradition with the folk songs of the South.

Judy Collins, a native of Denver, University of Colorado music student and national TV artist, sings the songs of the West—the prairies and the mountains.

Brand, folk singer, composer, folklorist, author and TV commentator, completes the roster.

This Hootenanny is being partially sponsored by the Colorado Collegiate Association of which Colorado College is a member.

FOUR MEMBERS OF THE CAST of the 1963 Variety Show sway gracefully to Hawaiian Rhythm. The show will be presented Tuesday, November 5 through Friday, November 8, at 8:15 p. m. in Perkins Hall.

All College Variety Show Will Open Tuesday Night

Colorado College students and faculty are preparing for their 16th annual Variety Show. The proceeds from this show will go to the United Fund. Performances will be given November 5, 6, 7, and 8 at 8:15 p. m. in Perkins Hall.

Each evening the show will feature one of Colorado Springs' four high school homecoming queens. Tuesday night is Wasson night with Carol Bennett, Wednesday

CC Debate Team Again Successful

The Colorado College Debate Team swept to its second consecutive victory in two outings by winning the Sweepstakes at the Colorado Woman's College Intercollegiate Forensic Tournament held in Denver Friday and Saturday, October 25-26.

Competing against colleges and universities from Colorado, Arizona and New Mexico, CC picked up first places in debate and extemporaneous speaking as well as second in oratory and third in debate.

David Helms, junior, and Robert Knight, freshman, went undefeated in the two-day meet to take first place honors in debate. Susan Caudill, junior, and Barbara Keener, freshman, lost but a single round to pick up third place for the Colorado College squad. The debate victories gave the local debaters 16 points towards the Sweepstakes Trophy.

Sue Caudill and Bob Knight picked up an additional eight points for CC by winning first in extemporaneous speaking and second in oratory respectively. Caudill's principal competition in extemporaneous came from her own teammates, Jo Heller, junior, and Barbara Keener.

A third CC debate team composed of freshmen Judy Sundquist and Linda Marshall finished with a 3-1 record but were edged out for third place by their teammates on the basis of speakers scores.

Jody Komor and Jo Heller finished the two-day meet with a 2-2 record. Komor also participated in oral interpretation of poetry and Heller in extemporaneous speaking.

Coach James A. Johnson of the Business and Economics Department said that he was very pleased with the team's effort following their sweep of the Hastings Nebraska Tournament two weeks before.

The next competition for the Colorado College Debate Team will be at the Bronco Forensics Festival in Edmond, Oklahoma, Nov. 15-16. This is annually one of the most rugged tournaments during the fall semester and draws colleges and universities from all over the country.

The debate team is open to all students and interested persons should contact Professor Johnson or David Helms, president of the club.

night belongs to Fayette Tynia of St. Mary's, Palmer's Teryle Lundquist rules Thursday, while Val Royal takes over Friday. In addition, Sharon Shackelford, CC's homecoming queen, will appear every night.

A wide range of campus talent makes up this year's Variety Show. Dought Kramor's traveling choir will be on stage for several numbers. Appearing for their fifth year, the Graces (Mike and Lynn) will satisfy those who enjoy folk singing. Solomon Nikwane will do a take-off on Marlin Makabe, a South African folk singer who appeared recently at the Broadmoor. The show will open and close with a song and dance number from Broadway, done by the Kappa Kappa Gamma sorority and the Phi Delta Theta fraternity. Judging by this small sample of the two-and-one-half hour show, one can be sure of an entertaining evening.

As in the past, there will be no special student tickets. Since all money goes to the Colorado Springs chapter of the United Fund, all tickets will be one dollar. Advance tickets may be purchased at Rastall or at the door.

Thanks in advance go to all who are working to make the Variety Show a success: Woodson Tyree, faculty advisor; Donna Jones, Chuck Cornell, and Louie Rottman, student directors; Sue White and Carlett Routon, business managers; Gary Nelson, Bill Stybol and Mike Sabom, publicity; David Welsh and Gordon McNutt, theater managers. In addition Wes Bradley, manager of KRDO, is giving the Variety Show much publicity. Mr. Bradley was the first manager of the Variety Show at its restart after the war.

Please come to one (or more) of the four Variety Shows. One dollar isn't much to pay for an evening of good entertainment, but one dollar means much to the United Fund. Add to CC's contribution!

Constitutional Revision

In accordance with stipulations outlined in the ASCC By-Laws, the executive council last Monday publicly announced a proposed revision of Article II, Section 1, Part C, dealing with the Publications board. Point 4 which presently reads: "The Board shall submit stipend recommendations to the Executive Council for its approval at least a month before elections of editors or business managers," would be struck completely. Point 5 would read as follows, with the words in parentheses being struck: "The editors and business managers of the Tiger, Nugget, and Kinnikinnik (shall be sophomores or juniors at the time of their elections; they) shall be elected according to the Publications Board By-Laws and with the approval of the Executive Council." Final action on this proposal will be taken at the ASCC meeting on November 4.

THE BOETTCHER HEALTH CENTER, designed by Caudill, Rowlett, and Scott of Houston, Texas, will be constructed in 1964. The building, of unique circular design, is intended to be a prototype of small college health centers. It will be built under a $200,000 grant from the Boettcher Foundation of Denver and a $25,000 matching grant from the Kresge Foundation.

EDITORIAL—

As newly selected editors of the TIGER we feel it appropriate to devote the editorial column of this first issue to an expression of the general goals which we have set for ourselves.

It should be acknowledged at the outset that many questions remain to be answered concerning the function of the TIGER. A number of persons have expressed severe criticism of the paper's policies, criticism which has centered around three areas of possible concern for a college newspaper: the coverage of national issues, the examination of college-wide problems and the objective coverage of campus news.

It is in the relative emphasis on these three potential areas of journalistic concern that the controversy has arisen. The questions which result combine in a bewildering array, but essentially are:

- (1) Should any issue, whether of local or wider significance, be examined at the expense of campus news?
- (2) Is the TIGER competent to analyze issues of national significance, and do such issues have any relevance to Colorado College?

In answer to the first, we will attempt to report the daily events of campus life objectively and comprehensively through the employment of a large and diverse staff, and news analysis will not eliminate news from the paper.

The second question must be answered in the affirmative. The Tiger is composed of Colorado College students, and to argue the incompetence of this newspaper to analyze issues of national significance is ultimately to argue the incompetence of every Colorado College student to formulate his views on the issues which confront him and his society.

The newspaper will welcome all student opinion. Letters to the Editors will be accepted if signed, and names will be withheld on request. The Opinion column will continue to be an important part of the paper, and hopefully the diversity of views expressed will be substantially widened.

We are striving for a balanced campus newspaper which will both stimulate and inform, and we solicit the aid of all students in this endeavor.

ASCC Finance Committee Presents Proposed Budget

Below are listed the final recommendations of the Finance Committee for ASCC expenditures in 1963-64. This year, as in the past two years, the ASCC is receiving $8.00 per student per semester. Figuring on a basis of 1,254 full time students first semester and an estimated 1180 students second semester, the approximate operating fund for the year is $19,742.

In accordance with the ASCC constitution, all organizations receiving ASCC funds must have on file with the Executive Council acts on Finance Committee's recommendations. any organization uncertain of its status should contact Diane Cox, chairman of the ASCC Constitution Committee or Paul Carson, ASCC Treasurer, by Sunday, November 3.

All interested parties are urged to attend the ASCC meeting November 4 to express their views before the Executive Council acts on the Finance Committee's recommendations.

LETTERS to the EDITORS

To the Editors:

In a recent article by Alex Primm in the September 27 issue of the Colorado College Tiger, attacking the so-called "Ultra Right," there are a number of errors of fact and logic which require rebuttal.

In attempting to portray the "Liberty Amendment" in as unfavorable a light as possible, the article quotes a newsletter by the American Progress Foundation listing various government agencies from which the government would be prohibited to withdraw. Among those listed were the Defense Department, Federal Communications Commission, Federal Reserve Banks, etc. The point missed by the article is that any agency—including those which are clearly Constitutional, such as the Department of Defense—would be prohibited from engaging in commercial business in competition with private business, but certainly would maintain its chief duty, that of defense of the nation through the maintenance of our armed forces.

Actually, the article attempts to set up a straw man—and then knock it down. The central point of the proposal to get the government out of commercial competition with privately run business is a sound one and rests on the assumption that private enterprise is more efficient than government ownership and operation. In addition, a private business pays taxes while a government operation does not.

It is rather amusing to note that the author of this article quotes a Senator Carl Hayden from Oregon on a major point. The people of Arizona will be interested to learn that Mr. Primm has now left them with only Barry Goldwater and made Oregon the only state to have three United States Senators. It is also rather an interesting slip when the author refers to conservative leader Dan Smoot—as Dan Smutt.

In his search for an objective phrase to describe Senator Goldwater, the best that Mr. Primm could come up with was "relatively sane." He then went on to offer the rather doubtful statement of fact that "... the new conservative leaders are determined to throw back the progress of the twentieth century and destroy the democratic idea of government."

Let's take a look at each of these charges. First of all—it depends on what you mean by progress. There are many who would doubt that the present national debt, high taxes, huge bureaucracy with its undue regulation and competition with private enterprise—constitutes "Progress."

Second—what evidence is offered to support the assertion that the conservatives are determined to "... destroy the democratic idea of government"? In fact—if there is any real threat to democratic rule—it comes from such liberals as Democratic Senators Fulbright (D-Ark.) and Clark (D-Pa.). They have suggested that the elected representatives of the people in Congress be stripped of much of their power in the field of foreign policy and that this authority be given to the executive branch of government. In fact, Senator Fulbright was quoted as saying, "Government by the people is possible but highly improbable."

Space does not permit a detailed answer to all the numerous attacks made by Mr. Primm but it is clear from even a casual reading of his article that before he attempts another hatchet job on the conservatives—he would well advised to do a bit better job of homework as to his facts. Since he obviously has little use for the conservatives of any kind—it isn't too surprising that Mr. Primm doesn't have a very clear understanding of what policies are supported by the great majority of conservatives or of the basic differences between liberalism and conservatism on the contemporary American political scene.—Robert Thompson, pres., South Suburban Safeway Lines

To the Editors:

The purpose of a college newspaper, in my opinion, twofold: first, to present college news; second, to promote first hand experience in both journalistic and literary writing. Your newspaper has gone to extremes on the second while the first has necessarily suffered.

Case in point is the article in the October 18 edition of the Tiger concerning the soccer game between the Air Force Academy and Colorado College. Admittedly, conditions at the game were atrocious. However, these atrocious conditions need not be satirized in a news article; if you wish to satirize, do so on the editorial page. Better yet, why not devote an entire page to satire, as it seems you enjoy it so much.

Personally, I am tired of the overly cute tongue-in-cheek type of satire that has manifested itself in your newspaper. Satire, used properly, can be an actuating force for change; satire, written as it is in the Tiger, is tasteless and pointless.

To the Editors:

For the last three years I have been not only a fraternity member, but a fairly hardworking, happy member of the college community. This year my contentment has been shattered and I have been rudely thrust upon the thorns of life. New "information" has changed the rather pleasant picture of myself and my environment. In the past several weeks I have been informed, thanks to CC's latest literary landmark, the "Weakly Bitch," that I am a hypocritical, phony, degenerate fat rat, and the prime mover of dissension in the library. I have learned, much to my chagrin, that the cause of disgustingly poor and inferior scholastic performance is my fraternity. I have learned, thanks to Mr. Adcock's informative article, that I possess for my very own a monogrammed keg, with which I keep myself in a constant stupor. My only endeavors appear to be leading innocent virgins astray, and throwing rocks at freedom riders. This is quite a shock for any 21 year old psyche. But at least, dear editors, give me credit for one thing—I do read the Tiger.

Respectfully
Fred Laft

Preacher: Dr. Douglas Fox
Sermon Title: "On Coming to One-self"

Objectivity is widely acknowledged as the Royal Road to Truth. But what if there is a dimension of the truth about life which cannot be discovered objectively? What if detachment and passionless observation actually preclude our discovering truth of the highest significance? It is at least possible that, in that case, our pursuit of knowledge, however earnest and efficient, may lead us to "gain the whole world and lose our own soul." But what alternative can there be—what other kind of knowledge? And knowledge of what? To affirm the Christian Gospel is to imply an answer to such questions as these.

ASCC Notes

This week the ASCC Executive Council approved the nomination of Peter Bonavich and Jim Hootenanny as co-editors of the Tiger, and the nomination of B. J. Young as Business Manager. These students will serve in these capacities until next spring when the new staff will be selected in accordance with the new Tiger policy. Bonavich and Heckman presented certain points upon which their selection was based and will be accountable to the student body for achieving these goals. The student which they will receive for being editors is offered as compensation for running the Tiger in a satisfactory businesslike way. The majority of the Executive Council voted to approve these appointments and feel sure that the new editors will do everything within their power to stimulate the Tiger. The vote was 8-5 with one abstention.

Bill Pelz raised the question of the election of the editors of the Tiger, his feeling being that the Tiger is representative of a student body at large and such a large amount of student funds are used to support it, that the students at large have the right to review those persons whom the Publications Board deemed qualified to serve as editors. Ben Lyon expressed the view that the Publications Board, invested with the authority to elect the editors of any publication because they have a greater knowledge of how these things are run up and are more qualified to pick the best person for the job, has no right to be so concerned. He feels that the proposal which is backing could lead to unfortunate choices on the basis of popularity rather than superior qualification. The issue was left unsettled.

Once more this week the ASCC Executive Council was informed a constitutional mistake in connection with the motion which changed Article II Section 1, paragraph, division 4 and 5 of the Constitution. This is unconstitutional in that the Executive Council may publish such an amendment in the Tiger one week before it is voted on. Therefore, it will appear somewhere in this issue and will be revoked upon at the Executive Council meeting on Monday. Any one who is interested in obtaining a Constitution may obtain one by contacting either Diane Cox or Karen McVaine.

The Constitution is being carefully reviewed by the Constitutional Committee to find major discrepancies and it is hoped that anyone knowing of any such problem will contact Diane Cox.

This week's Tiger also will publish the Finance Committee's recommendations which will be voted on in the November 4 meeting.

The Sophomore class is planning a most amazing Winter Carnival which may put the Junior and Senior classes to shame. Freshman class will certainly have to work to win them to their intended actions are carried out. Hopefully, everyone will refrain from coming up with a major list in this next week as the ASCC Notes are getting too long.

Respectfully submitted
Karen McVaine
ASCC Secretary

Hootenanny Tonight

Tonight at 8:30 in Loomis Hall is the all-school hootenanny. The show will take about an hour and the mission is free—everybody. The featured act is a presentation by Professor Greenwood from CC's Terry Golden from Padgett Ridge in town (a former CC student) the Gold Camp Trio, Keith Cunningham, and Tom Ballard. The winners of Colorado Collegiate Association Talent Hunt, Les and Smith, Chris Scott, and Frankie Hoyt. Come and listen, sing along, and just have a good time.

BARDOLATER THOMAS W. ROSS regales the audience of last Saturday's BAD Symposium with the ghoulishly BAD stage directions of Shakespeare's "Titus Andronicus." The balloon is totally extraneous.

Bad in Good is Theme of Bad Good Good BAD

By Cindy Mumtwyler

Bad news, in all the major fields of education, was the prevalent theme of Saturday's BAD Symposium. With eight attorneys, the audience as jury, and Mr. Wood overseeing the cases as judge, verdicts of guilty were handed down to Shakespeare, Sartre, Duffe, Thwing, T. S. Ehot, Frost, Billy Graham, Beethoven, Picasso, Nature, Tarzan, and KYSN.

The ceremonies were begun by Mr. Wood, who set the backdrop with quotes from the opening paragraphs of numerous college catalogs, which illustrated the first "badness." These quotations, with the exception of one, did not praise the mature character and discriminating minds which the colleges profess to produce.

Properly prepared for his scintillating lecture due to a fittingly bad night, Dr. Ross initiated the attack by analyzing two main aspects of bad literature. Shakespeare's gruesomely riotous stage directions in his early play, Titus Andronicus, formed one of the strongest points in the overall attack of the symposium, but were hardly equalled by his rather perfunctory criticisms of Robert Frost.

Edgar Rice Burroughs, creator of Tarzan, then underwent severe analysis by Dr. Peterson, who suggested that this "existentialist pathfinder" was not to locate the path by swinging through trees.

The BAD balloon duly raised for the next lofty thesis, Reverend Burton brought down the house upon his fellow "brethren and sisters" in his commentary on "man's self-made horrible religious structure."

His three main concerns regarding bad religion were laziness, trivialities, and the same muddleheadedness to which Dr. Johns later referred in his science lecture.

Mr. Gamer enlightened all as to the degrees and divisions of "badness" in music, and how we might scientifically recognize and categorize them: Beethoven's Wellington's Victory was an example of good (for concert audience bad) (poorly organized good (very likeable) music, in which smooth transitions in mood were especially desirable.

To clinch the argument for bad music, the audience again joined in song, "hearing God's message" while the "piano" rolled out "Oh Promise Me," with Mr. Gamer as our co-pilot.

After some surprisingly good coffee and a stretch for everyone, Dr. Bernard Thwing in with an attack on history, the "poetry of historians," and more directly on claims, cannot come to terms with mankind's past.

Dr. Johns, who is said to have originated the whole idea of BAD once beer at Giuseppe's, then exposed some faulty habits seen in sciences, particularly in modern psychology. Specifically, he forbade

"the three major sins of science": generalism, muddleheadedness, and fanagling—all suitably traceable in his lucid lecture.

In this same vein of science, Dr. Wright held forth and briefly ascertained the two worst faults of scientists. He illustrated these by two experiments intended to show that "Nature abhors an imbalance." In the second experiment, Dr. Wright made use of a strange-looking apparatus which had been lurking in a corner, and proposed to have a full balloon on one end to let air escape into a now empty balloon on the other end until they were the same size. He attempted to help Nature by inflating the empty balloon half-way, illustrating the first sin—"not knowing what you are doing." Then Nature completely confounded him by emptying the half-full balloon into the full one—a surprise even to the lecturer, which typifies the second faulty attitude—"not knowing what you are doing but thinking you do."

The last attack on the bad in the supposedly good fell on art, rendered by Dr. Arnest. He showed seven slides illustrating bad art, from La Sonier through Picasso to Duffee. In the too-stylized nude or the boringly regular fried egg, there was no transition from form to idea; in the overly abstracting expressionism of "pseudo-scribble" of Picasso's mess, the opposite situation existed.

Perhaps what Dr. Arnest described as the primary cause of such bad art is applicable as the reason for the poorer forms of all the fields analyzed—an excess of self-consciousness on the part of the creator-discoverer, a search for glory instead of truth, whether truth be the real curve of the eye after a period of darkness, or the glimpsed whiteness at the bottom of a well, obscured abruptly by rippled water.

The lectures, full of comedy, carefully camouflaged facts, and sometimes pathos, composed a BAD symposium which was bad bad bad. Undoubtedly, one of the most permanent lessons of the symposium will be a new eagerness and ability to discriminate the worthy from the inferior, especially concerning contemporary issues.

The Village Idiot

By Caroline Creyke

Happy November! "Take Off Your Clothes and Live," (that's a movie) is playing along with "The Wicked Go to Hell"—swell combination. (Something for everyone at the Starlight!) "Lawrence" has been held over, so if you don't mind seeing sand for four hours (obviously the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences didn't) it's a very good pix.

Also showing this weekend are "The Dark Old House" and "Almanac," "A New Kind of Love" (?), "The Lusty Professor" and "Come Blow Your Horn," "Uncle Tom's Cabin" (freely adapted), and either 20,000 Leagues Under the Sea" or "Rampage." The latter stars Robert Mitchum, so hopefully "20,000" will not be held over. Starting Sunday are "Mr. Hobbs Takes a Vacation" and "Drums of Africa," and "The Manchurian Candidate" and "Boys Night Out."

This is the last weekend for going to the dogs. Saturday night is the last race of the 1963 season.

On Shove: Nobody has given me any money as yet, but I can't believe I'm the only one who misses them. I guess the guys in Slocum don't miss them at all—especially early in the morning. Maybe we could work out some sort of a deal with Quasamodo not to ring them until eleven o'clock on Sunday mornings. (That is, of course, if we get them fixed.)

Collegiate Association Plans Semester Goals

Last year a number of the colleges and universities in Colorado saw the need for a collegiate organization which would unite all the Colorado institutions in order to achieve intercollegiate co-operation and to carry out inter-campus projects. Under the leadership of Colorado State University, the Colorado Collegiate Association was organized with thirteen charter schools bound together. This was to provide a convenient and inexpensive service organization which would facilitate intercollegiate co-operation in the Colorado region on matters that would result in benefits to the student bodies concerned.

Colorado College, seeing the potential that existed in such an organization, became one of the charter members and has taken an active part in the growth of CCA. The Association, being just one year old, has made a great deal of progress in establishing itself as the central Colorado collegiate body.

The CCA is currently working on several projects including the co-sponsoring of the Inter-University Hootenanny to be held at Denver on November 11, the undertaking to bring Governor Wallace to the Colorado region, the organizing of campus college bowl teams to compete on Denver television with the regional winner going to the national College Bowl, the preparation of a list of top professors from each of the institutions who would consider being a part of a professor exchange program, and an intramural collegiate sports program which would provide for a regional intramural champion.

In order to follow through with these projects and to formulate ideas at each individual school, the first semester goal of CCA has been set for each member institution to establish a local CCA chapter. This local chapter will be composed of representatives of campus organizations which have a direct connection with the goals and projects of the Colorado Collegiate Association.

This weekend, the CCA will meet in public session in Rastall Center. The time is 1:00 p.m. Sunday afternoon.

Plans Saturday Tour Mental Health Group

On Saturday, November 2, the Colorado Association for Mental Health is sponsoring a day-long program, open to the general public, at Colorado State Hospital. The program will emphasize methods of treatment used at the hospital.

The day will begin with a luncheon at 11:00 a.m. in the unit patient cafeterias. At noon, after a welcome by Mr. David Hamill, Director of Institutions, a staff doctor will speak on the total hospital picture. He will discuss what treatment is and how it is implemented, and the manner in which mental health associations and communities can and do contribute to the work of that hospital.

Participants will tour ten units of the hospital, including the Geriatrics and the Alcoholic units. Some form of treatment will be demonstrated, followed by a question and answer period with the staff.

Bus transportation will be provided to and from the Springs for $1.50 per person. The bus will depart for the hospital at 10:00 a.m. from 509½ N. Tejon, and will return between 4:30 and 5:00 that afternoon.

 GREEK NEWS ***

Delta Gamma

We sincerely welcome Marianne Isaak, foreign student from Bolivia, to be a part of our group for the next six weeks. This is a part of a Panhellenic project so that sororities and foreign students may get to know one another better.

Congratulations to Annie Dorems, new active of the month, and Judy Lockwood, pledge of the month. Thanks for all their work and wonderful DG spirit.

The DGs are continually scrapping around for an act that will obliterate the Variety Show next week.

We join the Great Pumpkin in wishing everyone a happy day after Halloween.

Gamma Phi Beta

The Gamma Phis were entertained by the Thetas at a bridge party on Monday night. Everyone had a very nice time.

Warm congratulations to Jim Welch who gave Diane Wieden his Beta pin last Tuesday. Best wishes, Diane!

The Gamma Phis and the Kappas held a successful "Suppressed Friday" costume party dance last Friday at the Valley Hi Country Club.

Alpha Phi

The artistic "talents" of the A. Phis were put to their supreme test Wednesday, October 23, in the form of paper-sack masks created and worn by the entire chapter in helping Mom Lewis celebrate (one day) prematurely her "sweet sixteenth" birthday.

Monday night, the Alpha Phis were hostesses to the Fijis who helped us welcome in the Halloween spirit. The evening's planned entertainment consisted of a scavenger hunt and refreshments at the lodge afterwards. The hunt provided an interesting array of products. Among them were a real live, honest-to-goodness professor; a pair of real live, dead deer feet; elephant ears; and a real live, honest-to-goodness, in-the-flesh dog (NEAL!). Neal had a good time, as did everyone else, including those who participated in an inter-fraternity-sorority jack tournament (an unplanned activity).

Kappa Alpha Theta

The Kappa Alpha Theta house was the scene of fun and skill when the Gamma Phis came over Monday night to play bridge. Those not adept at this game found lively entertainment in playing hearts, gin rummy, spoons (using cigarettes instead of the usual spoons), and a new one to many, Arkansas, rummy!

Donning costumes and bringing "tricks," the Thetas were "treated" by the Betas last night to dinner plus festivities celebrating Halloween. We wish to thank our hosts for a wonderful evening.

The well of Theta talent was tapped when Connie Clay and Nancy Bowers were asked to sing in the coming Variety Show with the golden voices of Kappa Sigma. We are all anxious to hear the results of their intense practices.

Beta Theta Phi

Last Saturday night the Betas kicked off their FOSK (Frosty Outdoor Social Kicks) season with a hayrack ride up the Rampart Range. A big, dapple gray mare pulled the merry party in a huge good-old-days hayrack to a picturesque spot in the forest where the driver, with the help of a sure-fire old Indian trick, started a cozy bonfire. After songs were sung, etc., the old mare pulled us back at just under 50 mph. For further details see Ardella or this month's "Police Gazette."

Congratulations and welcome to Dave Baxter, our latest pledge.

Monday night Brother Welch announced his pinning to Diane Wieden of Gamma Phi Beta. Congratulations!

Phi Gamma Delta

The Chi Sigma Fijis were lavishly entertained last Monday by the Alpha Phis on a "scavenger hunt." We were forced to scurry about rounding up various and diverse items that these calculating females had decided upon. A very entertaining evening resulted, and for this we are most grateful.

Outside of this incident, our weekly events are rather meaningless. Our existence has degenerated from a frolicsome group of ne'er-do-wells to a group of diligent, if not capable scholars. The change is lamented and it is the hope of this writer that it is only temporary. Next week we will undoubtedly return to our basic nature of being splendid predatory animals now that mid-terms are over.

Phi Delta Theta

Wednesday night's dinner guest was Dr. Hochman, who spoke to the Phi Deltas and their guests on the future of fraternities at Colorado College. Last week, Dr. Sonderman discussed next semester's Symposium.

After compiling a perfect season record in intramural football (0-5), the Phi Fickers are preparing to retain their hockey supremacy with nightly workouts.

The week's most exciting event was the visit of Chuck Lawrence's grandmother to the Phi Delta house on Saturday evening. Congratulations, Granny, on your eightieth birthday, and many happy returns.

Enrollment Rises

Colorado College recently reported a total enrollment of 1,391 for the fall semester, compared to 1,376 last year.

Mrs. Ruth Scoggin, registrar, said enrollment of full time undergraduate students was up by three per cent.

Full time undergraduate students total 1,246 this year, compared to 1,203 for the same period last year, and 1,166 for 1961.

Of the freshman class, 224 are men and 171 are women. Men outnumber women in all undergraduate classes.

Colorado College this year has 61 graduate students, compared to 27 last fall. Special students number 75 and visitors nine. In 1962 the college had 135 special students and six visitors.

Enrollment by undergraduate classes is: 395 freshmen, 356 sophomores, 243 juniors, and 252 seniors.

Rough Play Marks Tiger Defeat 50-0 By Western State

Western State, undefeated and ranked 13th among small colleges, massacred the Colorado College Tigers last Saturday 50-0. The general consensus was that the Mountaineers were good, but certainly not 50 points better than CC. The Tigers were unable to display any of their former defensive spunk, and offensively were only able to make two sustained drives which both times died on the Western 20-yard line.

The Mountaineers took charge of the ball game on the third play when halfback Clyde Wilson, a little All-America prospect, dashed 48 yards for a touchdown. Touchdown runs of 33, 13, 10, 40, 6 and 4 yards followed, with fullback Jim Mahar accounting for two of them and Duane Stands kicking six extra points and scoring one touchdown. Quarterback Jim Novak hogged the rest of the spoils with the two final scores and a two-point conversion to assure the Mountaineers of the 50 points they felt they deserved.

The game took a rather rough form from time to time, when one of the referees seemed to feel it was all right to tackle the punter after the ball had been kicked. Both Sabol of CC and Stands of Western State were hit in dubious ways several times, but the referees seemed to enjoy rough football.

The Tiger team came home a very frustrated group, feeling that they wanted to do something about this athletic machine, yet having been totally inept during the game. Time and again individual Tigers took vengeance on a particular Mountaineer over some caustic remark, but the team as a whole seemed unable to pull together to put on any sort of comeback.

The Western State coach expressed sadness that they would not be able to play CC football team any more. The final standings for the series gave CC 26 games and Western State 14.

Tigers Show Great Potential In Soccer Win Over Wyoming

Hampered in their past games by poor conditioning and an inability to capitalize in numerous scoring chances, the Tiger soccer team finally managed to overcome these barriers by defeating the University of Wyoming 4-2 last Sunday on Washburn Field.

The game opened sloppily with both teams bunching up a great deal, and as a result neither squad was able to complete its passes and open up the game. But finally half way through the first period Chris Faison took a pass from Abi Afonja in the right corner and beat the Wyoming goalie to put the Tigers in the lead.

CC now began to dominate the game, completing a number of their long passes and keeping the play deep in Wyoming territory for the rest of the game. However early in the second period, the Wyoming inside right got behind the Tiger fullbacks, who had moved up to support the team's attack, and evened the score at 1-1.

Again CC dominated the third period but was unable to score due to some bad luck when Sol Nkiwane's kick hit the post and Pete Davis fell with no one but the goalie in front of him.

Early in the fourth period Abi scored again, outtracing the Wyoming defenders to a long pass which he easily converted. However several minutes later, Wyoming came back to tie the score, and though the Tigers never decreased their pressure on the Wyoming goal, regulation time ended with the score tied 2-2.

Though responsible for one of Wyoming's two goals, the Tiger defenders were strongly responsible for the victory. Rory Weed and Louis Jaramillo not only kept the goal mouth clear, but also their long passes enabled the CC offense to click.

The game was, without a doubt, the best played by the Tigers this year. The passing, though erratic, was precise, and very few of the squad showed the effects of constant running. Most important, we learned to score, a talent which could ill afford to be lost, in upcoming games with DU and CU.

Adams State May Prove Major Challenge to Tigers

In attempting to rebound from last week's drubbing at the hands of league-leading Western State College, the Tigers face another Herculean task as they take a step into big time when they tangle with the Adams State Indians tomorrow on Washburn Field.

Adams State, while not possessing the speed of Western State, is bigger, stronger and defensively tougher than the Mountaineers. This paints a rather ominous picture for the Tigers seeing as how the Mountaineers held them to a puny 60 yds. rushing last week. Adams State's interior defensive line is headed by All-American tackle George Roby (235 lbs), Stumpy (5'6", 210 lbs), and Cal Jones, and mammoth center Larry Snyder (260 lbs.). Also in the Indians' favor is the brand of competition they have experienced. Although sporting a 2-4 record, the Adams State Indians have clashed with the cream of small college football in contests with Panhandle A and M and Fresno State. Adams State's largest obstacle this season has been themselves. Disagreements among the players, and friction between the players and coaches has hindered the Indians throughout the season. But Adams State has an abundance of potential football talent, which if molded into a cohesive unit, could steamroller the Tigers across Cascade Ave.

Now before one decides to tune in the old TV game on Saturday afternoon let us take a gander at the Tigers from Tejon Tech. The very thing Adams State is weakest at—pass defense, is what the Tigers do best. Chubby Cubby Welch, who threw for 132 yds. against Western State last Saturday, and his prime target, Lee Muller, could team up to wreak havoc in the Adams secondary. Warner Reeser returns to the Tiger ready list this week, and his knack for coming up with the "big play" could come in handy against the animals from Alamosa. Also in the Tigers' favor is that Adams' hard charging defensive line is very susceptible to the fine Tiger trapping game. Trapping guards Al Loosli, Bob Bishop, and Harry Intemann could send "Sudden Death" Sabol, the RMC's leading ground gainer, through gaping

Willis Roberts Armstrong, alumnus of Colorado College '99 and member of the board of trustees for more than 50 years, died Saturday morning, November 2, in Colorado Springs.

Willis Roberts Armstrong, alumnus of Colorado College '99 and member of the board of trustees for more than 50 years, died Saturday morning, November 2, in Colorado Springs.

After attending Grinnell College in Grinnell, Iowa, for three years, Mr. Armstrong transferred to The Colorado College, where he was a member of the Phi Gamma Delta fraternity, and where he lettered in football during his senior year. Graduation did not sever his ties with the school, however, for he remained a close friend and benefactor of his Alma Mater, dedicating much of his characteristic zeal and industriousness toward its betterment.

Mr. Anström helped found the Colorado Springs National Bank in 1907 and thirteen years later was inaugurated bank president. For thirty-one years, he guided the Colorado Springs National Bank in this capacity until 1951, when he became chairman of the board. During these times his interests were not only divided between The Colorado College and the Colorado Springs National Bank, but also among the Colorado Bankers Association, which passed service to Alma Mater.⁶

Even students personally unfamiliar with Mr. Armstrong noted the somber mood which descended over the Colorado College campus on this past week. Kenneth J. Curran, dean of the College, paid tribute to Mr. Armstrong in a tone which acknowledged that the Colorado College can never truly realize nor appreciate the infinite scope of Willis Roberts Armstrong: "Mr. Armstrong was one of the Colorado College's greatest contributors. To me, he was a link with our past, and I never tired of hearing his stories about the old days of the school he loved so well. He was the intimate advisor and confidant of many of our faculty. For example, I remember well the interest he took in me when I first arrived in Colorado Springs in 1950 and his interest in my work in the laboratory and to find a house in a strange town. He will be sorely missed by the many faculty who knew him as a wise friend."

Looking back over the many years of his friendship with Mr. Armstrong, President of the College, Lloyd E. Wornor, noted his constant interest and support of the Colorado College high school students. "It was through his efforts that I was able to attend the Colorado College community at the service in Shove Chapel in which the Colorado College paid final respect to Willis Roberts Armstrong: "All of us who were fortunate enough to know him will agree that his ways held our heads a bit higher because of it. He had a full life . . . he was a close personal friend and a wise counselor to many, many members of the College family. . . . He brings with reason, humor, courage, and fortitude. Each of us will always be better able to face life with more reason, more humor, more courage, and more fortitude because of him. One can only say, 'Thank you, Mr. Armstrong, for one of the things that, in his gentle way, would please him quite so much.'"

NOTICE!

The Willis Armstrong family requests that all memorial gifts be given to a memorial book fund in honor of Mr. Armstrong. The fund will be used to purchase books for Tutt Library.

Symposium Readings

As a part of the Symposium program, three short sessions of readings are planned. Those interested in participating as readers or actors should sign up for a tryout with Mr. Berkove, Mr. Manch or Mr. McMillen before November 15.

Delta Gamma Variety Show Troupe

By Joe Mattys

If energy, sincerity, and plain talent still count for anything, then the opening night of Colorado College's 16th Annual Variety Show must be judged a success. The whole show, though not as cohesive as it might have been, was filled with spirit and the professional's zeal. As one of the notable fine performers, Don Bradberry sang "I got a joy in my heart"—and so did every one of the participants. The audience was introduced to this bright mood by a bit of Dixieland on the piano by Jim Warden. Kappa Kappa Psi and Phi Beta Kappa presented the show with a chorale-graphy number designed to take the audience sit up and take notice; the dancing was co-ordinated and original. The Colorado College Dancers, next in line, were as energetic as they were imaginative to the popular theme of "West Side Story." The third dance group, entitled simply "Hula," made many long for that little grass shack in wherever-it-is, Hawaii. Anne McNaughtan had a clever idea in her "Freshman Lament," but the mike she used could have been eliminated with good benefit to the number. This one applies to "Fywackette"; both the young ladies' voices could have easily carried to the back rows.

In the group singing department, the Chessmen, the newly formed CC Glee Club, and Keith Cunningham and Tom Ballard provided a wide spectrum of talent ranging from the Chessmen's close harmony to the ethnic themes of Keith and Tom; the CC Glee Club responded well in one of its first public appearances. Adding their own distinctive flavor were Lou's Blues and the Rampart Range Riders, who played western music between the numbers of the second act.

Alpha Phi's "Great Train Robbery" deserves praise for its enthusiasm and surprisingly good poetry. The Gamma Phi Betas' "Silent Movie," while fresh in concept, suffered some of the technical end. The flashing spotlight should have been on for longer periods of time to let us see more of the actors and their expressions (or the performers might have held important poses longer) or the flashing eliminated altogether.

By Joe English

Friday night, Nov. 1, about 8:30, two or three hundred students sprawled in Loomis lobby, like fervent disciples at a revival. And, like most disciples at most revivals, after an inspirationless hour, they searched their souls and wondered why they had come in the first place, for the CC Hootenanny was an unintegrated, ill-prepared evening of little recreational value. Although adequate talent was displayed by all of the folk singers, a hootenanny atmosphere where was never attained and thus the evening took on a hastily-contrived and embryonic character, instead of the well-publicized and anticipated event for which one-fifth of the student body appeared.

Perhaps it was unfortunate that those in the back heard none of moderator and ex-symposiast Mr. John Greenway's casual vacuity; no matter, they surely did not miss the well-anticipated highlight of his version of "Battle Hymn of Freudian Psychoanalysis," which he blasted out with an "all you hear and all you need to hear" didacticism.

After struggling through an hour and 30 minutes on the strength of its own inertia, the hotheaded-wake seemed ready for its final judgment, when the Gold Camp Trio (Nate Cloak, John Pasely, Dale Spall) heroically attempted salvation. Displaying unique confidence, rhythm, and clarity, they presented "Shankoya" and "Shalom Chavarrin." The audience responded gratefully and "If I had a Hammer" and "When the Saints Come Marching in" marked the actual beginning of the hotheadedness just as the evening ended.

For the 1964-1965 academic year the National Council of Alpha Lambda Delta will award the Maria Leonard, the Alice Crocker Lloyd and the Adele Hagner Stamp Fellowships for graduate study. The amount of each fellowship is $1500; used in a college or university where there is a chapter of Alpha Lambda Delta is encouraged.

Any member of Alpha Lambda Delta who graduated in 1961, 1962 or 1963 and who has maintained the scholastic average throughout her college career is eligible. Graduating seniors may apply if they have maintained this average to the end of the first semester (or first quarter) of this year.

Applicants will be judged on scholastic record, recommendations submitted, the soundness of the applicant's project and purpose, and, to some extent, on need.

Application blanks and information may be obtained from Miss Christine Moon, Cutler Hall.

The application must be completed by the applicant herself and submitted to the National Fellowship Chairman by February 15, 1964.

Colorado College has created a rotating professorship that enables one member of the faculty to spend a year developing projects to improve undergraduate teaching.

The professorship, to be called The Louis T. Benezet Rotating Faculty Fellowship, was made possible through a $40,500 grant from the Danforth Foundation of St. Louis, Mo.

The fellowship will pay the recipient his annual salary, plus a full summer session salary and $1,000 for expenses. It will rotate annually among members of the faculty.

Although the fellows will be released from teaching and other campus responsibilities, they will be expected to spend most of the time in residence at Colorado College, developing projects directed toward the improvement of undergraduate teaching.

The first fellow, to be selected before the end of the current semester, will begin his year next September. Fellows will be selected by a committee composed of the college's Committee on Committees and a member of the college Board of Trustees.

The Residential College

Colorado College is going to be a residential college. So the administration asserts, and present plans include the construction of new men's and women's dorms to house an eventual 1500 students. One of the principal arguments for such a college has been that it would bring more students into the mainstream of campus social and intellectual life.

This argument is simply not true. On-campus residence does not guarantee participation in anything more than the Rastall food lines. Students cannot be forced to participate in campus life.

It would seem that if the administration is genuinely interested in forming an involved student body, it should be willing to involve the student body in a decision of such importance.

As yet, there has been no indication that such participation is desired. The issue, apparently, has been settled without consultation with the student body at large, or its representatives. We hope that before final plans are made, there will be more such consultation.

There are good reasons why Colorado College should not be a strictly residential school. The most cogent is that erection of a new men's dormitory would divert funds from the construction of a badly needed humanities building. Another compelling reason for not making CC a residential college now, or in the future, is that such a school would discourage a certain type of independent student from attending here. CC would offer four long years in impersonal and often tasteless dorms, complete with an outdated social code which would stifle, rather than develop student maturity.

We believe that students can help modify present administration plans if a strong student opinion is voiced against such a school. In the coming issues of the Tiger, there will be a broader investigation of the nature of the proposed residential college. It is hoped that interested students will aid us in this campaign of developing a truly college wide viewpoint.

Reid's Views on Residential College

Editor's Note — The following statement was made by Dean Jean J. Reid last Wednesday afternoon at a meeting of the Committee on Men's Housing.

The basic philosophy of the residential college is that education extends beyond the classroom, laboratory and library into the residence halls, the dining rooms and the commons. The opportunity to exchange ideas with a wide range of students with divergent views is accepted as part of the educational process, one that is not affected by the scattering of students into small groups of two's and three's in private accommodations throughout the community.

Colorado College is not seeking to mold its students into a single pattern or to develop "togetherness," but it does seek to promote a community spirit and institutional pride. The college believes this can best be accomplished in a student body that lives on campus with an academic atmosphere, in modern attractive facilities that meet the highest standards for health and safety, where there are opportunities for group recreational activities, for social development and for individual spiritual expression. The sharing of experiences and the acceptance of responsibilities within the college community serves to prepare the student for the time when he emerges into the large community.

From the Chair

In recent weeks I have heard several questions concerning the Associated Women Students. Only two people have come to me directly to ask specific questions. The rest apparently have been discussing among themselves, often complaining and criticizing, without having a good basis in fact for what they were saying, and without having anything constructive come out of these discussions.

More recently, a group of interested women students have loosely organized themselves to look into the organization of the AWS, to see wherein lies its authority, to see what in fact it does, and to discover what its purposes and goals are. This group has come to me and asked for explanations, clarification, and just a general discussion of issues which are bothering them. I would like to extend my thanks to them for taking the interest in the first place, and secondly for looking for an effective means through which they might let their ideas be known to all members of the college community that this organization, as a governing body on the Colorado College campus, welcomes the interest, participation, suggestions, ideas and constructive criticism of the community as a whole.

I do not feel that it is part of my job, as president, to set out about the campus collecting criticisms and filing complaints. Any governing organization, and we are no different in this respect, has channels of communication through which individuals can make their opinions known. Any resident in any hall may go to her counselor (in the case of freshmen) or to her wing representative (in the case of upperclass women) to express her views. If she does not feel this is effective enough she can go to her residence hall president or to the president of the AWS directly. If she chooses the latter course I promise she will always receive a full hearing.

I would like to emphasize that constructive criticism is always welcome. Insofar as it is within the authority of the Associated Women Students to legislate in any given area then this will be done. The question of authority is, of course the touchy one. As president I do not pretend that the AWS holds any kind of absolute authority. But I also do not think that this has to impair our effectiveness as an organ of student government or as a voice through which students may express their opinions and desires. I would say at the outset that there are some rules which most probably will not be changed, whether or not you or I agree with them. But this does not preclude any change at all. It would seem to me that the sooner students realize that no delegated authority from a college administration will ever be absolute and that it will always be subject to a higher authority, the sooner they can begin to do something constructive within the bounds of their authority.

It seems reasonable to me that the college cannot always be ready to let students "make their own mistakes" as it were, at least not when the welfare of the college itself is involved. So, when student government makes a mistake and it is corrected by the college's administrators, is this a reason to give up completely and say, "well, we are just rubber stamps anyway, what's the use"? I don't think so. In the case of the AWS I can at least say that we will continue to try to fulfill our responsibility, both to those we represent and to the college as a whole, and that in any case all suggestions will be heard and considered in open debate.

In an article of this type I cannot expect to answer all the questions that have come to me in recent weeks. In next week's TIGER, and in this issue also, some exploratory articles are being written about the Associated Women Students. Although they may be intended as such I do not regard them as derogatory attacks but rather choose to view them as welcome attempts to clarify and understand an organization which is all too little thought about. In the future any member of the community who has any question about the AWS please let us know—that is, if your interest goes beyond mere criticism toward wanting to see something done about it.

Jean Torcum
AWS President

LETTERS to the EDITORS

● In REGARDS to Mr. A. Primus's September 27, TIGER magazine writing about Conservative Leaders Tax Return let me give you my view of this.

The last 20 years of action the POLITICS has taken and done are very beyond any Constitution right. The hard working American people are beginning to see this, through constant rise of Federal, State, and local taxes.

The people have decided to put up a STOP sign for this, which is known as the LIBERTY AMENDMENT. When this gets into full operation and action which won't be long in the future the Constitution will allow every TRUE LEGAL TAX to run the Government, and protect the shores with any needed ARMS.

Sen. Carl Hayden made a very thoughtful remark, in his study of the 16th amendment: "The 16th amendment repeal would severely limit the Federal Government in meeting the MINIMUM NEEDS and requirements of our people and would completely prevent from carrying out its obligations, and responsibilities to the world."

He seems to be thinking more of the people across the seas than the ones in his own country. When the 16th amendment is removed from action and the USA pulls out of the UN, then the American citizens will be able to enjoy the fruits of their individual labor. Our Federal men, flying bag and forth to Russia, have accomplished nothing but a wear out of costly planes and fuel. No agreements were ever made.

And, I think two terms of an elected office is ENOUGH for anyone. And, elected officials should have to retire at the age of 60. The Liberty Amendment is what we need to aid us and lead us out of this present POLITICAL FOG.

Sincerely yours,
Frank M. Seiler

IRC and FSC Sponsor Panel Discussion of UN

Thursday, October 31st, the International Relations Club and the Foreign Student Committee sponsored a panel of four of our foreign students who discussed their opinions of, and some of the problems facing, the United Nations. The panel, which was moderated by Professor Mertz of the Political Science Department, had as members Ernest Liang from Nationalist China, Solomon Nkiwane from Southern Rhodesia, Emile Duyster from Belgium, and Tom Althaus from Switzerland.

Ernest Liang presented an outline of the basic structure of the UN. He mentioned the implications of the switch in power from the Security Council to the Assembly General.

Solomon Nkiwane described the two conflicting attitudes toward the UN that exist in a colonial area like Southern Rhodesia. The natives generally approve of the UN since they realize it opposes colonialism and is striving to establish universal independence and human dignity. For mainly the same reasons, the European colonists generally dislike the UN.

Emile Duyster said that although Belgium was one of the UN's charter members, there is little enthusiasm for this organization today. This is mainly because problems concerning the Common Market seem more immediate, and therefore command more attention. Tom Althaus pointed out that Switzerland is not a member of the UN due to its status as a neutral. He does not feel, however, that this minimizes Switzerland's importance in maintaining world peace.

The question of Communist China's admission to the UN produced opinions varying from ad monition as the only realistic solution (Solomon Nkiwane) to an emphatic "no" coupled with the hope of Nationalist China overtaking the mainland before too long (Ernest Liang).

When discussing the weaknesses of the UN and its frequent inability to act, Ernest Liang pointed out that this is a fact which we generally are too quick to recognize. This is obviously true to a certain extent in the Security Council, but it overlooks the important functions which are successfully being performed by other UN organs like the Economic and Social Council.

This program was one of a series sponsored by the International Relations Club and the Foreign Student Committee. In the coming weeks a number of topics will be considered, and all interested students are naturally in-

Hallowe'en Celebrated With Solemn Program

On Thursday, October 31, Slocum Hall celebrated Hallowe'en more solemnly than most with a combined program and fireside chat. Climaxing careful preparation by the General Council, Louis Jaramillo, president of the Men's Residence Hall Association, unveiled a portrait of the third president of Colorado College and the man in whose honor Slocum Hall is named—President William Frederick Slocum.

Also exhibited at this program was a scroll prepared by the Trustees of the college in 1917 on the retirement of President Slocum after 29 years spent in establishing the excellent reputation of the western liberal arts college. It was fortunate that Professor Bob Ormes was the fireside speaker on this special occasion, as he knew Dr. Slocum personally and could give his interested audience some of the history of the man and our institution.

Professor Ormes also provided some of the details on the Rocky Mountain region which freshmen students missed this year when the usual Orientation Week picnic was not held. The MRHA General Council is proud to be able to display the picture and scroll in President Slocum's memory and invites members of the college community to visit the Slocum lounge to see and read them.

College Forum Series To Bring Scientist to To Campus Tuesday

Tuesday, November 12, Dr. Roger Pilkington of London, England, will visit the Colorado College campus to deliver two lectures in the Olin Lecture Hall. As a part of the College Forum Series, at 11 a.m. Dr. Pilkington will speak on "What Makes the Universe Tick." That evening at 8 p.m. he will speak on "Science and the Knowledge of God" at a public lecture in Olin.

Dr. Pilkington is a free lance writer and science editor for Macmillan and Co., Ltd., in London. The author of many books, including numerous children's science books, he received both his M.A. and Ph.D. at Cambridge University. A member of the British Council of Churches, he was a delegate to the World Council of Churches in New Delhi, India, in 1961.

God's Healing Power Public Lecture Topic

How to apply God's healing power to solve problems of everyday living will be the topic of a public lecture to be given here on Thursday, November 21, at 7:00 p.m. by Paul Stark Seeley of Portland, Ore.

Mr. Seeley, a member of the Christian Science Board of Lectureship, will speak in the WES room of Rastall Center under the sponsorship of the Christian Science organization at the college. The subject of his lectureship will be "The Origin and Power of Thought." The lecture is free and open to Colorado College students, faculty, and all others connected with the college community.

HOW SMALL CAN YOU GET?

Today let us address ourselves to a question that has long rocked and ruled the academic world: Is a nation better off at a small college than at a large college?

To answer this question it is necessary first to define terms. What, exactly, do we mean by a small college? Well sir, some say that in order to be called truly small, a college should have an enrollment of not more than four students.

I surely have no quarrel with this statement; a four-student college must unequivocally be called small. Indeed, I would even call it intime if I knew what intime meant. But I submit there is such a thing as being too small. Take, for instance, a recent unfortunate event at Crimscott A and M.

Crimscott A and M, situated in a pleasant valley nestled between Philadelphia and Salt Lake City, was founded by What, exactly, do we mean by a small college?

A. and M. Crimscott, two brothers who left Ireland in 1625 to escape the potato famine of 1841. As a result of their foresight, the Crimscott brothers never went without potatoes for one single day of their lives—and mightily grateful they were! One night, full of gratitude after a wholesome meal of French fries, cottage fries, hash browns, and at grain, they decided to show their appreciation to this bountiful land of potatoes by endowing a college. But their generosity contained one stipulation: the enrollment of the college must never exceed four students. They felt that only by keeping the school this small could each student be assured of the personalized attention, the camaraderie, the esprit, that is all too often lacking in larger institutions of higher learning.

Well sir, things went along swimmingly until one Saturday a few years ago. On this day Crimscott had a football game scheduled against Minnesota, its traditional rival. Football, as you can well imagine, was something of a problem at Crimscott, what with only four undergraduates in the entire college. It was easy enough to muster a backfield, but to find a good line—or even a bad line—baffled some of the most resourceful coaching minds in the nation.

Well sir, on the morning of the big game against Minnesota, its traditional rival, a capricious fate dealt Crimscott a cruel blow—in fact, four cruel blows. Signos, the quarterback, woke up that morning with an impacted incisor. Richards, the slotback, flunked his taxidermy exam and was declared ineligible. Beerbohn-Tree, the wingback-tailback, got his necktie caught in his espresso machine. Yuld, the fullback, was stolen by gypsies.

Consequently, none of the Crimscott team showed up at the football game, and Minnesota, its traditional rival, was able to score almost at will. Crimscott was so cross after this humiliating defeat that they immediately broke off football relations with Minnesota, its traditional rival. This later became known as the Sacco-Vanzetti Case.

So you can see how only four students might be too meagre an enrollment. The number that I personally favor is twenty. Why? you ask. Because, I reply, when you have twenty students and one of them opens a pack of Marlboro Cigarettes, there are enough to go around for everybody, and no one has to be deprived of Marlboro's flavor, of Marlboro's filter, of Marlboro's staunch and steadfast companionship, and as a result you have a student body that is brimming with sweet content and amity and harmony and concord and togetherness and soft pack and Flip-Top box.

That's why.

Dean Moon Explains Women's Dorm Policy

By Susan Phillips

The following is a paraphrase of an interview held with Dean Moon on the subject of women's dorm rules.

Q.—What is AWS's connection with women's dorm rules? How much of these rules are determined by the administration?

A.—Within the framework of closing hours, AWS sets the rules and penalties. Punishments such as roomings are reviewed yearly.

Q.—Would you veto a rule if you disapproved of it?

A.—If I strongly disapproved, yes, I would veto it. Actually there hasn't been any of that. As a matter of fact, it started at the other end of the scale. Several years ago, freshman hours were about 8:30. I told AWS that those hours were not reasonable because the library, which is an important part of their academic life, didn't close until 10:00. It was several years before the hours were changed; no one wanted to take a chance. Then the library complained because they were so short of space, so AWS moved freshman hours back to 8:30, until the new library was finished.

Q.—How much of the need for hours comes from parental pressure?

A.—We have never surveyed our public to see. Parents of girls expect their girls to be in at a reasonable hour; parents of boys do not feel this way about their sons. It's a cultural difference.

Q.—There is a feeling that part of the reason for hours is to protect the college's good name from unpleasant incidents. Specifically, that girls have hours to keep them from spending the night in a boy's apartment.

A.—Hours have nothing to do with incidents. If a girl wants to do that, she will whether she has hours or not. Sometimes we hear about it, and sometimes we don't.

Q.—Why do we have hours then?

A.—First you have to accept the fact that the dorms must be locked at a certain hour. Aside from that, there are two reasons. First, coming to college does not automatically make people mature. We have students entering from ages 15 to 20. These students will not all be of equal maturity. Hours will help strengthen these girls—help them become more mature by abiding to a system. After all, most of life is run by the clock, by schedules. Seniors are allowed an extra thirty minutes after closing hours for which they do not have to ask special permission, but I think this should remain a senior privilege. Secondly, hours protect a girl's academic progress. There are three times as many boys on the deficiency list as there are girls. I'm not saying hours are the only reason for the difference, but I think there is a definite correlation.

Q.—Aren't there ways of getting around some of the faults of a system of hours. Many girls come from families where there are no curfews?

A.—Families are on a face to face relationship. Parents know their daughter's friends, know where she is likely to be. My mother didn't give me a curfew, but this arrangement is not possible under a dorm system.

Q.—Why not issue keys to girls who are going to be out after closing hours, or why not let friends open the door for a girl who is out late?

A.—This was tried in some of the smaller dorms, but it got to be a nuisance. The friends who were supposed to wait sometimes fell asleep. I think specials are our answer to the question of later hours. Any mature person should be able to say how much later she will need to be out.

Q.—Are smaller dorms a solution? Will there be more small dorms such as Mullet? A.—Mullet is doing very well, in spite of overcrowding. The trouble with converting old houses is that they are very expensive to keep up. Walls and windows have to be moved, plumbing has to be installed . . .

Q.—What are the plans for relieving the overcrowding?

A.—We are trying to keep the enrollment at a level so there will be no overcrowding. Admissions are based on the staying power of upperclass women. Since 1959 there has been an 8% increase in the return of upperclass women. Also more women admitted have actually enrolled. We will have one more small dorm next year, however.

Q.—Why not let senior women or women over twenty-one live off campus to relieve overcrowding and satisfy the desire for no hours?

A.—At CU women living off campus still have hours, even in apartments. And their age limit is 23, not 21. Besides, we are committed to the policy of a residential campus. I would like to do something for these girls who really are highly mature. I think academic standing is by far the best criterion. However, the girls tell me that they don't want to live together in a small dorm simply because they all have a 3.5 average. Congeniality is important here.

These then are Dean Moon's feelings on dorm rules and living. She seems to feel that AWS has done a competent job of governing women's dormitory life and sees no serious flaws in the system as it stands. The question that remains is: "Do the students agree with her?"

Ski Trails

Despite the unpleasant cold and damp weather last Thursday, it brought joy to the hearts of many CC students—the skiers. We were glad to be assured that nature still knows how to make snow, and we hope this operation will continue at some of the ski resorts.

The snowfall so heartened some skiers that they made plans to go skiing. However, by Sunday the new snowfall had turned into artificial ice on one hill with a rope tow. So ended the skiing plans, and everyone went back to praying for snow.

Tentative plans are for a ski club meeting and movie on November 19 so keep that Tuesday night open.

OPINION

By Kathy Bevin

The institution of the academic honor system at Colorado College is almost unanimously considered an improvement of the highest degree, a reflection of the integrity of the students which CC educates, and a furtherance of the development of mature young adults, one of CC's main goals. The system presupposes a simple proposition: All men are basically honorable, an idea which supposedly permeates all phases of campus life. There is, however, one glaring contradiction to this, the women's dorm system.

In simple terms, the system requires that a woman who will be away from the dorm after 8:30 p.m. sign out, then sign in on her return, which is to be no later than a pre-set hour. If she forgets to sign out or in, or is late, she is expected to report it to a judicial body, which reviews her "case" and then "penalizes" her according to her transgression. Lack of consideration of particulars in several cases and resulting harsh penalties have brought me to re-evaluate the system, with somewhat unpleasant results.

There is a basic contradiction not only between the dorm system and the concept of personal honor, but also in relation to the role the college should play in an individual's life, i.e., providing a period of maturing and learning beyond the level provided in the more sheltered years of secondary study. The college years are supposedly a time to prepare for the self-dependent existence after one's formal education is completed. The student is away from home, and relatively independent, yet for women, the process of personal maturing in a free atmosphere is hampered by a system of regulations which are in many cases more restrictive than those previously imposed by her parents. She is guided, speaking mildly, by rules which eliminate entirely the possibility of her learning to bear the responsibility for her own actions. She does not actually move from home to an atmosphere demanding maturity, but merely changes the personality of the enforcing and punishing body. The jump which demands maturity is not, then, that from high school and home to college, but that from the sheltered college life into a suddenly restricted life of great responsibility, which is almost impossible to accept without previous preparation.

The system I would propose is based upon very practical considerations. Firstly, the safety of the girl must be considered, and this demands a locked dorm during the night. The hours enforced now are reasonable; the doors should be locked and no men allowed in the building after these hours. The practice of signing out and in is also good, in that the girl may be reached if necessary and also can be traced in case of accident. Beyond this, restrictions are unnecessary. With the knowledge that doors are locked at a certain hour, the girl should be expected to be in, a simple matter of honor. If a girl plans to be out later, she should arrange to be let in by a friend and should indicate approximately when she will return when she signs out, in case it is necessary to reach her. This type of practice places the emphasis on her relationships with others as well as her personal responsibility and would cause careful consideration of the values she recognizes in her actions. There are few girls whose friends would be willing to be up at 3 or 4 a.m. to let them in more than once or twice. Under such circumstances, the girls regard for her friends, i.e., her relationship with her peers, is a main factor in her behavior, certainly a much more similar situation to her future life than being the subject of a series of restrictions.

Hockey Program Proposed Here For Air Academy

At a meeting last week with officials from Colorado College and the Broadmoor Hotel present, the U.S. Air Force Academy requested the use of ice facilities for hockey activities. A sound hockey program involving the Cadets would weigh heavily in the proposal to include an ice rink in the planned fieldhouse facility for the future. An additional ice rink in this area could mean a great deal to the College and to the Broadmoor Hotel. It was with this interest and spirit of cooperation that an agreement was reached. The Academy Cadets will practice a few hours each week at the Broadmoor and the College at times when the ice is available.

Religious Affairs Committee Sponsors "New Religion"

By Gary Knight

An unusually stimulating discussion of Toynbee's New Religion was held Sunday evening in Rastall Center. This discussion, part of a series of discussions presented by the Religious Affairs Committee, concerned Toynbee's New Religion, as presented in his book Civilization on Trial and the World and the West. The speakers were Tom Wolf and Connie Cooper, both members of the Selected Student Program, with Paul Carson assuming the position of moderator.

Mr. Wolf, in a well organized and highly analytical presentation, explained Toynbee's New Religion from the affirmative standpoint. He explained that although Toynbee sprinkled his writings with statements such as "be converted or perish," one should not discount Toynbee's opinions, and that Toynbee's views were pronouncements from his attitudes as a historian. Mr. Wolf said that Toynbee felt that his religion "enabled men to draw upon reserve to proceed farther in efforts to reach God and in thinking in charitable ways with man and God." The purpose of Toynbee's religion was "to prove grand moral design in history" and to offer the idea of punishment and reward for one's life on earth; the effects of this religion would be that all religions would complement each other, rather than conflict, and that there would be an improved spiritual life and social progress.

Miss Cooper's comments were directed in repudiation of Toynbee's views, and in a very effective and well documented presentation, she revealed the discrepancies in Toynbee's New Religion. Miss Cooper first questioned Toynbee's theory of challenge and response, and showed at what point his logic weakened, such as Toynbee's use of fictitious characters (Hamlet) to prove his points on the creative minority. There were three implications with which Toynbee's opinions fell apart; one of these which Miss Cooper presented was Toynbee's belief that the good are always rewarded. The fact that the innocent suffer (Hiroshima) as Miss Cooper stated, disproves this theory.

After completion of the formal presentation, Paul Carson opened the discussion to the audience. This discussion, after getting off to a slow start, was actuated by the comments of Mrs. Djazaab. She explained that the prophets are the uneducated, common people, and that unlike Toynbee, who is a philosopher, the prophet does not make a religion, but simply mirrors God's wishes. She used Moses, Jesus and Mohammed as examples, and then said that a prime problem in the world today is that religion is accepted without examination. At this point Doctor Hochman posed the second question of the discussion (besides the idea of the prophet versus the philosopher): did Toynbee arrive at his theory of religion from his history, or did Toynbee arrive at his theory of history from his religion? Sides were chosen with Phil LeCuyer questioning Dr. Hochman's attitudes and this writer questioning Mrs. Djazaab comments. The discussion ended approximately 20 minutes later, with nothing solved but much said.

The participants and the sponsors are to be commended for their handling of the presentation and discussion. Mr. Wolf and Miss Cooper, although having only a short time to prepare, gave excellent presentations. Mr. Carson showed admirable tact and was the epitome of the moderator's art in his handling of the discussion period. The value of the discussion and presentation lay in its ability not only to inform and analyze, but also to stimulate re-evaluation of individual religious beliefs.

Participant in Cuban Invasion in 1961 Gives Details in Interview

NOTE — Questions and answers given here are approximations or paraphrases, not quotes.

By Karen Kairns

Oswaldo George de Verona is a new student at Colorado College this semester. He was a student participant in the Bay of Pigs Invasion of April, 1961. Mr. de Verona was captured, imprisoned, and finally released to America.

Q. What was the name of the group you were in, Oswald?

A. It was a code number 2506 and called the Big Fight Assault. This was the only group and had about 1,500 men in it.

Q. What percentage were students?

A. About 70% were students. Castro said we were mercenaries. But, you know, this was not true. The remaining 30% were of all kinds: doctors, laborers, etc. Also, on our side were some of Castro's big men, trying to get control of the government.

Q. Why was the site of invasion changed from Havana to the Bay of Pigs?

A. American newspapers that Havana would have been safer.

A. I don't know. The fight was originally planned for the north side of Cuba, but was changed. The idea why. In the Bay of Pigs, there is no place to retreat. It is surrounded by a swamp and has the sea on one side. There were only two roads leading in.

Q. "U.S. News and World Report" quotes one "expert" who states rather emphatically that if ammunition had not run out, the Freedom Fighters would have succeeded. "Disaster at the Bay of Pigs was due directly to failure to destroy or counter Castro's air force." and "With adequate air support the invasion would have succeeded." Were Cuban Freedom Fighters promised American air support?

A. Yes. We needed it and were promised it. With it we could have won.

Q. How large was Castro's air force?

A. Castro had jets—many of them. He also had seven battalions.

Q. Did Cubans feel betrayed by American's withdrawal of air cover?

A. We were promised; America promised. She broke that promise.

Q. What about ammunition?

A. The ammunition never came. We had tanks, planes, old American weapons. When the ammunition ran out, we retreated. Castro had more ammunition. It was a three day fight. The first day 1,000 of Castro's men came in against us. We lost 13 planes—almost all we had.

Q. What can you say about the actual fight?

A. It was the real moment for freedom for Cuba. Everything was ready for it then. The people were waiting. It was very organized.

Q. Can you tell me about the retreat and subsequent consequences, please?

A. There were only two places to retreat: the sea and the swamp. Men put out in little boats in the sea. They all were killed by Castro's planes. Only five or six escaped without capture. Most took to the swamp and were captured.

This is what I did. We were 20 months in jail. There were 1,000 men there. An American lawyer got us free for $72,000,000, American money. We came to Florida. In Miami Kennedy came and talked to us in the Orange Bowl, a stadium. It was a welcome speech.

Q. What do you think is Cuba's future now?

A. I think that Castro will fall soon.

Q. Why?

A. The economic situation is bad. The people are tired. The people are sick.

The Bay of Pigs invasion was April 17, 1961. Now, over two years later, there is still an air of confusion, almost of mystery surrounding it. The Cuban Freedom Fighters had long planned it; they

Cycling Contest—Any Man's Race

CC will again host an intercollegiate bicycle race this Sunday, under the sponsorship of Dick Oldakowski from the college cycle shop.

The race, which will start at 10 in the morning, will be run on a 30 mile course, from the intersection of Fillmore and Templeton Gap to the Black Forest, and return. As there is a slight uphill grade on the first leg of the race, it is probable that while speed of only about 30 mph will be reached on that part, the cyclists will be able to return at over 50 mph in some stretches. Needless to say it will be a fast pace, and the race should average over 35 mph.

Entered from CC will be John Tary, Bruce Cole, Charlie Dukes, and Tim Zetterstrom. They will be competing against the top riders in the state, but as time handicaps will be given on the basis of cycling experience, the race is up for grabs.

Tiger Bowlers Lose To CSU, Sunday

The Wyoming-Colorado Collegiate Bowling Conference (W.C.C.B.C.), which is in its first year of competition, got off to a fine start last Sunday, November 3, at Varsity Lanes in Denver. In all, there were eight teams participating including the following: Colorado College, C.U., C.S.U., C.S.C., A.F.A., D.U., Colo. Mines and the U. of Wyoming.

However, the season got started on a sour note for our Tigers. CC ran up against a red-hot C.S.U. team and were defeated in all three games. Bill Evans was high for CC with a 555 series. Representing Colorado College at the first meet were Bill Evans, Reno Van Patten, Sam Arents, Tom Kaminski and team captain, Bill Felz.

This Sunday, Nov. 10 at 2 p.m. in the Rastall Lanes, the U. of Wyoming will be meeting us for a three game set which promises to be a good match. The Tigers will be hungry for this contest seeing as how the U. of Wyoming was the hottest team at the initial match of the season at Denver and presently are undefeated.

All students are urged to attend and give their support to their newest team, which was instrumental in the founding of the W.C.C.B.C. Be there Sunday afternoon at 2:00 p.m. in the Rastall Lanes and watch your team in action!

Notice

NUGGET pictures will be taken on Tuesday, November 12 in Rastall Center from 1-5 and 7-10 p.m. Retakes and original pictures will be shot.

Alpha Phi

Well, the A. Phi. has done it again. Eight sneaky little pledges (minus one) pulled a well-executed sneak Saturday afternoon and had the actives tramping down south to Pueblo before they were found. The entire crew ended up in the backyard dirt alley of the "Great Shell" (alias Anne H.) bonfire, guitars, and all. We all had fun. Pledges. Thanks loads (and do it again?)

Monday marked the arrival of our national field secretary, Miss Carol Bon Durant, who will be staying with us for the next two weeks. She will be helping us to organize the sorority program and future functions. To her a big Hi and "Welcome!"

During the week, if you happen to see an assortment of dusty cowpokes, slick cowboys and coal-blackened engineers, it's only the Phi dressed for their Variety Show act, "The Great Train Robbery." Our united congratulatory cheers to Donna Jones, who worked so hard as one of the student directors to make this year's show a success.

Delta Gamma

There is a jolly group called the DGs.

For dinner they invited the Fijis. There was fun, food, and all. For short, thin, and tall. And for coming we do thank the Fijis.

The Variety Show has been here all week.

But you still have tonight to go peek.

At the king and his queen—And how fools—they've not been Come see, and you'll know what we speak of.

Gamma Phi Beta

Monday, being the first meeting in the month, we recognized, for her unsurpassed contribution to "Charlie" during homecoming, Deb Smith (our world traveler), as Outstanding Active of the month. Sincerely, many thanks for all the hard work, gasoline, crepe paper, crepe paper, and crepe paper, that went into the decoration. Our pledge of the month award went to Frankie Keller, newly elected pledge president. Congratulations to both of them.

The weekend saw much excitement at the Gamma Phi house. Friday afternoon brought a lively picnic with the Fijis, complete with a football game. Official score: we—99, they—0. (If you hear differently, ignore it!)

Then our seniors decided to "retreat," and retreat they did! Saturday, 14 strong, and armed with bedrolls and provisions for the weekend, they sped to Mary Tarr's cabin in the mountains.

The Gamma Phis showed their community spirit in their wholehearted support of the Campus Chest (by the way, our unbiased congratulations to the Phi Deltas for their excellent taste in buying our five hashers.) Keep your eyes open next week for Jean Tancorn and Judy Reagan, who will share the honor of president of the college. In addition, we will try our hand at the Food Service—anything goes!

Kappa Alpha Theta

The Theta House has a new occupant for two weeks—Miss Judy Rutledge, the Kappa Alpha Theta traveling secretary. Judy has been visiting Theta Houses throughout the country in order to furnish a new supply of tips and ideas about the sorority. The knowledge and experience she has acquired in her stops at different chapters is generously offered to the members of Beta Omega here at CC. We are honored to entertain such a stimulating guest.

Many diligent students were interrupted from their studies last Sunday night when it was reported that the pledges had staged a "sneak" with the Phi Delt pledges. Fears of chasing the pledges into the mountains late at night were dispelled when all converged on the scene and found the culprits cozily installed in the home of pledge Marcia MacInnes. The ruffled "actives" were soon appeased by doughnuts and hot chocolate and by the lively conversation which ensued between Phi Deltas and Thetas.

Kappa Kappa Gamma

The Kappas started off the week with a dinner given by the Sigma Chi Sunday night. All who went agreed that it was a very enjoyable evening, complete with delicious food. Thank you, Sigma Chi!

Around the Kappa house there's a flurry of activity as preparations are made for the visit of our field secretary, Miss Ann Fletcher, next week. She arrives on Monday and will stay several days.

Final preparations are also being made for the Kappa Christmas formal, Friday, November 15.

Beta Theta Pi

Last Saturday night the Betas held FOSK, sub-classification known as SICK (Social in Cave Kicks). Hot wassail and delux beverages were featured refreshments in the beautiful elfin grove.

How clever is the Theta TIGER correspondent. She turned in an article a week ago last Tuesday about what a successful Halloween party the Thetas and Betas shared the following Thursday. Her gamble paid off. Active participation of both Thetas and Betas in skit presentation, pumpkin carving, and general good cheer made it truly a "wonderful evening".

We thank the Kappas for the pleasant pre-football game luncheon (more eloquent than "lunch") last Saturday. Following luncheon the party moved to the stadium where two football teams and Crazy Boyden provided entertainment.

Phi Gamma Delta

Last Sunday the Fijis were hosted by the DGs at a supper which proved very enjoyable to all concerned. Our thanks are extended for a wonderful time.

Congratulations are in order for brothers Don Bradbury, Jim Warden, Gary Nelson and Cubby Welsh who are helping with CC's annual Variety Show. Don is doing a banjo solo. Jim is doing a piano solo and is also providing entertainment between acts. Gary and Cubby are connected with publicity and theater management respectively.

Phi Delta Theta

Parts of the Phi Delt and Kappa houses are participating in the opening act of the Variety Show. Steve "Twinkle Toes" Frink has conclusively proven for the affirmative the long debated question, "Does playing varsity football really hamper one's progress in the cultivation of one's dancing ability." While most of the dancers will be wearing supple sneakers, Steve has resorted to his football low-cuts. Dainty Jeff Sauer graphically demonstrates the positive influence of isometrics. An observant eye can also derive a number of helpful techniques from Gus "Poetry in Motion" Hart. After the last show on Friday night will be a Kappa-Phi Delt party in the Phi Delt basement, at which the dancer's delight, wheat germ pills, will be served as refreshment.

Thursday night Bemis Hall and the Kappa Sigs ("...") were invited to Halloween festivities in the Phi Delt basement.

Sunday evening the Thetas and Phi Deltas met at the home of Marcia MacInnes for cocoa and donuts for what was supposed to be a joint pledge sneak, but which wasn't really very sneaky.

There is, as always, the argument that the college is responsible for the conduct of its students, but this is again in contradiction to the purpose of a college or university, in that it immediately invalidates its claim to help development of maturity in the individual and prepare him for future life. As an institution of higher learning, it should be just that and provide the best possible education and freedom for development. Its purpose is not to substitute for a parent to the student away from home.

Several other arguments arise immediately, such as the prediction of an increase in immorality, to which I would reply that there is nothing which can be done after 1:30 a.m. that can't be done before. If a girl realizes that the whole burden of what she does, including the consequences, rests upon her alone, she will take more care with her decision, both with regard to basic moral questions and such seemingly simple problems as getting enough sleep to be ready to study the next day.

Some fairly obvious things are implied by the suggested system. The "penalties" levied by Late Board and Judicial Board would be non-existent. A girl would not be told that she was not allowed to speak to anyone from 7 p.m. until the next morning because a stopped watch had made her twenty minutes late one night.

Her actions alone would determine the effect upon her, without the interference of a board of peers in no way especially qualified to judge her.

There is a strong possibility of this type of system having a much-needed influence on the home discipline in pre-college years over a period of time. More care would be taken, with the realization that at age 18 the child would be in charge of his own behavior. Here is another influence in the moulding of responsible adults, which would help move away from the immaturity and insecurity in modern young adulthood.

At first glance, the relationship between women's dorm system policy and the attitudes of young adults, particularly young parents, seems very vague. The maturing process is, however, too vital in all its aspects to ignore this relationship. The step from college to full responsibilities is too short; we must use every possible method to prepare for it.

Fine Defensive Play By CC Soccer Team

Last Sunday the CC soccer squad traveled to Boulder to play the league-leading CU booters. CC, sporting but one American on the team, played a cautious game, possession soccer, marked by short, accurate passing. With the game merely four minutes old, the CU line set up the first tally of the game, the goal being scored on a 12 yard shot that ricocheted off the goal post. CU added single goals again in the second and third quarter, while CC had difficulty organizing an offensive threat to even the score. Thus the final score was 3-0, the first shutout against the CC eleven this year.

The game was characterized by fine defensive play on the part of CC. Many times the CU attack was thwarted by alert tackling or by invoking the off-side rule. With such pressure on the defense, it was hard at times for the CU backs to give the line the needed support.

Tomorrow morning the Tiger squad concludes its conference schedule with a home game against Denver University. Kick off time is 11 a.m. on Stuart Field.

THE BELL TELEPHONE COMPANIES SALUTE: KEN PARKER

BELL TELEPHONE COMPANIES

When Ken Parker (B.S.E.E., 1961) joined Pacific Northwest Bell he became a part of a special services engineering group in the Seattle office. Here was an opportunity for him to learn about the unique services of telephony.

With learning comes responsibility, and Ken was given his share right from the start. He was accountable for the transmission design of all loudspeaker services. Often, he was teamed with a marketing salesman, who would call on him to recommend the right system while with a customer.

Ken went on to bigger and more complicated communications in the special services group. On a subsequent assignment he was responsible for the transmission design of many intercity and interstate services. His decisions were far-reaching and affected many customers.

Ken Parker, like many young engineers, is impatient to make things happen for his company and himself. There are few places where such restlessness is more welcomed or rewarded than in the fast-growing telephone business.

TELEPHONE MAN-OF-THE-MONTH

CC Stomped 47-6 by Adams State Indians

Colorado College was decisively beaten by the Adams State Indians 47-6 last Saturday, to bring the Tiger overall record to 3 wins and 5 losses.

The game seemed to be key-noted when the Tigers stopped the Indians after the kickoff and received the ball, only to have a screen pass intercepted and run into the end zone to give the Indians a 7-0 advantage, with less than five minutes of the game used up.

The Tiger offense mustered a drive after taking the second kickoff, only to be stalled deep in Indian territory by a defense led by stout 250 pound George Roby.

Adams State took over the ball once more, and was stopped on the first two plays by the Tiger defensive line. On the next play, the Indians took to the air on a play that sent two receivers deep, and then set up a screen to a half back who had snuck unnoticed into the fat flat area. Quarterback Carl Fetteris, seeing the halfback, Ron Weiser, in the clear, shot a 34 yarder for the score.

This play proved to be the Achilles heel to the Tiger defense, with Weiser getting 3 touchdowns and six passes for 187 yards on that play alone. The Indians were to score once more in the half to leave the game at 21 to 0.

When the two teams returned, the Tigers still felt that they had a chance of pulling the game "out of the fire." It was the Tiger's turn to receive and once again they started a drive that was to be stymied a short while later. The Indians took over and started driving towards the Tiger goal line.

At this point, there was a five minute delay in the game over a disputed call. What appeared to have happened was that a CC lineman jumped off sides, and the Indian player became confused, thinking that his team was being penalized for the CC off sides. Becoming so distraught over this confusion, the Indian player sputtered forth with some ugly language and the referee took prompt action of dismissal. At this point the entire Adams State team became confused and caused even further delay while the referee tried to aid them in their thinking. When the confusion had cleared away, Jim Paronto took over at quarterback for the Indians and completed passes to freshman end Don Alley and halfback Wieser at will. Paronto ended up the day with four touchdown passes, and 12 out of 19 completions.

The Tiger score came in the third quarter with Quarterback Warner Reese plunging over from the one yard line. Previous to this score, Fullback Bobby Stapp had a beautiful 70 yard run which appeared to be a score, only to be called back on an off side penalty.

This victory put the Indians in second place behind Western State in the R.M.F.A.C. followed by Colorado State and Colorado Mines, with CC being in the league cellar.

Savant Steve Sabol Speaks: Discusses Doane's Downfall

By Steve Sabol

Tomorrow's clash with last year's Tri-State Conference co-champs, Doane College, will be the final home football game of the year. The task facing CC this week, while not as momentous and insurmountable as last week's assignment, is nevertheless a stern one.

Doane College from the unlikely town of Crete, Nebraska, brings to the Springs a well-balanced, well-coached football squad bragging a defense which has held opponents to a palty 58.6 yards rushing per game. Cast in the same mold as their ancient mythological ancestors, the Cretons, Doane College is a sordid collection of behemoths whose sole intention in life is the total obliteration of their enemies. The present day Cretons from Doane boast, in Heischel Turner then 5'10" 246 lb guard, a modern day Minotaur. Doane's labyrinth-like defenses lead straggling halfbacks and fullbacks into Turner's lair where he mangles them much in the same manner as his ancient forerunner did thousands of years before.

CC Head Coach "Aegeus" Carle must solve this horrendous labyrinth-like defense and select from among his depleted ranks a Theseus to slay the dreadful Minotaur. If Cubby Welch can hit "Mene-laous" Muller and "Herodotus" Howell with some well-timed passes to divert the vile monster, and if "Laocon" Lathrop, "Lotus-eater" Loochi and "Ajax" Jackson can momentarily detain the frightful thing, CC's Theseus could very well be Sudden Death Sabol from Sarpedon, Sicily. However, if Sudden Death from Sarpedon should lose his ball of thread (which has been known to happen), "Cyclops Cy" Dyer or "Morpheus Mike" Mestek should be able to complete the chore and slay "Herschel the Horrible."

Let us hope that Theseus' ship will fly a white sail come Saturday afternoon.

"As an oak tree falleth on the hillside
Cushaug all that beneath it lie,
So the Tigers slay the horrid Minotaur
And all Doane College cried."

100 Mile Skate Club

Ice rink manager Tony Frasca announced this week the institution of CC's "100 Mile Club" for those participating in the physical conditioning skating program. Special sessions are presently set aside at the rink for physical conditioning two or three times weekly. To qualify for Frasca's "Certificate of Merit" you need only sign up in the Games Area and then count the laps you make around the rink. Sixteen laps equal one mile and quick figuring will show that this yields a total of 1600 laps. Fortunately, you need not complete your 100 miles in one session.

Hockey Squad New, Untried; Only Five Lettermen Return

This year Colorado College will have a new and untired hockey team. The squad lost ten members through graduation, and only five lettermen will be returning to action. The veterans are Art Warwick, Jeff Sauer, Roger Simon, John Sinus, and Wayne McAlpine. Standing two-year letterman, Sauer and Simon, both sophomores, will return to the center position. Sinus, Minneapolis senior, and McAlpine, a senior from Schumacher, Ontario, will continue to drop ice as Bengal wings. There are no returning defensemen, and it will be a problem for Coach Bob Johnson to rebuild this important position.

Last year's freshman team will add depth and strength to the Tigers. Among the stronger contenders for varsity positions are sophomores Bob Otto, Glen Blumst, and Dave Peterson. This year's freshman team is markedly different from previous years. There is not a single Canadian in the group. The team members are predominantly from Minnesota, and they have already exhibited a skill in hockey that is beyond their years. The high quality of the freshman squad is due to a very selective program of recruiting. Nine freshmen are attending Colorado College on hockey scholarships.

Colorado College is a member of the Western Collegiate Hockey Association which is probably the toughest intercollegiate hockey league in the world. The other members of the WCHA are Denver, Michigan Tech, Minnesota, North Dakota, and Michigan State. Of such formidable competition Coach Johnson realistically says, "This year's team should play exciting and enthusiastic hockey. We lost heavily through graduation and we are in the process of rebuilding, but we will play every game to win."

Coach Robert Johnson is in his first year at CC, replacing Tony Frasca as ice boss. Coach Johnson comes to Colorado College after six years at Minneapolis' Roosevelt High School. He has been working the varsity daily from late to seven since November 1.

The freshmen practice from three to five daily and are looking forward to their encounter with the varsity on November 22 and at the Broadmoor. The "cubs" are hindered by their inexperience and by the fact that they have only two lines to play three twenty-minute periods. The freshmen, however, are strong in every category, and they will undoubtedly give the varsity a few surprises.

INTRAMURALS

Last week saw the close of the regular flag football season for both the fraternity and Slocum leagues. The Greek system finished off in a three way tie for first place between the Zetas, the Sigma Chis, and the Phi Gams, while Lovelace sewed up the American League with a 53-0 victory over their nearest opponent, Second South. In the National League, Third South also ran away with the title, defeating Fourth West 47-6. It might be added that their four teams were all undefeated, boasting 6-0 records going into their final league games.

The final game of the Fraternity League will be held on Stewart Field at 11:00 a. m. on Saturday, November 9. All three teams will report and a coin will be flipped to determine which team gets the bye. The two other teams will then play one half a regulation game and the winner will compete with the idle team for the championship.

The Slocum semi-finals will be held next week, Tuesday and Thursday. Fourth West will play Lovelace and Second South will meet Third South to determine the two finalists who will then meet early the following week for the championship game.

Intramural hockey will start as soon as rosters are handed in to intramural Director Tony Frasca. At this date it looks as if Slocum will be able to field four or five teams. Fraternities too are asked to hand in their rosters.

Soon to follow hockey will be volleyball and table tennis. The schedules for these are now being drawn up but it is too early to say when these will push off.

● Reminder: All Slocum tennis players are urged to complete their matches and hand in scores to Mr. Frasca.

As there is no longer a Slocum program manager, all Slocum and Independent houses are urged to send their athletic wing representatives to meet with Mr. Frasca at 7:00 p. m. Monday, November 11. It is imperative that all wings and houses send a representative as the meeting will concern future organization of activities.

Will all wings and fraternities see that intramural scores are given to Mr. Frasca as soon as possible after their games.

ASCC NOTES

The ASCC voted upon the proposed budget of the finance committee this week. The items were voted on individually and both the gallery and the Executive Council were able to make any comments they wished to any of the items.

The approved budget follows:

Organization	Requested	Recommended	Received
Associated Women Students	$ 580.00	$ 320.00	$ 350.00
College Forum Committee	500.00	700.00	700.00
Community Service	60.00	50.00	60.00
Convention Fund	400.00	400.00	400.00
Darkroom	300.00	300.00	300.00
Experimental Theater	150.00	150.00	150.00
Foreign Student Committee	3,200.33	3,000.00	3,000.00
Homcoming	200.00	300.00	300.00
International Relations Club	400.00	250.00	250.00
Kinikinik	2,100.00	2,100.00	2,100.00
Nougat — $8.25 per student per semester (approximately $7,310.50) — approved	100.00	100.00	100.00
Picnic — 1.45 per student per semester (approximately $3,529.30) — approved	50.00	30.00
Young Democrats		30.00
Young Republicans	300.00	30.00
Bowling Team		50.00
Cheer Club		50.00
Choir		400.00

The total amount recommended and approved was $19,189.80. ASCC Current received $282.00 which add up (hopefully) to the approximated ASCC Operating Fund of $19,372.00. This money is obtained from the activities fee which is paid by each student attending Colorado College.

The lengthy discussion of the above budget ended with Miss Heller asking the question, "Why doesn't any part of the added tuition go to the ASCC so that some of these legitimate requests may be filled?" The ASCC will look into this question.

Respectfully submitted,
Karen McVaine,
ASCC Secretary

Meeting to Be Held Concerning Privileges for Senior Women

There has been a strong un-current among the women stuents on this campus concerning the possibility of a residence hall for senior women or the possibility of Senior Keys. This talk will not be anywhere unless the people who are interested express their interest. If there is an actual interest in a Senior Honor Residence Hall it should be made known because it is too late to accomplish it by the Class of 1965.

A meeting will be held in the Commons Lobby at 10 p. m. on Monday, Nov. 18. This meeting will attempt to accomplish several things. It will be an opportunity for senior women to express their interest in the concept of an honor residence or senior key privileges.
It will be an opportunity to express reasons for desiring such senior privilege. It will also be an opportunity to provide some constructive ideas for the organization of such a residence hall system.

This is the time to express your opinion on the subject of senior privileges. If the junior women do not speak up now they will be confronted with the option of reserving half-hour senior specials to leave the senior women for the next two years. If you will be satisfied with a half-hour extension, there is no reason for you to attend the meeting on Monday night.
If you are interested in a change in the present system, we hope to see you Monday night at 10 p. m.

19 August Graduates Approved by Faculty

Nineteen Colorado College seniors, who completed the work for their bachelor's degrees in August, have been formally approved by the faculty for graduation.

They will receive their degree diplomas at the annual commencement in June of 1964, although they now are for all practical purposes college graduates.

One was approved for the bachelor's degree in science and 18 for the bachelor of arts degree.

Approved for the BS degree in chemical technology was Dorothy Dahl Henry.

The BA degree graduates, together with their major fields of study, are:

Bruce S. Batting, business administration; Arthur J. Berglund, education; Harry B. Boyd, business administration; Glenn B. Clark, Jr., history; Marilyn D. Doughton, history; Ava M. Heinrichsdorf, English; Ava E. Green Hickson, art;
John E. Huenink, sociology; Arvy
K. Kavely, geology; Lawrence E.
McCarthy, none; Ruth H. Walsh
McKenna, English; Ann W. Millard, Spanish; Michael P. Minelli, biology; Thomas M. Moore, education; Herman F. Son, business administration; James E. Stewart, education; Marion D. Townley, education; and Ralph Whitebrite, none.

AND WHAT ARE THE CHANCES FOR A CO-CANINE RESIDENCE HALL?

Dean of Men Questioned On Residential College Concept

By Brad Scharf

On the afternoon of Friday, November 1, I visited the office of J. Juan Reid, Colorado College Dean of Men, to conduct an interview. The purpose of this interview was to help correct a failing which I felt existed on this campus: the dearth of communication between the administration and the student body concerning the philosophy behind, and the action taken in, the implementation of long-range college policies.

Throughout the thirty minutes
Mr. Reid displayed a distinct hesi-tance to make any statements of a substantive nature. The questions ranged over an area concerned with the administration's concept of a residential college and its actions taken to bring it to reality.

Q: In your opinion is Colorado
College a residential college?

Reid: Page 11 of the college catalogue states, "Colorado College is a residential college, and all students, except married students and students living with immediate relatives, are required to live on campus."

Q: But that statement is not correct, is it?

Reid: No, the catalogue goes on to state, "The Dean of Men and Dean of Women are authorized to arrange off-campus housing if residence halls and fraternity houses are filled to capacity."

Q: Would you believe it possible to require all students to live on campus, subject to seemingly stringent regulation in some areas, without losing a certain type of student which you might want to have here?

Reid: Presumably we have no doubt standard here: one for students who live on campus, one for those who live off campus.

Q: While many colleges similar to CC permit possession of alcoholic beverages on campus in accordance with state regulations, it is not permitted here at all. Would you care to comment?

Reid: We do not feel that liquor is a necessary ingredient to a social success, and we feel that the Old Testament Prof. To Give Two Lectures

Dr. Coert Rylaarsdam, professor of Old Testament at the Federated Theological Seminary of the University of Chicago, will give two lectures on the Colorado College campus during the coming week. On Monday, Nov. 18, he will speak at 8:30 p. m. in Perkins Hall on the subject, "Islam, Judaism, and Modern Nationalism." At 11 a. m. on Tuesday, Nov. 19, he will give a lecture in the college Forum Series on "The Religious Legacy of the Middle East." This lecture will be in the Old Lecture Hall.
Both lectures are open to the public.

A native of Minnesota, Dr.
Rylaarsdam was educated at Hope College, the New Brunswick Theological Seminary, and the University of Chicago. He did special work in Arabic at Princeton University. He taught for five years at the American School for Boys in Basra, Iraq. He has also been on the faculty of the New Brunswick Theological Institute and Union Theological Seminary.

He is the co-editor of the Journal of Religion, and his many writings include: Revelation in Jewish Wisdom Literature, and contributions to the Interpreter's Bible, and New Peake Bible Commentary, and the Interpreter's Dictionary. Dr.
Rylaarsdam's visit to Colorado College is co-sponsored by the College's Lecture Committee, the Forum Committee, and the American Association for Middle East Studies.

British Lecturer Discusses Science, Knowledge of God

By Sue Ludwig

On Tuesday, November 12, Dr. Roger Pilkington, a noted British geneticist, educator, lecturer, and writer, discussed the topic of "Science and the Knowledge of God." Dr. Pil-kington is greatly interested in the relationship between science and theology, having served as an active member of several organizations devoted to theological pursuits, he is well qualified to present this issue.

Dr. Pilkington introduced the lecture by commenting that Robert Boyle, who is considered the father of chemistry, believed that there were two ways of finding knowledge of God: by studying his works in the Bible, and by studying his works in Nature. According to Boyle, the goal in science was to gain a clearer understanding of the nature of God. However, modern science is related in no way to theological issues. In contrast to Boyle's motives, man now studies science in order to achieve individual fame and satisfaction in discovery, national progress, or improvement of living conditions.

Dr. Pilkington then stated that contemporary men show four different attitudes toward science and religion. Some, feeling that "what was good enough for their grandparents was good enough for them," completely ignored scientific accomplishments and interpret the Bible literally. Others, closing their minds in the other direction, maintain that man is self-sufficient; they ignore religious teachings and place their faith entirely in scientific endeavors.
The third attitude which men exhibit is the desire to "stake a claim for God" in areas which science has not yet tackled, in other words, some feel that the areas which cannot be explained by science must be attributed to divine creation. The fourth attitude, which Pilkington supports, is the belief that, because science is in high degree earthy-tested truth and because any god worthy of human reverence must be the "author of truth," it is only logical to maintain that every discovery which science makes should be accepted as some sort of Revelation.

The remainder of the lecture involved a discussion of the two great claims of Christianity: first, the Old Testament claim that God is the sole creator of the universe, and second, the New Testament claim of Incarnation: the belief that the Spirit of God once entered life on earth embodied in the person of Christ. This discussion included extensive comments on the process of evolution and a few references to the ideas of incarnation and the nature of the universe. It was very difficult to discover, during the last part of the lecture, exactly what Dr. Pilkington believed to be the effect of scientific theories and achievements on Christian doctrine. His comments were interesting and humorous, but seemingly unrelated to the main idea and to each other. The clarity previously shown in expressing man's attitudes toward science and religion was lost in the discussion of science versus Christianity.

Ford Foundation Challenge Passes Two-Thirds Mark

Colorado College has passed the two-thirds point in its campaign to raise $5,500,000 to earn $2,200,000 from the Ford Foundation.

Harold C. Harmon '30, chairman of the Colorado College Campaign, announced that over $3,767,000 of the challenge money is assured.
This is 68 per cent of the goal.

Mr. Harmon said the $200,000 grant from the Boettcher Foundation of Denver for the construction of a campus health center has helped to lift the college into the final third of the campaign.

Tiger Club Lists Auctioned Items

The annual Tiger Club Campus Chest Auction was held on October 29, at 7:00 in the Rastall Lounge. The purpose of the auction was to earn money to donate to the Community Chest. Auctioneer
Don Olsen led the bidding and sold the items to the individual or group who was the highest bidder.
The following groups and individuals purchased the following items:

1. Office of the Dean of Men—
Phi Gamma Delta.
2. Hashers — Phi Delta Theta.
3. Stocum Hall Head Resident for a day—Tiger Club.
4. Phi Gam Clean-up Committee for a function — Kappa Kappa Gamma.
5. Cookies (12 dozen) — Tacknor
Hall.
6. President of College for a day—Gamma Phi Beta.
7. Cui Washers—Beta Theta Pi.
8. Hasher—Kappa Alpha Theta.
9. Dean of Women for a day—
Alpha Phi.

The Tiger Club would like to thank all the people who attended and took part in the auction, and would like to extend a special thanks to Mr. Olsen, our auctioneer.
The Tiger Club would like to ask all participants to complete their transactions. Payment goes to the Tiger Club, in care of Melinda Wells.

Lovelace House Hosts Dr. Brooks

Dr. Glenn Brooks of the political science department visited Lovelace House last Sunday evening to deliver his lecture, and the various corruptions of a liberal arts education. A sense of urgency was injected into the evening in
Dr. Brooks' contrasting of newspaper reports of the torture of Diem's political opponents in South Vietnam with the activities of the "happy people" of the CC campus.
No comment was required to make clear how we frequently permit our perverted means to interfere with our unanimously proclaimed goals of achieving "liberation" at a liberal arts college. The true means of reaching this goal involves a quest after Jacques Barzun's "House of Intellect."

Both the professor and the student of liberal arts are essentially scholarship boys, "schizophrenia."
While ideally the professor would remain inside the house and continue a quest for knowledge with those students who were also there, he is required to make frequent forays outside the house in hopes of salvaging others who might be struggling on the pathway. The student "scholar" is one who may already be in, or nearing, the House of Intellect, but is held back by the necessity of playing the game of "psyching the prof," a game actively fostered by many liberal arts instructors.

The faculty discussion, the second in a year-long series, was well attended and much appreciated. The next such discussion will be Sunday, November 24, at 8:00 p. m. at Lovelace House, 917 N.
Nevada. The college community is invited to quiz Dr. Arnest on the subject of modern art.

So far the question of CC as a residential college has been characterized by an extensive superstructure of abundant and vehement opinion based on a very flimsy foundation where the actual actions and considerations of those responsible are concerned. The TIGER will in the coming weeks attempt to bolster that factual foundation and offer students the opportunity to express their views on the basis of knowledge rather than conjecture.

Now that the administration has rejected the original men's residential complex plan, in coming issues we intend to follow the progress of the Panning Committee, chaired by Mr. Don Oden, in their formulation of a new outline for men's residences.

One factor which seems to be conspicuously missing in planning and implementing the Administration's concept of a residential college is any provision for or even any consideration of the social impact of such a change on student life. It should be recognized that the elimination of all off-campus men's housing together with the imposition of residence hall rules similar to those already in force for Slocum and the upperclass men's residences will mean fairly drastic social changes for the entire campus.

Presumably the operation of such a system as it is now envisaged would include the usual prohibition of alcoholic beverages in a college residence hall and a continuation of the college's policy of allowing women only in the men's common lounges (at present even this modest exercise of personal responsibility is forbidden in the upperclass men's residences.)

These two provisions, fully imposed on a completely residential campus, would obliterate any independent social life on that campus, and would make it virtually impossible to achieve any real privacy at any time during the student's stay at college.

At the risk of raising the old privatism spectre once more, we would submit that the college which intends to oblige some 20% of its men students to surrender their heretofore comparatively undisturbed social independence for the sake of "a community spirit and institutional pride" should understand its concomitant obligation to make allowance for the expression of those social needs which are affected.

We are not suggesting that the college should treat men residents as though they were living in private dwellings; the community concept obviously presupposes some encroachment on the private rights of the individual for the sake of his development as a prospective member of "the large community." We would ask only that the college consider in the formulation of its plans the wide-ranging social effect which will result from the implementation of any residential college concept.

Specifically, we would suggest direct student participation in the committee which is planning the new men's residence complex; we would suggest that some provision for mixed private social activity in men's residences be an integral part of the residential college concept; we would suggest that the college should begin to recognize that the fostering of personal maturity through freedom to develop a personal sense of responsibility is preferable to the fostering of some mystical "community spirit" whose fullest expression seems doomed to be thoroughly stifled by the imposition of unnatural and unrealistic social regulations.

Lacrosse Movie

A movie of the Navy vs. Johns Hopkins game will be shown Sunday, Nov. 19, in the WES lounge, 2 p. m. Everyone is invited to a meeting of the Lacrosse Club immediately after the movie.

Lovelace House-Warming

The boys at Lovelace House invite the entire campus to attend our first open house of the year. We will be welcoming guests this Sunday afternoon from 2:00 to 5:00 p. m. You can't miss us at 917 North Nevada, directly east of Slocum Hall.

ASCC NOTES

This week the ASCC Executive Council had a guest who gave the only report. He was Cliff Hofwalt of CC who spoke on the Colorado Collegiate Association of which we are a member. Cliff is the present president of the Association.

CCA has two main goals which are to co-ordinate college activities—cultural, academic and social; and to provide a unified voice of the students of Colorado. Some of the programs which they are hoping to initiate are a College Bowl (the winners of which would participate in the GE series), a professor exchange, seminar programs, a tentative television show, a drama exchange, CU's international affairs conference, and internships, with the hope to finance their undertakings with a grant from the Boettcher Foundation.

Respectfully submitted,
Karen McIlwaine

Shove Chapel

Sunday, November 17, 11:00 a.m.
Preacher: Rev. Professor Coert Rylaarsdam

Worship Leader: Rev. Professor Kenneth W. F. Burton

The Religious Affairs Committee is very pleased to welcome to the campus of Colorado College Dr. Coert Rylaarsdam, Professor of Old Testament at the Divinity School of the University of Chicago. Dr. Rylaarsdam is one of the most prominent Biblical scholars in the United States. He has published many articles and written several of the commentaries in the many-volumed Interpreter's Bible series. He has also published a book on the Wisdom Literature of the Bible. Dr. Rylaarsdam will preach in Shove Chapel on Sunday morning at 11:00 a.m.

Later the same day he will speak on the theme of "The Book of Job and the Play J.B." This meeting, sponsored by the Religious Affairs Committee, will take place at 5:00 p.m. in the W.E.S. Room at Rastall Center. Light refreshments will be served at the beginning of the meeting at a cost of 25c.

Professor Rylaarsdam will also be speaking at a public lecture on Monday evening, and an all-college forum on Tuesday morning.

VILLAGE IDIOT

By Caroline Croyke

"Ding, dong, ding, I can hear the chapel bell ring!" Faintly perhaps, but nevertheless, it's starting to ring. Beta Theta Pi has pledged one hundred dollars to the fund. This is one-eighth of the total amount needed. This may not sound like much, but when you consider that this fraternity represents only about one-twentieth of the total Colorado College enrollment, we are well on our way. One-twentieth-second of the school has given one-eighth of the amount needed. I'm asking the remaining twenty-seconds to pitch in and help raise the remaining $7400. All contributions will be gratefully and welcome accepted.

On to less urgent matters.

The Westland Theatres and I had a parting of the ways this week, so far as I'm concerned there is only one theatre in town right now—the Ute, this weekend featuring Montgomery Cliff in "The Secret Passion" (alias "Freud"). Those of you who appreciated Mr. Greenway's rendition of "The Battle Hymn of the Republic" should enjoy this film.

Something new in sounds, "Jazz on the Rocks" by the Knight Sound "made the scene" (BJ) last weekend, and will do so again tonight, Saturday night, and Sunday afternoon in the Cave of the Cliff House (Manitou Springs). The music's good and the drinks

"Ivory Tower" Concept Valid

In theory one of the primary advantages of a residential college is the absence of a barrier between the administration and its student body. Unlike large state universities our administration need not cater to the desires of a board of trustees. Here it is responsible only to alumni, benefactors, and students. Again unlike large state universities a graduate of Colorado College generally becomes a true alumnus and his interest in the school is more than passing. Few people desire the maintenance of an "ivory tower" concept of College Hall, yet no one can seriously contend that administrative student communication currently approaches an optimum level.

Too few Colorado College students, though dissatisfied with administration policies, put forth effort to express their opinions effectively with a view toward constructive action. By the same token some Colorado College administrators often tend to regard the expression of student opinion as something to be tolerated rather than sought after. In the light I might mention that, while planning for the new men's housing complex has progressed quite far, the administration has yet to consult its own student body.

Nothing really stands in the way of increased administrative responsibility to student. If truly encouraged, an exchange would soon develop into a healthy and self-generating component of our residential college. A true residential college goes beyond the physical sharing of the campus; it involves the sharing of minds and opinions. In this the administration, as well as the faculty and student body, must be included.

LETTERS to the EDITORS

To the Editor:

This is a school where discretion is the rule, rather than morality. But, perhaps, the same situation is true with our society as a whole. We give lip service to one standard and then act according to another, or to no higher standard at all. This pretentious quality in theory and practice could be called the crisis of amorality.

Although the afore-stated thesis holds true for many realms of student life, there is one particular activity which consistently fits the previously described situation: drinking. According to state law, all who indulge in intoxicating beverages below the age of 21 are committing a crime. But a majority of students here have done so illegally and probably will continue to do so in the future. Most of us are aware that drinking goes on in the fraternity house, in the dorms, and at many school-sponsored functions. Drinking itself is not the problem I wish to point out, but rather the administration's attitude toward it. In effect, the administration is saying "It's all right if you drink, but don't do it openly. Don't break any laws so blatantly that we have to come in and take a stand on it—be discreet."

Personally, I would like to know if the administration thinks we are doing wrong. I would like to know if they condemn or condone a society of secret sinners!

To the Editors:

Following is a portion of a letter written to the editor of a newspaper of another campus. The letter appeared recently when AWS imposed a new regulation on freshman women: compulsory study hall for a week before final exams. During this period freshman women were required to be in their rooms from 1 to 5 and to 10 p.m. each day of the week except Saturday. The letter read: "Long live W.B. for his stand against compulsory study hall for freshman women before finals. However, we do not feel that we can possibly know why we are being ruled so passively, as he obviously does not have direct contact with the power of the women's dorms, President's Council, and the Associated Women Students."

"He probably has never been up against such measures as compulsory party attendance, compulsory membership and dues on AWS, compulsory dormitory meetings during study hours, and light out regulations."

"We are not INVITED to parties, as is the usual process in the 'real world'; rather, we are compelled to attend dormitory parties, regardless of whether we need to study or practice, attend special classes, or even whether we have previous plans. The Powers That Be tell us we must attend in order to become rounded social individuals, or that our non-attendance will ruin the reputation of our dorm. House rules forbid that we should cause eternal infamy to descend upon our beloved dorm. As an extra inducement, those who do not cannot attend these delightful functions are rewarded with a house check and a fifty-cent fee."

"In every dormitory the AWS has a representative whose job, as far as we can determine, is to exact dues from the unwelcome members, who, by the way, had no option about joining that worthless organization."

"So you see . . . it is not that we have any objection to this infringement on our rights; rather, we are so beaten down by all the other unfair rules that we are simply too tired of the frat bloody out heads again in the fight to live our own lives."

Thank goodness CC has a Judicial Board which is flexible and which has given us the most liberal regulations possible without keeping in mind the needs of the majority of women students.

College Judicial Bodies Examined

By Paul Tatter

The somewhat vague jurisdiction of judicial bodies on this campus make it difficult to establish any set pattern of their relationships. A diagram (accompanying) remains only a clarifying device, not a description. Theoretically the most accurate statements available come from the constitutions of these organizations. Through these documents a student may know, as clearly as anyone else on this campus, the respective powers and common structure of these bodies.

With reference to the diagram, the Judicial Boards (1), (2) and the Judicial Board (3) are provided for in the constitution of the Associated Women Students.

Late Boards

(1) (2) Both Late Boards have identical powers with "jurisdiction over all residents . . . (of their respective dorms) with respect to alleged-out procedure violations and minor late minute infractions." (up to 90 minutes). Cases may be appealed to the Judicial Boards.

Judicial Board

(3) Jurisdiction of the Judicial Board is uncertain at the present time because the AWS constitution refers to "that stated in the Constitution of the Committee on Student Conduct, Section II, paragraph E." This committee no longer exists. Nevertheless, Section II, paragraph E once read:

The Judicial Board shall have jurisdiction over all infractions or violations of non-academic rules and regulations of Colorado College or hall regulations by residents of the Women's Residence Halls occurring within or pertaining to the Women's Residence Halls.

One would expect much the same statement, hopefully in clearer form, to remain under the new President's Advisory Committee on Student Conduct, or perhaps it will be incorporated into the AWS Constitution. Judicial Board may recommend action by the college president in severe cases involving possible suspension; however, decision of this board may be appealed for a hearing to the President's Advisory Committee.

Inter-Hall Council

(4) The Inter-Hall Council of the Men's Residence Hall Association is functionally similar to the Judicial Board. According to the MRHA Constitution:

The Inter-Hall Council . . . shall handle such cases referred to it regarding conduct of residents in and near the men's residence halls by any member of the Colorado College student body or staff.

"Conduct" is later explained as "violations of rules and regulations . . . presumably of the College and the MRHA, though this is not stated. The Council may also recommend suspension but only to the President's Advisory Committee, not, as Judicial Board may, to the president himself. Appeal from any action of the Inter-Hall Council may be made to the President's Advisory Committee.

Inter-Fraternity Council

(5) Acting in a way similar to the Inter-Hall Council, the Inter-Fraternity Council has a power in judicial matters pertaining to fraternity affairs which are under the supervision of the college authorities and not expressly given to some other body." Specific statement of this is given as "any infringement upon the articles or sections of this (IFC) constitution." There are no restrictions in the IFC constitution on the appeal or referral of cases to higher au-

Panhellene

(6) Panhellene Council is free from association with other judicial bodies on campus, but it is also greatly restricted in its action. It may impose only previously established penalties (listed in the constitution) "for any infraction of any regulations in this Constitution, any of the standing rushing rules or for any infraction of the National Panhellene Compact, Standards of Ethical Conduct, or binding agreements." In effect this is concerned almost exclusively with rush.

Honor Council

(7) Unlike the other organizations in the diagram, Honor Council has no concern with social problems. It is exclusively for the hearing of misdemeanors in violation of the academic Honor System. According to prescribed actions the Council, after a second violation, recommends dismissal to the president of the college. Appeal from a guilty verdict in second violations may be made to a jury chosen by lot from the student body.

President's Advisory Committee

(8) According to the constitution of the ASCC: The Student Conduct Committee shall have jurisdiction over any individual who commits an infraction of the general non-academic policies and regulations of Colorado College. . . (It also shall hear all appeals from decisions of all other judicial bodies with the exception of Honor Council.

A constitution for the new President's Advisory Committee on Student Conduct has not yet been drawn, and slight alterations in the jurisdictions previously described are possible at such time. The most concise statement available concerning the duties of this Committee is given in a letter from President Wornor.

"It is understood that the Committee will hear cases that are brought to its attention and will determine the facts of each case of charged misconduct. It will also hear cases brought to its attention and cases referred to it by the Judicial Board of AWS or the Inter-Hall Council of the men's residence halls involving misconduct of individuals, groups of individuals or organizations. The jurisdiction shall include violations of social policy by individuals or organizations."

This, as the name indicates, is not a decision-making body but serves only as a fact-finding group, and in an advisory capacity to the president.

ASCC Student Policy Committee

One of the greatest ambiguities on this campus is the position and power of the Student Policy Committee of the ASCC. It is composed of the Deans of Men and Women, a member from the Executive Council, the presidents of the AWS, Honor Council, IFC, Inter-Hall Council of the men's

African Race Relations IRCC Discussion Topic

On Tuesday, November 19th, at 7:30 p.m. in Olin Lecture Hall, the Colorado College International Relations Club will present Mr. A. E. Abrahamson as a guest lecturer. He is a senior member of the Opposition Party (Rhodesia National Party) of the Southern Rhodesia Legislative Assembly and he also is director of several companies in Southern and Northern Rhodesia.

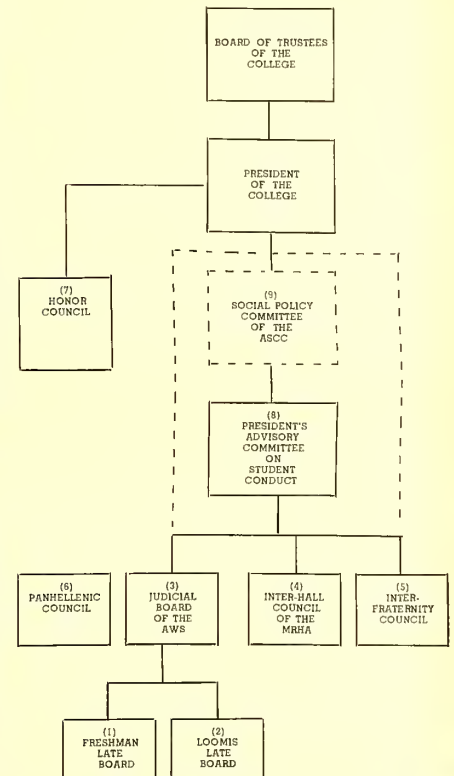

Mr. Abrahamson will speak about race relations in Africa and the possibility for peaceful transition to racial equality. There will be a question period following the lecture.

There will be a dinner session with Mr. Abrahamson before the meeting and anyone interested please contact Nan Burroughs, ext. 393, Loomis Hall, before November 16th.

Cauvel, Reinitz to Give Cap and Gown Lectures

Cap and Gown is sponsoring a series of two informal lectures which will be open to all Colorado College women, dealing with information about graduate study. The first of these lectures will be presented by Dr. Jane Cauvel on November 21 at 4:30 p.m. in the ASCC room and will deal with questions such as why women should go to graduate school and the problems encountered in undertaking graduate school studies.

The second lecture will be given by Dr. Reinitz on December 5 at 4:30 p.m. in the ASCC room and will inform women students of the mechanics of applying to graduate schools, the nature of the various scholarships and the deadlines for applications. Dr. Cauvel and Dr. Reinitz will welcome all questions during these informal lectures, as their object is to help the women of Colorado College decide upon the pro's and con's of graduate school study.

Christian Scientist Visits Tuesday

Mr. Paul Stark Seeley will be on the Colorado College campus Thursday, November 21, and will speak in the W.E.S. room, Rastall Center, at 7:00 p.m. Lecturing on Christian Science, Mr. Seeley will pose such searching questions as "Where do thoughts come from? Do you make them or do you discover them?" Mr. Seeley says that ideas come from a great intelligent source traditionally called God; that progress is "the discovery and acceptance of already existing intelligent thoughts" and the utilization of their power.

Mr. Seeley is a member of the Christian Science Board of Lectureship and has lectured to audiences throughout the world.

The Plum of Residentialness

By Doug Cowles

Quoth Dean Reid: "The basic philosophy of the residential college is that education extends beyond the classroom, laboratory and library into the residence halls, the dining rooms and the commons."

Oddly enough, it seems to be the "basic philosophy" of every institution of undergraduate learning that education extends beyond classrooms and laboratories. This seems so obvious—conceive, if you can, of an education which would not extend beyond the bounds of institutional buildings—as to have no connection, other than a platitudinous one, to the pros and cons of a "residential college." Also, it is alarming to see the Dean of Men of our college viewing education as penetrating only "into the residence halls, the dining rooms and the commons." Possibly other colleges even, heaven forbid, non-residential ones, have slightly lessen visions. The writer must side with John Dewey and affirm that education is itself life, not, as Dean Reid's article would have us think, an insular flurry of preparation for some mythical future emergence "into the large community." By this very principle of extension, too, if the college is a part of the large community, so is everyone in it, and if this is the case, an explicit (residential) attempt to embargo interaction with "the large community" is a blatant contradiction.

The administration's pre-emptive to the idea of a strictly residential college involves another contradiction. The whole spirit of the liberal arts and science is supposedly one of intelligent inquiry, the answers or perspectives supplied by which then being applied to actions undertaken. But to a large part of us, living here now as students, it is obvious that something quite different from intelligent inquiry into the best means for attaining educational goals has led the administration to embrace Operation Residential.

For instance, what does this sentence of Dean Reid's mean? "Colorado College is not seeking to mold its students into a single pattern or to develop 'togetherness,' but it does seek to promote a community spirit and institutional pride." Togetherness in its deepest sense is today desperately rare, and people cannot share love or hate or even Cokes or green stamps, to say nothing of ideas, if they don't have togetherness. Does the administration propose to substitute community spirit and institutional pride for togetherness? It would seem that way; the words are there. And community spirit and institutional pride seem to be, in essence, single patterns. Also, it is difficult to see what community spirit and institutional pride have to do with the exchange of ideas, which, as anyone who has experienced such an exchange knows, is as immediate and personal a thing as education itself. Finally, in connection with this sentence, even if it were meaningful to a critical examiner, how would the reaching of its ends be facilitated by moving everyone into even the cleanest of dorms? This is our main point: Why an immutably residential college?

It is answered: "The college believes this can best be accomplished . . ." We don't quite know what college is referred to, but the administration at any rate gives us the reply in terms of "we believe," and the article from which I am quoting is entitled "Reid's Views on Residential College." When millions of dollars and many generations of students will be affected by the consequences of this residential strategy, it might be wise to turn "belief" and "view" into theory and to examine it as such; and the administration, in refusing to do this, cannot help but make one think that the evolution toward "residential college" is being forwarded because it sounds pretty in catalogues, and possibly prettier sounds receive prettier endowments. But to what sort of school will the donors be contributing? This should be examined before the change is made. Again, the administration seems to be taking a platitudinous approach—an approach that an institution which wishes to be truly a center of learning should avoid above all else.

Discussing Operation Residential any further suddenly seems like unnecessary work: after all, it won't affect any of us who are here now; why bother? Especially when CC is already 80% residential, and especially when nobody makes us come to this college? One of the administration's stock replies to queries about residentialness is that nobody makes us come to this college. But this seems to be, like the classic janitorism "I don't make the rules, I just work here," an evasion of the questions that are being asked, a slightly belittling refusal to admit other perspectives, and to ask questions of their own policy, namely: What will be accomplished by secluding the 20% into campus housing? Does this have any bearing on these educational goals? Does the privacy afforded by off-campus housing detract from or add to the achieving of these goals?

Again we are confronted by meaninglessness: "... opportunities for group recreational activities, for social development and for individual spiritual expression. The sharing of experiences and the acceptance of responsibilities within the college community serves to prepare the student for the time when he emerges into the large community." What kinds of social

SHOULD AULD ACQUAINTANCE AND JAZZ LIKE THAT

I am now an elderly gentleman, full of years and aches, but my thoughts keep ever turning to my undergraduate days. This is called "arrested development."

But I cannot stop the healing tide of nostalgia that washes over me as I recall those golden campus days, those ivy-covered buildings (actually, at my college, there was only ivy: no bricks), those pulse-tingling lectures on John Dryden and Cotton Mather, the many friends I made, the many deans I bit.

I know some of you are already dreading the day when you graduate and lose touch with all your merry classmates. It is my pleasant task today to assure you that it need not be so; all you have to do is join the Alumni Association and every year you will receive a bright, newsy, chatty bulletin, chock-full of tidings about your old buddies.

Oh, what a red-letter day it is at my house, the day the Alumni Bulletin arrives! I cancel all my engagements, take the phone off the hook, dismiss my resident osteopath, put the ocheat aside, and settle down for an evening of pure pleasure with the Bulletin and (need I add?) a good supply of Marlboro Cigarettes.

Whenever I am having fun, a Marlboro makes the fun even more fun. That filter, that flavor, that yielding soft pack, that firm Flip Top box, never fails to heighten my pleasure whether I am playing Double Canfield or watching the radio or knitting an afghan or enjoying any other diverting pursuit you might name—except, of course, spear fishing. But then, how much spear fishing does one do in Clovis, New Mexico, where I live?

But I digress. Let us return to my Alumni Bulletin and the fascinating news about my old friends and classmates. I quote from the current issue:

"Well, fellow alumni, it certainly has been a wing-dinger of a year for us old grads! Remember Mildred Cheddar and Harry Camembert, those crazy kids who always held hands in Econ 10? Well, they're married now and living in Clovis, New Mexico, where Harry rents spear-fishing equipment, and Mildred has just given birth to a lovely 28-pound daughter, her second in four months. Nice going, Mildred and Harry!

"Remember Jethro Brie, the man we voted most likely to succeed? Well, old Jethro is still gathering laurels! Last week he was voted 'Motorman of the Year' by his fellow workers in the Duluth streetcar system. 'I owe it all to my brakeman,' said Jethro in a characteristically modest acceptance speech. Same old Jethro!

"Probably the most glamorous time had by any of us old alumni was had by Francis Macomber last year. He went on a big game hunting safari all the way to Africa! We received many interesting post cards from Francis until he was, alas, accidentally shot and killed by his wife and white hunter. Tough luck, Francis!

"Wilametta 'Deadeye' Macomber, widow of the late beloved Francis Macomber, was married yesterday to Fred 'Sureshot' Sigafos, white hunter, in a simple double-ring ceremony in Nairobi. Many happy returns, Wilametta and Fred!

"Well, alumni, that just about wraps it up for this year. Buy bonds!"

 GREEK NEWS ***

Alpha Phi

Donna Story, alias Dean Moon, was terrorized for a day last Friday by a student populace with unexpected and preemptory success to the Dean's office.

On Thursday, November 14, the Alpha Phi will challenge the Gamma Phi and the Thetas in a relay ball. Let's go, girls!!

Delta Gamma

Our sneaky Executive Council pulled one last Monday that was so sneaky it took us over an hour to find them. But we all say thanks for giving us a chance to relieve our post-weekend pressures.

Special recognition has been given to Debbie West for the work which she is continually doing in keeping our house in order. As House Chairman, Debbie is responsible for so many of the things in our house that we love so much. And beyond this, her work on the upcoming was tops. The "Rose Award" was first given two years ago and Debbie is our fourth recipient. Congratulations.

Gamma Phi Beta

Excitement ran high in the Gamma Phi house Monday night when we finally saw the first plans of our new lodge-to-be. Barring any rare and unforeseen tragedies, we hope to have a house warming party early this Spring. Keep your eyes peeled on the 1118 Wood Avenue spot for the first signs of digging.

"A candle a week . . ." Sue Wisendanger kept our "Ten for Ten" going strong with the announcement of her engagement to Gary Gannon, USAFA. It looks like a June wedding is being planned.

Last Monday, November 11, marked our 89th year as a national sorority. Saturday we will join our alumni in recognition of this event with a luncheon at the Colorado Springs Country Club.

Kappa Alpha Theta

We wish to congratulate Nancy Bowers, Connie Clay, and the Kappa Sig "Old Crusties" for their outstanding performance at the Variety Show. The Thetas are anticipating future social activities with the Kappa Sig, but until such time that they can accept an invitation, we invite them to just come to the Theta House—"six by six".

On a more serious "note," opera was the cultural topic at our meeting last Monday. Our president, Nan Burroughs, outlined the development of opera, supplementing her discussion by playing recorded selections from some major operas. Music seems to be the emphasis this month, for Dr. Albert Seay of the CC Music Department will be our guest at our Scholarship Dessert next Monday.

Beta Theta Pi
Monday night elections were held for the major offices of the Gamma Delta chapter of Beta Theta Pi. The following brothers were sworn in: Greg Wingate, president; Bill Mrachek, vice president; Pete Booth, secretary; Bud Wilson, treasurer; Andy Jovanovich, social chairman; Harry Intemann, pledge trainer; and Rod Miner, house manager.

Congratulations to these new officers. Also congratulations to Rich Nichols, our former president, who has done an outstanding job in serving the chapter.

The Betas have mustered from their fat treasury the trifling sum of one hundred dollars, and no sense, as a pledge to Caroline Greyke's "Real Appeal" for the renovation of the Shove Chapel bells. The brothers miss the golden tones that once cheerfully, but gently, stirred them from their slumber each bonny morn.

Kappa Sigma

The Kappa Sig's were honored Monday night to have Dr. Robert Stabler for dinner. After dinner he gave a very informative and entertaining talk on the physical, social, and moral concepts of birth control. The week before, Prof. Lelong joined us in a discussion of the economy 20 years from now. We extend our thanks to both guests.

The Kappa Sig's will hold a small memorial service Sunday to commemorate Panelli Daily's race against death around the Eternity quad, one year ago today.

Belated congratulations to beloved Farrell (Chief) Howell upon his pinning to Karen Kieler.

Good luck to the Tigers and we hope that all students will join us at the football game at Mines.

Sigma Chi

The results of house elections were Wally Schultz, consul; Bob James, pro-consul; and Page Whyte, annotator. We congratulate the brothers on their new positions. Also a belated welcome to our new pledge Brit White.

Last week was highlighted by the disaster of a successful pledge sneak masterminded by an old sneak veteran, Bob Ward. The actives congratulate the pledges on their success. We also thank them for the case of constancy left behind during one hasty retreat.

The Sig's are all proud of Wessel, who recently won interfraternity tennis. Also best of luck to Krusher and the mean sniff in the weekend drags.

servicing and consumption of it on campus would interfere with our chances of doing a good job educationally . . . Obviously if you permit liquor in your halls, then you are asking for the problem of minors receiving liquor from students who are old enough to drink.

Q: You think, then, that this is too great a danger?

Reid: Well, apparently we have. Down through the years we've subscribed to this idea. We haven't retreated from it, and we don't propose to.

Q: Is it possible that the college is moving in the direction of many similar institutions in disbanding fraternities and replacing them with informal social units, facilitated by the proposed unit construction of the new men's dorm?

Reid: It is not our intention to build a group of individual houses, because it is not economically feasible. The first plan we considered was not necessarily developed into units. They were eight houses or units but they were not closely connected because they all had outside entrances.

Q: Has this plan been rejected?

Reid: Yes, it has been rejected—not the idea of privacy and suites, but we didn't like the way it was set up.

Q: Over the next five years would you say that fraternities are going to maintain their present status on this campus?

Reid: I'm sure that we wouldn't have gone into a government loan and borrowed $300,000 to construct three new fraternity houses, if this had not been the college's intention.

Although in content the interview was not all I had hoped for, Mr. Reid indicated that such discussion with any member of the student body is welcomed and encouraged. "Any time any student wants the reasoning behind certain things which the college has done."

U. S. Checks, Balances System Threatened by Weakening Court

By Alex Primm

Every student has been told thousands of times that one of the most unique and important features of American government is the system of checks and balances. But the last two years have been witness to the growth of a small group of hard-core conservatives, led mainly by Southern states-rights segregationists, who would emasculate the Supreme Court and thereby destroy the delicate system of checks and balances that is the basis of American government.

Unlike the majority of ultra-right schemes, the drive to destroy the Supreme Court came suddenly and with little public notice. While conservatives have generally been against the Supreme Court and have been calling for the impeachment of Chief Justice Earl Warren since 1952, the drive to amend the Constitution in such a way as to weaken the court is relatively recent.

The movement first achieved public notice at a December, 1962, meeting of the General Assembly of the States, part of a highly respected Council of State Governments, when the representatives of 48 states approved three major amendments to the United States Constitution. These proposed amendments were generally directed against the federal government.

The first of the three proposed amendments would remove all constitutional restrictions on how the states apportion their legislatures and bar Federal courts from dealing with the problem, as they now do under a 1962 Supreme Court decision.

The second amendment would allow the state legislatures themselves to amend the Constitution. At the present time, only Congress or a national convention can amend the Constitution.

The most controversial of the three proposed amendments is the third, which would establish a "Court of the Union," with authority to review all Supreme Court decisions relating to the states rights problem. Thus the Court of the Union, made up of the Chief Justices of the 50 states, would be a higher authority than the Supreme Court.

Since the meeting of the Council of State Governments, thirteen state legislatures have approved the apportionment amendment, eleven states have voted in favor of the change in the constitutional amendment process, and three have approved the Court of the Union proposal.

Although liberal opposition has slowed down the push to amend the Constitution, the conservative groups behind the amendment proposals have not given up the hope of changing the Constitution.

Similar to the backers of the proposed "Liberty Amendment," the conservatives behind these three amendments are attempting to petition Congress to call a constitutional convention on the proposals. Two-thirds of the state legislatures, 34, would be needed to require Congress to call the Convention.

While it is not known what specific groups are behind the amendments, the majority of major conservative organizations highly approve of the move. It seems obvious though, that racial segregationists, rural representatives, and religious groups are in favor of the amendments.

One has only to travel through the South and see the billboard calling for the impeachment of Chief Justice Warren to realize that the segregationists are still bitter at the 1954 school integration decision. Believing that the federal government should not interfere with state discrimination against urban voters in reapportionment matters, rural representatives in many state legislatures approve of the amendment. Certain religious groups are bitter about the recent decisions by the Supreme Court deciding that states cannot require school children to recite prayers. Among these three groups though, the segregationists are the most hostile and lead the movement to establish a "Court of the Union."

The historian Henry Steele Commager recently pointed out that "What we are witnessing in these amendments is not merely a recrudescence of states' rights. It is an expression of something deeper—a philosophy of separatism and no-government. Whereas the Constitution was designed to form a more perfect Union, this is an effort to form a much less perfect Union. It is a philosophy in fact, if not in concept, of constitutional anarchy."

As Commager points out, the states have had more than enough chance to correct their own problems, such as civil rights or reapportionment. Since they have made any effort to solve these problems, the Federal government has been required to intervene. It seems as if the states themselves, and not the Supreme Court, will be responsible for their own loss of power in the management of the affairs of the nation.

College Intellectual Objectively Portrayed

By Jim Warden

In this article, I will try to focus attention on various campus characters who have distinguished themselves by deviations from that mythical figure, the normal student. Some of these deviations are to the good and some are not, but all have their humorous side. It is this side that I will try to develop. No particular individuals were portraits for this characterization. However, if the reader fits, wear it!

The figure we will consider this week is known variously as the egghhead, the intellectual, or the highbrow. For our purpose he will henceforth be called the Intellectual.

The Intellectual here at CC has several distinguishing characteristics which we will consider. The first of these, naturally enough, is his mind. This mind is sometimes molded by the conventional method of attending classes, but more often by other means. The most important of these I will term the Search for Truth. To conduct this Search, the Intellectual makes a foray into the library where he fishes for days, maintained only by his books and a supply of cheese sandwiches. He emerges after a while looking somewhat like Jesus. He is now calm and tranquil. He has had a vision of Truth and plenty, which might cause his English prof to re-evaluate him, if he can communicate it. The problem is that he will probably forget the vision by the time the next class meets.

Another mark of the Intellectual is his appearance. He seldom bathes and his hair is usually unkept. He is never seen without a coat, mismatched slacks, and a shirt open at the neck. He wears this attire to distinguish himself from the Lowbrow.

The coat is a badge of honor for the Intellectual. It shows the wearer to be above the common herd and this is how the Intellectual views himself. In addition, the average coed tends to view the coat-wearing male as something special—a gentleman, and as such, above the base desires they abhor in other males. The Intellectual sometimes uses this fact to his own personal advantage. But that's another story.

Another way to recognize the Intellectual is by his associations. He champions the current cause against convention, be it pacifism, Negro rights, or whatever. His interest is the protest—not what he is protesting. Any cause will serve his purpose equally well.

The Intellectual is usually connected with any and all literary effort on campus. He doesn't do this for his own sake, but because he wishes to help his fellow students. He constantly tries to help them rise from their low level of thought to something higher. Not to his own level, of course, (for this is just not possible for the masses) but to some point where they can at least participate in egghhead worship with understanding.

Lastly, the intellectual is a complete non-conformist. For proof, re-read this article.

Worner to Address Women's Ed. Society

Colorado College President Lloyd E. Worner will discuss "Current Developments on the Colorado College Campus" at the annual meeting of the Woman's Educational Society Saturday, Nov. 16.

Besides members of the society, also invited to attend the annual luncheon are the nine women students at Colorado College recently awarded scholarships by the Woman's Educational Society.

They are Sylvia Wilhelm, Constance Cooper, Shirley Kling, Patricia Nixon, Eloyee McGaughey, Rickie Robbins, Joanne Ramstad, Kristin Williamson and Nancy Sanders.

Tigers Down Doane, 15-8 For 4-5 Season Record

The CC Tigers won their fourth game in nine starts last Saturday, downing the Doane Bengals 15-8 in Washburn Field.

The game started with CC kicking off and Doane receiving the ball to go on a short march. Doane immediately established that they could trap some unwary Tiger linemen at will. The Tigers finally got the ball and established that they could run at will, but they found that a bit hard when being penalized for all sorts of fouls—fifteen yards at a clip. After an exchange or two, CC took charge and sent converted Quarterback Mike "Roll-out" Denson around left end or a halfback for 52 yards. Bob Stapp then took the ball the final 16 yards for 6 points. Steve Sabol's conversion attempt met "Sudden Death" when it missed the crossbeams.

The Tigers kicked off, and stopped the men from Crete relatively quickly. CC took over and sent Steve Sabol on a 52 yard "trot" only to be called back on a clipping penalty. The Tigers surrendered the ball, and this time Doane took advantage of its trapping game to go the way for 6 points, scored by Terry Discio, the Doane quarterback. Discio then passed to Jack Hood for 2 extra points and the lead at the end of the second quarter.

The second half started off on a dull note with the two teams in a stalemate until the fourth quarter. Then Ed DeGeorge recovered a Doane fumble at midfield and Warner Reeser rushed 34 yards to Mike Mestek on a third down situation to put the ball on the Doane 10. Reeser then snuck for 4 yards and Mestek went the final six for the score. Welch attempted a pass for two points on the conversion, but this failed.

Doane took over temporarily. They were stopped at midfield and CC again drove to the Doane 10. With time running out, and a 4th down and 8 situation, "Sudden Death" Sahol came in and put the game on ice with an 18 yard field goal.

After the game, Coach Al Papik said he felt that CC's running game made the victory. Doane had been expecting a passing offense in view of the Tigers' last two games.

The CC victory gives the Tigers a chance for an even record if they win against the Miners tomorrow.

Soccer Team Defeats DU

By defeating DU 2-1 on Saturday, the Tiger Soccer Team showed that it had found its place as a major varsity sport at CC. Though the season on the whole has been disappointing, this victory has proven that a team which has been disorganized and poorly conditioned in the past can overcome these disadvantages by hard work.

It is interesting to note that our two goals were scored by former second-stringers, Pete Davis and Tom Ballard.

CC to Tackle Miners

There are two age-old November traditions in the state of Colorado. One, Thanksgiving and two, the CC-Mines football game. Dating back nearly to the days when the first perspiring Pilgrim played and picnicked on the pastoral pastures of Plymouth, the CC-Mines grid game is the oldest collegiate rivalry west of the Mississippi. Since the initial encounter in 1889 no team has gained a marked advantage, CC winning 34 times, Mines winning 29, with 5 draws.

In recent years the greedy Miners, in total inaccordance with the love-thy-neighbor holiday season, have won 4 out of the last 5 encounters. CC's last victory over Mines was a 22-6 Thanksgiving thrashing delivered in the fall of '59. Last year the oreediggers from Golden secured an early lead, claimed squatter's rights, and won 7-0.

This year the Goldenites boast a 5-3 record while the Tigers are 4-5. In last week's games, CC notched its fourth victory of the season dumping Doane College 15-8; but Adams State caved in on the Miners by the toll of 30-7.

CC Bowlers Split With Wyoming

Although the CC bowlers won two out of three games here Sunday afternoon, November 10, in the Rastall Lanes against the University of Wyoming, the best they could do was to split in the four-point match, 2-2. (The four-point system allots one point per game and one point for total pin-fall in a three game series.) They were last in the total pin count, 2437-2430, only seven pins, but these seven loomed very large in the eyes of the Bengal Bowlers.

Team captain, Bill Pelz, was high for CC with a 531 series. Spills and cherries harassed both teams with sub-par scores resulting. CC's high man last week, Bill Evans, was a perfect example of this. Bill was hampered in the second game by five splits and two cherries.

The Wyoming team was the hottest squad in the initial roll-off last week in Denver, and the CC bowlers, who had an 0-4 record last week, had to pick themselves off the floor to register the outcoming verdict, which should have been victory.

This week, Saturday, November 16, the Bengal Bowlers travel to Colorado Mines in Golden and then to Pueblo on Sunday, November 17, to bowl Southern Colorado State. Below are this week's scores by games:

Colorado College: 850, 690, 890, total, 2430.
University of Wyoming: 783, 800, 854, total 2437.

Notice!

The first of three oral Sabin polio vaccines will be given between 12 noon and 3 p.m. Sunday, November 17, at Cossett Hall. This vaccine supersedes the old Salk shots and is taken by mouth on a sugar cube. No boosters are required. All students (who have not had the oral vaccine) should be there. Only Type 1 will be given this Sunday—Type 2 and 3 later. A voluntary contribution of 25 cents per vaccine will be requested.

In Fritz Brennecke, now in his eighteenth year as head football mentor, Colorado School of Mines possesses a coach who is renowned for his psychological approach to the game. How to cope with Freudian Fritz and his Frightful Freaks is a problem which seems to weigh heavy on many minds from the new Tutt library to the moldy old backrooms of Cossett Gymnasium.

Grey Cory, the RMC's leading passer, heads the oreidigger attack. He has completed 35 out of 72 passes for 7 TD's and a sparkling 49% passing average. In order to neutralize Cory's passing threat, CC coach Jerry Carle must reach deep down into the holiday horn of plenty and pull out a hand-charging defensive line. Add to it a consistent offensive ground attack sprinkled with some timely passes as garnishings and there will be no Tiger meat on this year's Miner menu.

INTRAMURAL S

This Thursday, the semi-finals of the Slocum Football League will be played. Third South, the winner of the American League, will play Second South, the runner-up in the National League. The other two will present a problem, as First West, Third South, and the Faculty are tied for second place in the American League. However, the eventual winner of this three-way game will play Loveland House, who finished up first in the National League.

The Kappa Sigs won the Fraternity League with a 5-0 record but the fight for second place was a close one. In that game, the Sigma Chis played the Zetas and the first half The Zetas won the one, 7-0, but lost to the Phi Gams in the second half, 13-0, in a game which was forced into overtime.

Initiating in this issue, and continuing throughout the year, will be a space devoted to the intramural player of the week. The person, chosen by the Intramural Director, will be that student who has contributed the most to his fraternity or wing in the past week's play.

This week's choice is Mike Kief of Sigma Chi. Mike was the low medalist in golf, carrying scores of 72-79, to win the golf title. He has won the single champion victory over Rolf Hessler of the Phi Gams. He is also in the finals of the doubles tournament. As a football player, he was a stand-out for the Sigma Chis and enabled them to get into the semi-finals of the Fraternity League.

Sports Desk

Over the years, the TIGER Editorial staff has advocated various athletic policies, ranging from the incorporation of a subsidized Canadian Hockey team to the construction of a track garden in Washburn Stadium where the student body might practice yoga between philosophical discussions. From within the Doric pillars of Cossitt Hall the college has been besieged by the cry "strong bodies and strong minds" for so long that those of us who are not athletic cringe at the thought of setting foot outside. But despite these various rumblings, the college athletic policy is not a totally incoherent one, and is fully supported by the editors.

The present goal of the college is to create an athletic policy designed to allow the greatest contribution on the part of the students. To this end, we have withdrawn from the Rocky Mountain Faculty Athletic Conference, reorganized the intramural program, and reorganized our hockey program towards American boys, rather than Canadians.

However, more has to be done if we are to maintain the present policy. Where support can be found, new sports should be organized to allow a greater range of student participation. Lacrosse, now beset by many obstacles, should be given at least nominal support by the administration as they have barely a fighting chance at the moment.

Also there must be a change of attitude within the student body. Those who are not actively engaged in athletics must put an end to name-calling and holding themselves aloof from athletics. A more positive attitude has to be taken in a realization that the athletic policy of the college is aimed at their participation. If they do not wish to do so, then silence would be their best alternative, for name-calling is indicative not of their superiority but of their unwillingness to make any contribution to themselves and to the school.

Similarly, the members of various squads will have to realize that they are no longer a gifted elite paid to perform before large stadiums. They also are members of the student body, and as such must also make more of an effort to blend in with the entire community.

In short, we have to realize that athletics at CC are designed to aid the student body in becoming a more unified whole. It is an area in which we can all contribute, and as such holds a position of equal but not magnified importance with the academic or social realms, in the development of the individual student at CC.—Callaway

Rifle Team Posts Loss

The Colorado College Rifle Team best its opening match of the season 1350-1393 to a more experienced team from Mines in Golden on November 9.

Only three veterans are back in the CC lineup (Bill Johnson, Jim Blackmer, and Bill Newcomb), and only one new member (Bob Strieby) is experienced. All other members are freshmen and sophomores.

Jim Blackmer (co-captain) and Bill Johnson (captain) tied for CC's high score with a 276 and Bob Strieby shot below his par with a 271. Lyman Hunter, in his first year of shooting, fired an exceptionally high 265, and Dan Holmes, a freshman and a new shooter, blasted a fine 262.

CC's score of 1350 is low for intercollegiate shooting, but it ties the second highest CC score in the past two years. The first score of last year was 1261, and CC did not reach 1350 until March of last season. Prospects for this year's team look unusually good.

In the first of five postal matches

(one per week for the next five weeks in competition with all other teams in the XVI Army Corps), CC fired 1365 (six points below the high for the past three years). Johnson fired a good 281, Blackmer placed second with a 277, Lyman Hunter placed a close third with 274, Bob Strieby fired 268, and Dan Holmes walked away with a 265. Honors were taken by Blackmer in prone with 100-6X, Johnson in kneeling with a 97 (one of the two best scores in the conference), and Blackmer in standing with 86.

Outlook Good For Basketball

With the addition of a large amount of enthusiasm into the ranks, Coach Eastlack and his varsity basketball aggregation are eagerly looking forward to a fine 1963-64 season. With but one member from last year's starting five gone, the CC cagers are a short but hustling group that look forward to avenging many of their numerous close losses. Of the team's 23 losses last year, 10 were by 8 or less points, seven of these by four points or less. Rarely out-classed and never out-hustled, CC's cry of "wait 'till next year" seems to be most appropriate.

Although the Tigers do not have outstanding height, they will, never the less, have a fine forward line that should average near 6'3" and 200 pounds: Steve Sabol at 6'3" and 215 pounds; Bob Heiny, a 6'3", 195 pound forward; Steve Hildreth, a 6'2", 200 pound forward; and Ed Loosli, 6'2", 200 pound forward. With back court men Bill Peiz, Pete Susemühl, Dave Herrington, Carl Cabbiness, and Bob Baker backing up the front line, a total of six lettermen from last year's squad have returned. Because of this depth, plus the addition of Gary Bouton, a transfer student from Claremont to help tip front, the Tigers figure to be in contention throughout the season for the Rocky Mountain Athletic Conference laurels. It would be quite appropriate, in fact, to tag upon this squad the "dark horse" role of the conference. With the teamwork, balanced scoring, and hustle for which the CC cagers are known, plus the added rebounding strength, the squad is quite enthusiastic in expecting a fine season of basketball.

Scholarship Offered By Zonta International

The 26th annual Earhart Scholarships have been announced by Zonta International for the 1964 academic year. The $2,500 grants, offered to qualified women for advanced study in aeronautical sciences, were established by Zonta, an executive women's service organization, as a memorial to Amelia Earhart. Funds for the annual grants are provided jointly by Zonta's approximately 475 clubs in 21 countries. A bachelor's degree in a science qualifying a candidate for graduate work in aeronautical science is the basic requirement for a scholarship, plus evidence of exceptional ability and personal character. The award may be used in any college chosen by the candidate and approved by Zonta's scholarship committee. Candidates, or instructors wishing to recommend students, can obtain further information about the Amelia Earhart scholarship grants from Zonta's headquarters office, 59 East Van Buren Street, Chicago 5, Illinois. Applications must be filed by February 1, 1964.

● Residentialness

development and individual spiritual expression (!?) do we see in Slocum? Where is the privacy there that is usually thought of as necessary for spiritual expression? Do we actually want spiritual development and social expression instead of, vice versa, or do we want both development and expression to come in both the spiritual and the social realms? How will more dormitories help this? And it is patent that the sharing of experiences and the acceptance of responsibilities anywhere will help to prepare us, if preparation is what we want—that is, paying the rent on an apartment (responsibility) might be just as instructive (preparation) as cleaning one's room for the onslaught of the maid. And being in an off campus apartment, being slightly more in contact with the "large community," might actually be better preparation, if that is all we want, than life in a dormitory.

In conclusion, a mild exercise in logic: given, that the idea of the Brave New Residential College is to disseminate ideas; and given, that the administration has many resoundingly bright ideas, it is only logical that the administration should move into the dormitories along with the students in order to add their own fission to the atomic pile of the Idea Machine, and in order to share in that bountiful social development and in those (builds strong bodies 12 ways) opportunities for group recreational activities.

Outstanding Symposium Is Anticipated

"Judging from the program which has been set up, I think that this year's symposium will be every bit as good as last year's. It has a strong probability of being much better." A brief look at the schedule of events and participants is enough to show that Dr. Fred Sondermann is well justified in making this statement.

In addition to a full slate of lectures and discussions on the military and historical aspects of World War II, his committee has planned a series of meetings on related topics in the fields of music, art, literature, and movies. A somewhat different format will be followed in arranging the sequence of events. Because of the large number of students participating, there will be simultaneous presentations on most days. There will be a choice between two different aspects of the general topic in each case. There are more than twenty-five participants, and there will be more chance for each student to emphasize those aspects which interest him. Luncheons with the participants will be held in Taylor Dining Hall on a first-come first-serve basis.

Participants will include such nationally known figures as Hanson Baldwin, Pulitzer Prize winner for military reporting during the War, Bruno Bettelheim, a psychologist who has studied and written widely on the concentration camps, literary critic Dwight McDonald, and British poet Stephen Spender. The movie program will place emphasis on wartime documentaries, including pre-war German films. Discussion groups will consider problems such as the moral responsibility of the German people, war propaganda, and the war novel.

The week will be full to the point of frustration for many, and promises to be not only interesting, but very worthwhile for everyone attending.

Low Turnout for Vaccine

Only half the students of Colorado College took advantage of the E-O Polio Sunday last week, according to Dr. Roger Whitney, who dispensed the sugar cube serum on the campus.

The El Paso County Medical Society noted with pleasure that a large portion of the population in the over-forty age bracket were vaccinated but expressed surprise at the small turnout among college people, the age group which is stricken most often with the disease.

Students who missed the opportunity last week have one more chance to take the Type One oral vaccine. A "mop-up" program will take place next Sunday from 11:30 a.m. until 4:30 p.m. at the Palmer High School gymnasium.

The Sabin vaccine completely eliminates the need for future polio shots or boosters. This vaccine taken by mouth gives permanent, perhaps lifelong, immunity.

DR. J. COERT RYLAARSDAM, professor of the Old Testament at the University of Chicago Theological Seminary, speaking in the WES room at Rastall Center. Dr. Rylaarsdam gave a series of three lectures.

Student Views Sought in Freshman Questionnaire

In order to discover how the Slocum Hall resident feels toward the many questions being asked on campus pertaining to CC as a residential college, and in an attempt to seek out his attitudes toward the housing situation for male students, the following questionnaire has been drafted. Ray Jones, freshman class commissioner, presented the questionnaire to the Men's Residence Halls Association on Monday evening, with the hope that it would be distributed to all residents of Slocum.

It is our feeling that other members of the student body may have opinions to express which would help Mr. Jones in determining of composite student opinion to be presented before the ASCC.

Dr. Rylaarsdam Surveys Religions of Middle East

By Judy Adams

On Monday and Tuesday of this week Dr. J. Coert Rylaarsdam delivered lectures on "Islam, Judaism, and Modern Nationalism," and "The Religious Legacy of the Middle East." He also gave the sermon entitled "The Earth Is the Lord's" on Sunday in Shove Chapel.

In the Monday lecture, Dr. Rylaarsdam discussed the relationship between nationalism and religion in the Middle East and the particular difficulties this relationship has created.

He began by stating that nationalism is a product of the Christian or Western world which has only recently spread to the Jewish and Moslem Middle East. In the West, national government is no longer identified with one theological doctrine, the state is neutral with respect to religion. This non-theological nationalism has flourished in the West, but it encounters difficulties, partially because of religious differences between East and West, when it enters the Middle East.

Dr. Rylaarsdam here turned to a comparison of the Christian, Jewish, and Moslem faiths in order to explain the religious difficulties impeding the progress of nationalism in the Middle East.

In Islam, Christianity, and Judaism, God or Allah is vitally concerned with time, space, and matter, and he reveals himself in, through, and by means of history. Originally in all three religions the power of the state was believed to be an expression of the power of the God it represented. The existence and authority of the state were identified with the existence and authority of God.

However, Christians, because of Christ's crucifixion no longer make this identification. Because of the death of the elect one, Christ, Christians developed the belief that the authority of God does not depend upon the physical manifestation of his existence on earth. Resulting from this belief was separation of Church and state and, ultimately, modern non-theocratic nationalism. Only those nations whose predominant religion permits non-theocratic government are capable of absorbing modern nationalism because of the non-theocratic nature of this nationalism.

Like the Christians, the Jews, beginning with the Babylonian Captivity of 586 B.C., learned that the elect one, in this case the nation of Israel, could be weak and dispersed without reflecting on the authority and universality of God. The Jew today can accept his secular national government because he has accepted the discontinuity between the authority of God and the concrete existence of God on earth.

Unlike Christianity, Islam has never experienced a 586 B.C. or a crucifixion—the authority of God is yet equated with the authority of the state. Therefore, the Moslem citizen of one of the Western-style governments superimposed on Moslem soil cannot be national-

Glee Club to Perform For Worner's Dinner

The Colorado College Glee Club has been rehearsing for the past three weeks in preparation for its engagements this week. The Glee Club has been asked to sing Thursday night for President Worner's dinner, and will sing the numbers presented in the Variety Show in addition to two special surprise numbers.

Dave Friend, spokesman for the group, anticipates several important engagements before Christmas, both on and off campus, and is beginning work on special Christmas arrangements for presentation before Christmas vacation. The director of the Club, Dwight Kramer, has brought forth the possibility of singing in the various hospitals in the Colorado Springs area and Dwight added: "This would bring the Club great satisfaction, and I'm sure the patients in the hospitals at Christmas time will appreciate our efforts."

The group is composed of sixteen regular members, and membership is still open to 25 members. Singers or prospective singers are urged to contact either Dave Friend or Dwight Kramer to gain membership into the Glee Club. Both can be reached at Ext. 257. Thursday, the 18th of this month, the Colorado College Glee Club will sing at Wasson High School, being presented along with other selected acts taken from the Variety Show held earlier this month.

Political Reviews Rhodesian Issues

By Solomon Nkwane

Southern Rhodesia which, according to UNESCO, is probably "the most advanced country in Africa," has social and racial problems the solution of which would need patience and sympathetic understanding by people within and outside the country. This view was expressed by Mr. A. E. Abrahamson of Southern Rhodesia in a speech on Tuesday evening, November 19, at the Olin Lecture Hall.

Mr. Abrahamson, who has been in the U.S. for the last six weeks as the U.S. State Department Leadership Programme, is presently the deputy leader of the Rhodesia National Party, which is the official opposition in the Southern Rhodesia Parliament. He has been in the government since 1953, and until December 1962, has served alternately as Minister of the Treasury, and Minister of Labor and Social Welfare.

After analyzing the economic and political history of the country, with special mention of the "rich and diversified economy" of which Virginia Tobacco, maize, and minerals constitute the main exports, and the fact that Southern Rhodesia has been self-governing since 1923, he went on, "on the field of racial relations and equality, we do realize that we have made mistakes."

He complained about the Land Apportionment Act, which like many things had "noble intentions, but has been turned into a basis for segregation." However, he assured the audience that much has been done to break down the bad effects of the L.A.A. (an act which divided the land in Southern Rhodesia between black and white.)

Mr. Abrahamson also noted that there are "very few places in the world which exemplify multi-racialism" and so, he suggested, the problem is not only a local problem, but world-wide.

The present governing party in Southern Rhodesia is the Rhodesia Front under the premiership of Mr. Winston Field. The present constitution provides for 65 M.P.'s (15 of which are Africans—Negroes). The governing party is extreme right and more akin to the South African type of government. It advocates white supremacy and independence now.

Britain has indicated that she will consider independence for Southern Rhodesia if she can be assured that there will be:

- 1) No discrimination against anyone.
- 2) More nearly universal suffrage.

By Tracer Sunley

The latest issues of the Tiger have directed consideration to the question of what is implied in the meaning of acquiring an education at a small, residential, liberal arts college. Many articles have addressed themselves to such subjects as social restrictions, dorm regulations and the like; but it is my contention that a very important facet, which does demand regulation, is being overlooked, and that is the need for academic counseling and guidance.

As incoming freshmen every student supposedly has the potential for completing a successful four years of college. But this is not always the case—a consistent A student in his school may never see another A in his four years at college; a student on scholarship may find that he has lost his scholarship after a discouraging first year, and a potential B student may soon find himself apply to a state university after flunking out. Of course the student must shoulder the major part of the responsibility for such results, but what exactly does the school do in such cases? Nothing. A student loses a scholarship, but is there ever an inquiry or conference during the school year from the faculty or administration to try and discover why the student is doing poorly? No. A cursory note is mailed during the summer informing the student that the scholarship has been revoked. Regret is expressed over the apparent failure of the student. Another case might be the C student who potentially could be making B's but who has never established rapport with a professor through whom he might find the meaning and inspiration to aspire for academic excellence. That a small college affords close relationships between faculty and students is for the most part a myth here at Colorado College.

Another area in which the lack of guidance has had appalling effects is in the set-up of faculty advisors. A student may find himself with an advisor whose field is entirely unrelated to his area of interest, or worse yet a student who still does not know what he might best major in finds himself with an advisor who is totally disinterested in spending the time to help a student to find a major field of interest. Consequently one finds himself at the end of his sophomore year closing his eyes and blindly declaring a major, and the choice has often led to unhappy results. A Boettcher scholar finds herself a math major, simply because another major was never considered once she stated in her freshman year that this was her interest. (Her lowest grades have since always been in this area.) A sociology major wonders how she ever became one when her major interest was in art history. And on the examples go. This lack of guidance has sometimes led to ridiculous and tragic extremes. A senior walks into his advisor's office of two years and is first asked: "Are you still a history major?" and then, "What year are you?" Another senior pre-registering for his last semester is told that he will have to take 2 hours. Why did he not have his hours planned more carefully before this? Well, the professor just never thought to add them up. Or there is the girl who found that a better working relationship with her counselor might be worked out if she were given another professor. She went to the head of the department and was informed that it would be best to stick with her present advisor, so that there would be no upset within intra-departmental relations!

Of course the student cannot expect, and I am sure does not wish, to be hand-led through four years of college, but the first two years are crucial. Let's be realistic: not every student comes to college with clearly defined goals, well-formed study habits and an always burning desire to learn. Guidelines and direction are necessary, and not just on a superficial level. A student needs the personal interest and concern of an academican. Of course not every professor is suited for such a role, and many more very simply do not have the time, but this does not excuse the school from recognizing and accepting responsibility for this vital need. As an outgoing senior I plead for a serious re-evaluation of the academic guidance and counseling programs at Colorado College.

Grounds for SCC Demise Revealed in New Research

By Paul Tatter

Early last summer several members of the student body, faculty, and administration were informed by letter of President Benetz's decision to dissolve the Committee on Student Conduct. Acting after consultation with the Deans and President-elect Worner, he said: "We find it necessary to abandon the present constitution of the Student Conduct Committee in favor of a much smaller and more private group. One of the most distressing things of the 1962-63 year was that student conduct cases became something of the order of protagonists in bull ring; it became progressively difficult not to say impossible for the Committee to operate judicially as publicity grew rampant."

It is the purpose of this article to explore the conditions behind this situation in an attempt to clarify the events of this body's frustrating last semester, and to explain as fully as possible the resultant committee as it stands today.

One must recognize immediately the difficulty present in the very nature of the problems handed by such a committee. It is called upon to come to conclusions concerning basically moral questions. Admittedly the state of morals at the present is anything but clear, and because of this, disagreement and some confusion is to be expected of any truly representative organization.

In this respect the theory behind the Student Conduct Committee was sound. The College has a responsibility to the outside to parents, alumni, and the community. It also has a responsibility to itself as an institution with direction, with certain functional goals. Those that have the most clear and direct understanding of the objects of these responsibilities would best represent them, and those are unquestionably the faculty and administration. But the College also has a responsibility to its students. It seems apparent that people who are not presently students cannot on the whole recognize the significance of peculiar social circumstances simply because they are not involved. Students themselves must bring these conditions to the attention of the faculty and administration, just as faculty and administration must bring their experience to the attention of the students in order to achieve as great a mutual understanding as possible. As far as decisions on these matters concern the College as a whole, final authority is best left with the President of the College. He is, after all, in the most advantageous position to consolidate information and opinion from all sources. And with regard to the condition that any organization of this nature will be characterized by dissent, even though it be a small minority, the President is in the best position to take these differing views into consideration.

This seems to have been the thinking when, in 1956, President Benetz established the Committee on Student Conduct with a membership of 3 from the administration, 1 from the faculty, and 5 students. The committee was to serve the President in an advisory capacity. But very quickly the Benetz administration seems to have misunderstood the points of its own conception when it began to work for the expansion of power, especially student power, in this organization. With the help of some pressure from the student body, the membership was eventually changed to two administration, two faculty, and eight student representatives. The committee was also given the power of decision over all cases not including suspension or dismissal from the College, the latter being exercised in the form of a recommendation to the President. However, it then became almost a tradition for the recommendations of the SCC to be accepted by the administration. The appearance of the decision-making capacity of this group was thus extended to all cases. Such an unwarranted assumption was bound to have serious repercussions.

The situation came to a head in the late fall of 1962 when an SCC decision was "reversed by President Benetz." The surprise of this action brought a whole series of difficulties into the open, all of which led to the compounding of confusion during the committee's final semester. This case involved a co-ed who had illegally stayed out of the dorm to spend the night with a man in a motel room. Acting on what it thought to be an extension of its powers, the Committee recommended a probationary second chance. President Benetz could see no reason for this and made the decision for dismissal. He then met with those members of the SCC who had opposed dismissal, asked for a justification of their action, attempted to show

Shrove Chapel

Sunday, Nov. 24 11:00 A.M.

Preacher: The Very Reverend Fr. Benignon

Worship Leader: Professor Kenneth Burton

The Religious Affairs Committee is very pleased to announce the visit of Father Benignon, Priest of the Russian Orthodox Church in Denver. Father Benignon was born in Russia and after the Russian revolution his family moved to Riga, the capital city of Latvia. It was there that he received the beginning of his theological education. He was then brought up to the Maelstrom of the Second World War. After the war he came to this country as a refugee. He is now the senior Priest of the Russian Orthodox Church in Denver. He is also the Dean of the Orthodox Churches in the Rocky Mountain area and a lecturer in Slavic studies at the University of Colorado at Boulder. With this varied and interesting background, Father Benignon's visit should prove to be stimulating one.

He will speak in the Chapel at the 11:00 a.m. Worship Service on Sunday morning. He will also address a Religious Forum at 8 p.m. in the W.E.S. Room. The title of his talk at the evening meeting is "The Orthodox Church in Today's World." Light refreshments will be served at this meeting at cost of $25.

By Alex Primm

With all the publicity the far-right has been getting lately, one wonders if there isn't a left wing in American politics anymore. While the conservatives have been more active than their political counterparts, there is a left wing although the scares of the late Senator Joseph McCarthy, clipping can still be noticed. However, liberal intellectuals, and various students and civil rights groups comprise about all there remains of the once dominant left.

FBI Director J. Edgar Hoover's claim that there is still a massive Communist party recruiting unsuspecting citizens to do its dirty work doesn't seem to hold water. The most Communist party of the Thirties, patronized mostly by intellectuals and Steinbeckian workers, has been replaced by the John Birch Society and Billy James Hargis' "Operation Midnight Ride."

The Daily Worker (re-named The Worker) is still published in New York, but about the only people who read it are State and Justice Department officials. The sorry state of the Communist party in America was depicted in a recent New Yorker cartoon. In a basement covered with stereotype Communist posters, this stereotype Communist opens the monthly cell meeting with a few well chosen words, "Comrades, and undercover men for the FBI..."

But, while the Communists no longer have the attraction they once had to the average student, professor, or worker, there is an underground movement that resembles more a network of spies than a political group. This group seems to be mostly made of professional agents and the fanatics. As Communism no longer has any appeal to the average citizen, it no longer can be thought of as a typical radical American political group.

However, there are several radical student groups on the left worth noting. Among the most important is the National Students Association, which represents over 300 colleges and universities. Acting mainly as a student service organization, the NSA has taken stands on national and international politics, which tend to be radically liberal. In recent conventions, the NSA has praised Castro's edu-national reforms, protested the firing of Communist professors, and criticized U.S. aid to Spain and Portugal, but said nothing about aid to Yugoslavia and Poland.

Recently, 250 delegates of the California Federation of Young Democrats urged that the U.S. recognize East Germany, Cuba, and Communist China, as well as withdraw all aid from the dictatorship of South Viet Nam.

Since their rise to power, conservatives have demanded that Communists be refused the right to speak to students. Perhaps the most liberal college in the United States, Reed, allows all political groups to speak to its students and has entertained Gus Hall, a well known American Communist. It is interesting to note that in a recent survey, 60 per cent of the Reed student body said they would suspend before fighting Communism.

Civil liberties groups, such as the Congress of Racial Equality and the American Civil Liberties Union, have recently come under the attack of ultra-conservatives. While the majority of the members of these groups tend to be liberal in thought, they are not radical in any sense of the word. Interested mainly in the Negro civil rights problem, these groups usually take stands on national and international affairs. However, it is only the most radical conservative that considers the civil rights movement dangerous anyway.

In general, the far left is weak in the United States. Compared with Great Britain, the pacifist movement is non-existent. While college students are normally liberal, a greater number than ever before are joining conservative organizations. Once powerful is now the Depression, the far left is now centered around various campus groups, usually patronized by disinterested intellectuals.

VILLAGE IDIOT

By Caroline Creyke

Jimmy Stewart is in town tonight to help our tiny town celebrate the opening of the new Cooper Theater. (No, it's not a cinema house.) But since the premiere showing is an invitational benefit affair, and since I assume very few of us will be invited, "Take Her She's Mine" will have to wait until Saturday night for Colorado College to see her (Sandra Dwyer), and will have to be satisfied with seeing Monsieur Stewart in other than the flesh.

Lucky us! The Ute is giving us an evening with Jerry Lewis. (Don't cry, Daddy.) Both "Don't Give Up the Ship" and "Rock-a-bye Baby" are there this weekend.

If you don't like Jerry, there's always Elvis in "It Happened at the World's Fair" in color. (It wouldn't have been half as much fun in black and white.) Along with this is "The Courtship of Eddie's Father."

At the Peak, Jack Lemmon and Carole Lynley are "Under the Yum Yum Tree," the Chief has "Palm Springs Weekend," and at the 8th Street, "The Caretakers" and "The Man from the Dinners Club" (Danny Kaye). Starting Wednesday at this theatre is one of the best double features ever offered in this town, "The Miracle Worker" with Anne Bancroft and Patti Duke, and "To Kill a Mockingbird," with Gregory Peck and two of the most enchanting children ever.

Winter has truly come to Colorado Springs, the Starlight has gone into hibernation. No more Gullies, Werewolves, et multi cetera . . . sob.

John Paseley changes his mind every time I see him, but I think he thinks the Rampart Range Ramblers (he, Dale Spall, and Nate Cloak) are playing tonight at the Chat Noir. Better check with him though, because I'm writing this on Tuesday and that's a long way from Friday.

The Knight Sounds are still at the Cave, and Jim Warden now plays at the Honeybucket on Sunday afternoons as well as Saturday nights.

There is a book, This Man from Lebanon, by Barbara Young (a biography of the famous Lebanese poet, artist, Kahlil Gibran), the last words of which are "In our own West, across the continent in the great tower of Shove Memorial Chapel at Colorado College is a set of Westminster chimes cast at Chyden, England, with a master bell weighing six tons, which will strike the hours. And upon this bell are graven the words, 'Yesterday is but today's memory, and tomorrow is today's dream.' (Kahlil Gibran)."

The underlining is mine. That great bell will ring only if the timing mechanism which causes it to do so is replaced. Contributions may be sent to me in care of the TIGER or to the Shove Fund in care of Robert Brossman, Peabody House.

Kennedy Charged As Failure

By Michael Runnels

"Let us begin." So ended the Inaugural Address of President John Fitzgerald Kennedy.

We are still waiting. The Kennedy Administration, ushered in on a strong promise of decisive and effective leadership, has not lived up to the hopes and expectations of the American public. The earliest challenges found Kennedy lacking in both decisiveness and effectiveness. There has been a definite inconsistency between promises and performances, needs and remedies. He has failed to back up words with work, and policy with power. The leadership and direction needed must be found in an alternative to Kennedy.

John F. Kennedy has had ample opportunity to be a truly great president. He isn't. This opportunity presented itself in foreign policy very early. Twice Kennedy has had the opportunity to act strongly toward Cuba and twice he has failed to be as big as his mouth. Cuba is still a stronghold of Communism, and nothing Kennedy has done has lessened Cuban influence in this hemisphere. But, Latin America is not the only area suffering from Kennedy. Kennedy will be remembered as the President that ignored the Monroe Doctrine, flunked the challenge of the Bay of Pigs, stood by as the Berlin Wall went up, betrayed freedom in Laos, and actively sought to feed his enemies. Thus he has cheapened his words by not backing them up, and as a result, Kennedy's threats to Communism have had a hollow ring. It seems that the policy of speaking "softly" and carrying a "big stick" has been replaced with the modern method of speaking loudly and forgetting the stick. At present our foreign policy is strong and consistent only in its lack of direction. It lacks "vigah" and nowhere in the Kennedy Administration has lack of "vigah" been shown so vividly and tragically.

Kennedy's domestic policy is one of political expediency. Rather than acting effectively in fulfilling his campaign promises, he has followed a course of ineffective attempts. The victories he has won have been far outweighed by his defeats. He avoided action on civil rights for two years. His plans for Medicare and Aid to Education have been failures. It is apparent that the present tax cut proposal is being hurried along in hopes that it will help him in '64. The idea of a subsequent cut in spending has not been pushed. Besides, such a cut would damage the growing bureaucracy. He feels no guilt at having called businessmen "S.O.B.s" as a group or forcing his own direction on steel prices. He has not solved any of the great domestic problems he outlined in his 1960 campaign. He has not brought about a vibrant and buoyant economic growth, full employment, or rational allocation of resources. He has looked at 1964 so long and so hard that it is difficult for him to see anything else.

It is true that problems have plagued the Kennedy domestic policy. But, the greatness of any president is measured by his ability to overcome problems. Kennedy is due a certain amount of patience and understanding, and as long as he faced problems in a decisive manner these feelings were warranted. It has become evident that Kennedy is not getting much done, and thus being ineffective, it is time to take a harder look at his qualifications.

Kennedy's main qualification, past and present, has been a powerful, popular Kennedy Image. Public relations men have portrayed J.F.K. as a dynamic, forceful leader. Still, the differences between the Kennedy Image and the Kennedy Identity are evident. It is still true that actions, or rather the lack of actions, speak louder than words. If the Kennedy Identity could be as great as the Kennedy Image there would be no need for an alternative.

Kennedy is a good example of the contrast between promises and performance. This seems a fairly common fault of politicians in general, and the consistency with which promises are made into policy is a difference between politicians and statesmen. (Yes, Virginia, there are statesmen.) Performance in office is determined by the principles, abilities and strengths of the individual tempered by the situations faced and their scope. As a result, it is evident that no man's promises are made into policy predicted. We can only make more or less educated guesses drawn from the individual's principles, abilities and strengths, e.g., those factors of performance for which he is responsible.

Because of the "Political Facts of Life" the Democratic Party will not offer an alternative to Kennedy. The Party has always held on to power when it believes it can win with it. Unavoidably the question arises, "Which Republican?" and the issue becomes partisan. At this point the best alternative to Kennedy is Senator Barry Goldwater. He offers an alternative for many reasons. His principles are more deeply rooted. Also, his abilities are clearer and his strengths more apparent than those of the Kennedy Identity. Goldwater has gained political prominence through the power of ideas, rather than image, direction rather than deception, and work rather than words only. His strongest point is and has been his dedication to certain principles and beliefs.

Goldwater's underlying concern and character pervades throughout all of his words and actions. Unlike Kennedy, the Senator's specific views, although not 100% consistent, are always true to his fundamental philosophy. History has shown that if the spirit and principles are strong, consistent and decisive, the specifics can take care of themselves. The indecisiveness and ineffectiveness of the Kennedy Administration is a general fault rather than confined to a few specifics.

Go Go See See . . .

The first of a series of readings and productions of the Experimental Theatre during the college year will be Dramatic Readings in Poetry. On Sunday, Dec. 1, at 8:00 P.M. in the WES room, Herving Madrigal will perform part of Canto V of Dante's Inferno and Lorca's "Arturo Barea" in English and in Italian and Spanish, respectively. Wilbur Wright creates Hopkins' "Spring and Fall," Keats' "La Belle Dame sans Merci," Shakespeare's "All the World's a Stage," and Carroll's "Jabberwocky." Kenneth Burton will breathe fire into Hopkins' "As Kingfishers Catch Fire," Shakespeare's Sonnet 130, Donne's "Batter My Heart, Three Personed God," and part of Coleridge's "The Ruins of the Ancient Mariner. Stefan Feyoch will castigate society with Brecht's "Poor B.B." and console it with Morike's "Midnight" in both English and German. Adrienne Zech and Joe Mattys will satirize conventions in part of Pope's "The Rape of the Lock" and in Eliot's "Portrait of a Lady." Finally, Linda van Helms, Keith Fox, and Ernst Michael Freilermuth, with Helms as lament Frost's "Death of a Hired Man" and struggle in Goethe's last three scenes of Faust. These sixteen poems representing fourteen poets from the early Italian Renaissance to twentieth century America will be introduced by Professor Robert Ormes, James H. Fox, assisted by Georgia McClay, will coordinate the rehearsals.

Supported by ASOC, the Experimental Theatre desires to stimulate a wider and deeper interest in drama on the CC campus. With seven limited productions and readings behind it in the last three years, this group hopes that, as a result of its efforts next semester, a number of students will continue to participate in both its own performances and those of the drama department.

Honor Privilege Proposed for Senior Women

Monday, Nov. 18, approximately 25 girls attended a meeting to discuss extension of senior women's privileges. Jo Heller, member of AWS, expressed her disappointment at the lack of positive action being taken on complaints about the dorm system, specifically senior hours and privileges. Miss Heller, being in the delicate position of having to represent both AWS and herself, called this meeting to assess the interest in a senior honor dorm or wing.

Assuming that those present represented either the most interested or the most widely read (since the only notice was that published in the Nov. 15 Tiger), the 25 decided on a course of action. The first step will be to investigate plans for organizing a special senior dorm or wing. The program could involve as few as those seniors with a 3.5 average who are interested or as many as all senior women. Depending on the number of girls involved, seniors might live in the west wing of Loomis, which has its own dorm, permitting the use of senior keys. Marsha Irving, temporary chairman of the movement, is working with wing representatives to consolidate interest and possible plans for organizing the wing. Any questions should be directed to her.

In closing Miss Heller stated the belief that some of the complaints about hours and regulations had never been pursued thoroughly and now was the time to start. Jean Torcom, speaking for Judicial Board, declared that unless students brought their complaints and suggestions to J. B. (meetings are open to ALL students, including boys), J. B. would have no sympathy for the undercurrent of dissatisfaction currently spreading.

Rampart Rifles Organized

A new organization, Rampart Rifles, has been formed here at CC. This new social-military organization replaces the now defunct Pershing Rifles. The activities of R.R. include a new drill team for those interested in precision marching with rifles. There will be field trips to local military bases and work with advanced weaponry. Second semester, Rampart Rifles will be parachuting and going on weekend ski maneuvers. On the lighter side this group has a full program of parties scheduled. This Saturday R.R. has a mountain party planned.

Meetings are held every Monday at 7:00 P.M. in the ROTC building. Captain Jones, the new sponsor, urges all interested individuals to attend the next meeting.

Student Conduct

 where they were wrong, and then reprimanded them for their irresponsible vote. This is in itself an indication that even the President misunderstood the simple function of the committee. They were not counselors, not judges.

Reasoning that there was no need to correct them according to the administration's decision. The student body in general was also guilty of this mistaken notion. During the course of the hearing an excessive amount of student pressure was placed on committee members. This resulted in unnecessary complication because theirs was not the decision to make. It served only to hinder the investigative process. The hardest blow, however, seems to have been dealt those committee members whose motives were questioned. These people had acted out of genuine concern, and their action was the honest result of their effort. The reprimand in effect invalidated the whole and brought forth the most thorough and honest fight in the idea of faculty.

After this incident the committee was increasingly characterized by frustration, misunderstanding, and confusion. The administration lost much of its faith in such a committee to act responsibly. At the same time the student members lost faith in their ability to effectively communicate with the administration. There was even shaken confidence in the system itself. An evident split began to form between the seemingly irreconcilable principles of students and administration. Positions were exaggerated to near misrepresentation. Administrative representatives seemed to consider the students as altogether unprincipled, while students thought of the administration as severe and set in its ways. Misunderstanding led to inefficiency and mistrust, affecting in no small way the constructive function of the committee in hearing cases.

Near the end of the semester, after all this festering, two successive rejections of committee proposals made the further existence of the SCC useless and intolerable to practically everyone concerned. The first case involved a male student who was charged with drunkenness, disorderly conduct and indecent exposure near the women's dormitories. In the opinion of some of the committee there was conflicting evidence as to whether he did actually expose himself or not. Because of this the committee voted for probation. The second case was that of a male student already on probation for destruction of College property after drinking liquor in a College residence. He had been accepted here on probationary status after similar misconduct at another school. Following the spring water fight he was arrested by the city police for drunkenness and was reported to have been ramming the cars immediately in front and back of where he was parked. Some members of the committee considered the charges exaggerated, and as a result of this plus other extenuating circumstances the committee voted against recommending suspension. The administration, thoroughly exasperated by what it thought to be irresponsible action, simply dismissed both men. In a short while the letters went out announcing President Benetz's decision to dissolve the SCC.

One must realize that the events of this last semester were essentially ineluctable. The situation had been prepared several years before; and the conflict should have been expected. As it was, President Benetz did the only possible thing: to abandon an organization that was destroying its own purpose.

During the summer the new President Worner met with students and administration to determine what should be done for the coming school year. A new committee was necessary to provide for the College's responsibility to the student, yet at the same time to the old one would almost insure disaster. As the result of these discussions an outline for the President's Advisory Committee on Student Conduct was drawn. In President Worner's words:

"The Committee will consist of the Deans of Men and Women, two faculty members appointed by the faculty Committee on Committees, and five students: a senior man and woman; a junior man and woman; and the president of the ASCC as an ex officio non-voting member.

It is understood that from now on, in the spring of each year, it will be the responsibility of the ASCC to select two sophomores; a sophomore man and a sophomore woman will serve as juniors on the committee the next Fall. They will also be on the committee as seniors, to give continuity and in turn will be followed the next spring by two more sophomores selected by the ASCC to serve the following fall.

It is understood that the Committee will hear cases that are brought to its attention and will determine the facts of each case of charged misconduct. It will also hear cases brought to its attention and cases referred to it by the Judicial Board of AWS or the Intra-Hall Council of the men's residence halls involving misconduct of individuals, groups of individuals or organizations. The jurisdiction shall include violations of social policy by individuals or organizations.

Following determination of the facts, a report will be made to the President of the College and he will decide, after consulting as the circumstances dictate with others, what the decision shall be. The committee will of course be able at any time to recommend leniency because of defined extenuating circumstances.

The purpose of this arrangement is to make it clear where

 istic because a theocratic government is requisite to his religion.

Thus, modern secular nationalism is possible in Christian and Jewish nations because these religions do not require political manifestation of the power of God. This same nationalism is possible in Moslem states partially because some political manifestation of the power of Allah cannot be the ultimate, universal, political authority of the Moslem world. The decision rests and not to get into questions of over-riding of authority. There may be disagreement from time to time but the responsibility for all decisions will be clear.

The prospects seem reasonably secure against a repetition of the previous year. This new committee can accomplish the purposes set forth at the beginning of this article, but the burden of its success or failure rests almost entirely with the President of the College. If he utilizes its truly representative qualities to their furthest extent, if he is open to all the differing opinions and values them, and if he reciprocates the committee's understanding with his own, then the college may possess the most valuable judicial body it has ever had.

cal authority of the Moslem world.

On Tuesday Dr. Rylaarsdam discussed the need for communication between Christian and Jew; the need for each religion to satisfy itself of the other's usefulness in God's world. This is necessary to prevent a recurrence of something like Hitler's Germany in World War II or the expulsion of the Jews from Spain in 1492. These are two prime examples of the results of the lack of the establishment of a purpose for the Jew satisfactory to the Christian.

The primary difference between Christian and Jew lies in the content of the fulfillment of God's promise. The Jew believes that God's fulfillment, that the embodiment of the Kingdom of God on earth, lies in the future, and that the nation of Israel is the elect one through whom the Kingdom of God will come. The Christian believes that God's promise was fulfilled in the crucifixion of Christ; that through the absolution of sin gained for the world in Christ's crucifixion, the Kingdom of God has come. For the Christian, history ended with the crucifixion; for the Jew history is eternal.

The Christian regards the Jewish religion as a stubborn, anachronistic, ossified culture that should die but refuses to do so.

The purpose of the Jew ended with the crucifixion. The Jew regards the Christian as a fool who, in spite of the universal sin and injustice existing in the world today, believes that the Kingdom of God has come.

The Jew has come to regard the Christian culture, especially in the United States, as, the means through which Jewish culture can be disseminated. Dr. Rylaarsdam suggested that the Christian, by regarding the Jew as a piece of the continuing agony of the cross, could satisfy for himself the question of the usefulness of the Jew in the modern world. Through this understanding communication could be instituted between the two religions and the possibility of further devastation precluded.

On both Monday and Tuesday limitations on time prevented Dr. Rylaarsdam from supporting his theories with factual data and forced him to generalities to a large degree about the religious and governments be discussed. Although the complicated structure of his argument was at times difficult to follow, it was at all times logical. On both days, he approached old questions from a new and challenging angle, and advanced some unusual and thought-provoking theories as answers.

THE BELL TELEPHONE COMPANIES SALUTE: DICK KUSSMAN

BELL TELEPHONE COMPANIES

Dick Kussman (B.A., 1953; M.A., 1959), in the short span of three years, has advanced through Pacific Telephone's management achievement program to what the company terms "district level."

In his new job as divisional commercial supervisor, he assists in the administration of over 276,000 subscriber accounts in the Los Angeles area.

During his short telephone career, Dick has had responsible assignments in the marketing, traffic and plant departments. Prior to his latest promotion, he spent nearly a year as commercial staff supervisor in charge of management and non-management training.

Dick has shown his capacity for increased responsibilities, and has opened up a bright future for himself with the Telephone Company. The proof is in his rapid advancement to a managerial position at the district level.

Dick Kussman, like other young men, is impatient to make things happen for his company and himself. There are few places where such restlessness is more welcomed or rewarded than in the fast-growing telephone business.

Varsity-Frosh Hockey Squads Clash Tonight

The Tiger Varsity sextet will meet the freshmen icers tonight at the Broadmoor in a game designed to introduce the freshman squad to the college community while at the same time giving the varsity needed experience and acquainting the new members of the squad to the Broadmoor ice.

Skating with three full lines and five defenses, Coach Johnson, will in all probability, start Roger Simon at center, and John Simus and Bob Marie skating wing. At defense will be Tom Brindley and Dave Scrimm. The other two lines will be composed of Jeff Sauel at center and Steve Ebert and Wayne McAlpine on the wings as one line, and an all sophomore line of Bob Otto, Dave Peterson and Glen Blumer. Filling out the defensive positions will be Dave Palm, Ken Hanson, and Steve Kopecky.

The freshman ranks, now only twelve strong, will be bolstered by the services of Warren Fordyce and several other varsity squad members who will be named later. However with three high school all Americans in Jim Amidon, Mike Jugovich and Bob Lindberg, playing the freshman should provide quite a threat to the varsity.

Meeting the U.S. Olympic Team on November 26 and 30, the Tigers will run into what has been considered the best U.S. Olympic Team in history. Boasting such standout players as Billy Rierchert, an all-American center from North Dakota, Paul Johnson, another all-American from Minnesota, and Paul Coppo from Michigan Tech, who was high scorer in the International League last year, the Tigers will be playing their toughest opening game in history. But like the freshman game, it will lend valuable experience for CC competition within the WCHA.

CSU Outshoots Rifle Team

Colorado State University's rifle team, one of the two best teams in the entire Colorado-Wyoming Rifle Conference, swaggered to the firing lines November 16, looked with disdain at CC's bewildered shooters, and determined to repeat humiliating drubbings of previous years. However, CC's rifles blasted defiance in the cat-and-mouse game, and the cats (CSU) won 1428-1363. No CC team in the past five years has gotten this high a score against CSU, and a totally new rifle team managed to do it.

Bob Strieby walked away with CC's high score of 277. Co-captain Jim Blackmer emerged with a very disappointing 275. Lyman Hunter fired a fine 275, edging out the veteran Blackmer because of a higher standing score of 83. Captain Bill Johnson total a score of 273. Bill Newcomb improved enough to take fifth place with a 263.

Nevertheless, CC improved its score of last week's 1350 by 13 points. Improvements seemed to be the day's specialty. Lyman Hunter rose ten points over his 265 of last week, and he added more light to this quick improvement by blasting a 94 kneeling score—an almost unheard-of score for a new shooter (Blackmer's second year could not break 90 until this match). Hunter easily grabbed laurels as the most outstanding shooter of the team by beating both captains and taking second place on the team in the meet. Wade Wright also surprised everyone by rising thirty points over his previously high 231 to grab sixth place on the team. Ralph Dalla Betta, after his spectacular sixteen-point improvement of last week, added three more points to his all-time high to score 251 (previous high before last week's match was 232).

CC's postal match of this week also netted a total score of 1365, two points less than last week's 1365. Blackmer fired a 284, Johnson a 277, Hunter 275, Strieby 271 and Holmes 256. The outstanding scores for the postal match were prone, Blackmer (100-9X), kneeling, Johnson (97), and standing Blackmer (89). Best scores of the CSU meet: prone, Strieby, Blackmer, Newcomb (99); kneeling, Blackmer and Johnson (96) and standing, Strieby (87).

Mines' Passes Bring Tiger Downfall, 36-15

A Colorado School of Mines line, as hard and as steadfast as Plymouth Rock itself, and Greg Cory, a leader as steady and dependable as Miles Standish, combined in the 68th annual pre-Thanksgiving Day CC-Mines football game to tumble the toothless Tigers 36-15.

Tiger meat was once again the main entree as quarterback Greg Cory passed over the bewildered CC defense for four touchdowns. A hardy band of Colorado College rotters were treated to a closely contested first half but in the second stanza, the Orediggers, appetites whetted, chowd down on the Tigers and tallied three TD's to notch Mines' 30th triumph of the ancient rivalry.

Except for the first quarter, the Bengals supplied an easily digested meal for the ravished Miner defense. Sudden Death Sabol gave the Orediggers a good case of heartburn, however, when early in the initial period he cut through the clover on a 68 yard touchdown canter to vault Colorado College into a 6-0 lead. Undaunted, the Miners sharpened their utensils and carved an 80 yard touchdown march out of the Tiger's hide which culminated in a 28 yard scoring pass from Cory to Jim Dickson. CC fought right back, with Sudden Death Sabol again being the unmanly dinner guest placing his foot in the Miner's mouth as he toed a 20 yard field goal to put the Tigers on top 9-7. But before the Mines Head Coach, Fritz Brennecke had finished unwrapping his package of TUMS, his proteges stormed back to take the lead for good as Cory hit Frank Holley on a 55 yard scoring bomb.

Tickets Now for Hockey

Freshmen-Varsity Games, Nov. 22 and 23—For this series only, students, faculty, and staff will be admitted to the World Arena on presentation of activity cards. Exchange tickets will not be required.

U.S. Olympics Games, Nov. 26 and 30—Activity Cards must be presented at the Athletic Department office in order to secure an admission ticket. There is no charge for students. Faculty and staff pay fifty cents. Tickets for both games are now available. Get Tuesday's tickets before 5 o'clock that afternoon. Tickets for Saturday's game will be available until 5 p.m. Wednesday, Nov. 27.

PLEASE GET YOUR TICKET AS EARLY AS POSSIBLE!

Coach Brennecke disposed of his TUMS and his team settled down to an enjoyable Thanksgiving dinner never to be troubled again by the after effects of Tiger meat. A safety and two TD's ensued as the voracious Orediggers gorged themselves on tame Tiger friecesse in the third period. In the final quarter Mines scored once more as fullback, Ken Weizman, belched over from the four yard line to make it 36-9. Admonishing the Miners' for their rudeness, Cubby Welch gathered together the Tiger remains and tossed a touchdown strike to Ed DeGeorge to make the final tally 36-15.

The loss gave CC a 4-6 seasonal record and brought a close to the 1963 football season. With only four graduating seniors on the squad, there is hope that next year the Tigers will be the diner instead of the dinner.

Ski Tales

A John Jay movie filmed at Crested Butte was the highlight of the Ski Club meeting last Tuesday. It served to get everyone excited about the ski season, which we hope will be arriving soon. For those who look forward to the approaching ski season with fear (because of a lack of skiing ability) instead of with excitement, Ski Broadmoor has a series of 5 lessons. The nominal fee also includes ski equipment rental. The Ski Club hopes to make some arrangements to take advantage of the second session of these lessons at the beginning of the next semester. There was also a discussion on donating Ski Club money to the Olympic fund to help our nation's skiers this year. If there are ever any snow conditions to report we hope to have a bulletin posted in Rastall where skiers will be able to check the snow at their favorite areas.

Since the Turkey Cup meet at Loveland scheduled for this weekend was canceled, the CC racers will have to wait until Dec. 8 to astonish you with their great victories. Dr. Diller is still pushing the ski team into a great physical condition, and we really should be in top shape for this first meet—if there is ever enough snow to have a first meet.

The outlook for skiing this weekend is very poor despite the snow last Saturday. The hills are still quite large, and if you must rush the season be sure to use skis with stainless steel bottoms.

GREEK NEWS

Delta Gamma

Monday night Sally Lentz and Gretchen Swan defied the tradition of the proverbial sophomore slump by passing a joint candle announcing their engagements to Jim Heckman and Frank Beiring respectively. The alumni treated the juniors to a dessert on Tuesday and gave a dinner for the pledges Wed. We are looking forward to our formal with the Gamma Phi's to-night.

Kappa Alpha Theta

Honors were bestowed on outstanding students in the House at our Scholarship Dessert last Monday. The evening was highlighted by Dr. Albert Seay's discussion on scholastic work in the field of humanities. Displaying a most enthusiastic interest in his work, Dr. Seay imparted many interesting things to us, including a description of the use of IBM machines in determining the age of old manuscripts. Our guest for next Monday is Dr. Glenn Brooks.

Sunday at the sparkling hour of 9:30 a.m., the Thetas will contend with the Sigma Chi's in a broom ball game at the new ice rink.

Tuesday we will put aside our books and join the Phi Gams at our annual Thanksgiving Orphan Party. At this traditional function, we entertain the children with supper and games at the Phi Gamm house.

Kappa Kappa Gamma

Again this week some of the Kappas enjoyed working at the Child Day Care Center, an organization which cares for the children in families where both parents work. As a part of our local philanthropic project, a portion of our chapter works with these children each week. This week we helped them make Thanksgiving decorations.

A week ago, the meeting was enhanced by the excitement of the chapter, and especially Susie Mulliner, over the news of Susie's pinning to Sigma Chi Greg Young.

Beta Theta Pi

A week ago Thursday, we conned the DG's into joining us for dinner in our new dining complex. Following the dinner, we escorted them to our plush social gatherings building where all enjoyed hot wassail, donuts and another production of the Boyden Little Theater Guild. Believe it or not, Coleman R. Robinson (Brother C) of Denver, Colorado got pinned to Caroline Woodruff of Sands Point, New York.

Latest indications show that the current weather conditions are not those of late Fall, but rather an early Spring. These indicators are the three lavalieres that three Betas have given to three lovely ladies.

Phi Delta Theta

Recently initiated were Glen Blumer and Jerry Layton.

Monday night, the second semester officers were elected. Steve Frink was unanimously elected President for an unprecedented second term; Steve Trowbridge, vice president; Curt Kennett, janitor; and Paul Carson, secretary. In hopeful anticipation of actually having any, Steve Fredrikson was elected pledge trainer. Odysseus Cooper was elected "Active of the Year." The Phis are anxiously awaiting tomorrow night's winter formal.

Sigma Chi

We congratulate Greg Young on his recent pinning to Suzie Mulliner, Kappa Kappa Gamma. Their serenade is scheduled for the Monday following Thanksgiving weekend.

Gamma Phi Beta

Friday we will join forces with the D.G.'s for our Christmas formal at the Colorado Springs Country Club.

Congratulations to the "ardent eight" for an unsurpassed performance on the volleyball court. We are tied for first, and will play-off with all vigah this week. Carol Wright volunteers to score.

Phi Gama Delta

This week the Phi Gams are proud to announce the initiation of four new members. They are Charles Mason, Tudor Marks, Bob Otto, and Craig Welsh. Also we held our annual Bowery Dance.

TO REPORT OUR FINDINGS.

NO. 1—IT IS OUR CONCLUSION THAT SOME OF
THE DIFFICULTIES ARE SEMANTIC. THE NEGRO

THE COURTESY WORD "SIR," REPLACING
IT WITH A WORD FOUND TO BE FAR LESS APPEALING. IMMEDIATE REINSTATEMENT OF THE WORD
"SIR" MIGHT WELL OPEN OTHER

NO. 2—IN TALKS WITH WHITE CIVIC LEADERS
IT BECAME CLEAR THAT INCREASED TENSION WAS DUE TO NEGRO LAPSES IN THE TECHNIQUE OF NON-VIOLENCE. SOUTHERN

OTHER AREAS FOR DISCUSSION MIGHT WELL BE OPENED.

Johnson Will Continue Kennedy Foreign Policy

By Fred A. Sondermann

Two of the most important characteristics of foreign policy in the Kennedy administration were 1) the President's recognition of the need for powerful forces to support American objectives in foreign policy, and his concern over the specific composition of those forces, and 2) at the same time, a very great restraint in the application of force—a restraint which was no doubt caused by the recognition of the truly awesome consequences which an escalating use of force could have for this country and the entire world.

The first of these characteristics hardly needs elaboration. Mr. Kennedy and his advisers have during the past three years been concerned over the most appropriate size and composition of American forces as well as the most appropriate deterrent strategy which these forces should be designed to support. The general approach has been to diversify the capacities of our armed forces, permitting the United States to have the widest possible range of alternative policies available in all foreseeable situations. The careful identification of alternatives was elevated as a principle of first importance by the President and his subordinates. As a consequence of actions taken, the government of the United States today disposes over an arsenal of forces which, must be assumed, would give pause to any potential violator of the status quo.

Kennedy Exercised Restraint
In light of this, the second of the characteristics assumes particular significance—namely, the fact that in the whole these forces, while they in reserve, have not been used in an irresponsible or unrestrained manner. Both incidents involving Cuba—the abortive Bay of Pigs invasion of 1961 as well as the more successful resolution of the Soviet missile crisis of last fall—testify to this restraint.

In the first instance, the United States did not go all out to achieve the downfall of a hostile regime; and in the second instance, while it persuasively demonstrated its willingness to put American policy and prestige on the line, it was content with a qualified rather than a total solution.

I think that these two instances are symptomatic of a recognition which pervaded the Kennedy administration, namely, that we are in a period of checkmate, in which the costs of error are so enormous that risks must be weighed with the care which human intelligence can bring to the task. This means, in effect, that it is unreasonable to expect sudden drastic changes in the world environment, either in our favor or in our adversaries. Recognition, in turn, requires the development of a patient and sophisticated approach to international relations. It has seemed to me that the Kennedy administration has displayed such an approach.

Change Under Johnson?
The question now, of course, becomes whether all this is subject to change under the administration of President Johnson. Prediction is dangerous, but my judgment in this case is that a major change in approach to world af-airs is unlikely. Certainly there will, in due time, be changes in personnel. One must not expect a new President to continue indefinitely the cabinet and staff personnel of his predecessor. It is relevant, however, to note the following: in a study made in early 1962 of changeovers in State Department personnel from the Eisenhower to the Kennedy administration, it was found that—below the Under Secretary and Assistant Secretary levels—the changes between 1960 (Eisenhower) and 1961 (Kennedy) were not significantly greater than changes had been between 1959 and 1960 (both Eisenhower years) or between 1961 and 1962 (both Kennedy years). My findings were that, at most, 30 personnel changes could reasonably be attributed to the change in administration, and only a few of these were in sensitive spots. If this was true when there was a changeover from one political party to another, I would expect it to be even more true in the case of a transfer of power within the same political party, particularly in circumstances of succession rather than election.

The bases of my prediction of continuity are three in number. In the first place, President Johnson's background as an immensely skillful leader in the Senate has, I believe, given him a great deal of relevant experience. In the Senate, as in the White House, power is important. He who holds it has opportunities for influence that others do not possess. In the Senate, as in the White House, however, the mere possession of the means of power is less important than the skill with which power is wielded. As I read the record of performance and achievement of Senate Majority Leader Lyndon Johnson, he knew the value of restraint, of negotiation, of compromise, of the quid pro quo—in short, of obtaining consent rather than enforcing obedience. I do not mean to say that the world is like the Senate cloakroom. But the kind of experience I mentioned is relevant to foreign affairs; it is based on a certain frame of mind and is characterized by a certain approach to political method which will be useful.

Secondly, Senator Johnson's voting record on foreign policy closely paralleled that of Senator Kennedy. That record, as revealed in the July 22, 1960 issue of the Congressional Quarterly, shows that almost invariably Senator Johnson voted what we may call the "internationalist" position. This was true of Mutual Security legislation, of Reciprocal Trade legislation, of treaties and agreements, as well as of legislation concerning American policy toward the Communist bloc.

We must realize, of course, that

Retirement of Colonel Decker, College PMS, Is Announced

On November 30, the retirement of Lieutenant Colonel Arthur D. Decker from the United States Army and from Colorado College becomes effective. A special review of the Colorado College ROTC Battalion last Thursday on Washburn Field honored Colonel Decker in his last formal appearance before the cadets. Dr. Lloyd E. Worner, president of the college, delivered a brief address and Lieutenant Colonel Louis P. Chapman, successor at Colorado College as a professor of Military Science, presented Colonel Decker with an Oak Leaf Cluster from the Department of the Army for meritorious service in the ROTC program.

Colonel Decker, commissioned as an officer in the Infantry in 1942, has been a member of the faculty at Colorado College for the past five years. During World War II, he commanded an infantry company of the 413th Regiment in combat through Belgium, Holland, and Germany.

His numerous decorations include the Silver Star, the Bronze Star for valor, two commendation ribbons and the Presidential Unit Citation for actions in combat.

During the Korean action, Colonel Decker served as advisor to the chief of staff, and was regimental executive officer for the 31st Infantry.

Colonel Decker holds a bachelor of arts degree from Union College in Kentucky. He also has attended Butler University, Indiana State University, and advance training

Little Change in Congress

President's Death Will Affect Coming Issues

By David Finley

In the immediate aftermath of President Kennedy's assassination we are all still prisoners of our emotions. It is difficult to set aside personal shock at the event and compassion for the principals in the human tragedy and to try to assess in impersonal terms the objective impact of last Friday on the domestic political system.

The initial reaction of most Americans has probably been composed of a personal sense of loss, sympathy for Mr. Kennedy's family, bitter outrage focused on the assassin, and perhaps some vague shame that such an act would take place in our supposedly stable society. A sense of national vulnerability in the face of hostile intent abroad should lead to willingness to hold in abeyance any doubts about the man who succeeds to the presidency. For the moment Mr. Johnson, I would judge, personifies our somber determination that this deed outside the bounds of our political and ethical systems shall not deter us from our former resolves to act within those systems.

This initial reaction will ease Mr. Johnson's first few months in office, but much of it will have dissipated by next summer. There will be, however, a significant residue to reduce with in the coming domestic party struggles.

Political Effect

In the first place the loss of John Kennedy is a severe blow to the Democratic party. He was an exceedingly astute politician with enormous personal attractiveness to the public. The mere fact of his removal from the political scene will cost the Democratic party many votes and conversely will be a significant gain for the Republican party.

Beyond this rather simple-minded observation the voters get muddled. But it is apparent that the nature and associations of the assassin will have a good deal of impact. At the time I write this (Sunday morning) it seems very probable that the assassin was acting on his own, upon distorted premises developed in a pitifully deranged mind, not as a part of any organized plot. The evidence that points this way is augmented by observations that no domestic political group—from Fascists and Minute-Men to the American Communist Party—advocates terrorism as a means, and that Kennedy's assassination is manifestly not to the current intent of our formidable Communist adversaries abroad.

Nevertheless, the political associations of this man will have an impact on American voters. It appears now that he was a self-styled Communist, not from rational understanding but from the hardness of this label to give shape and focus to his irrational hatred. As such he will be identified by many Americans as a "left-wing extremist." Revulsion may be expected to hurt politically any potential candidate who is associated in the public mind with "extremism" in general or "left-wing extremism" in particular.

In the Republican party Mr. Goldwater's potential candidacy for the presidential nomination is likely to be weakened by the popular image of his "right-wing extremist" support. That image might be expected to alienate an indeterminate number of voters of the moderate center, and hence weaken his chances for nomination next summer or election next November. On the other hand, Mr. Goldwater's intransigent anti-communism might appeal to those more impressed by the assassin's brand of extremism itself. At this point it is probably useless to speculate on which effect will be stronger and therefore what the concurrent impact on other potential Republican candidates may be.

On the Democratic side Mr. Johnson should, on precedent, be able to secure the nomination next summer if he wants it. At the moment it is difficult to see a strong challenger. Robert Kennedy might make a strong vice-presidential candidate if he were willing to run—in combining his record as attorney general and close advisor to his late brother with his vote-gathering potential in the Northeast and a limited appeal because of his brother's "martyrdom."

Civil Rights Bill

In regard to Congress it is hard to see how the assassination will have any significant effect on the current stalemate over major issues within the parties. The administration's program may be expected to continue lagging behind the prior obstacles now augmented by the discontinuity in leadership. The foremost issue—civil rights legislation—reflects too deep-seated an antagonism to be swept aside by the drama of the assassination, especially if it now appears likely, as I believe, that the assassin was motivated by a desire to avenge the assassination of his brother.

It will be difficult to determine how deeply the horror penetrates the American consciousness. The chosen leader of our self-governing heterogeneous political community has been assassinated, not by a man of political platform, but from without, but by a sick man who is a member and product of that same community. In any event the fabric of our political democracy is shaken. Let us hope that there will be some general recognition of the delicate nature of this self-government—recognition that it is a human creation which is not destined inevitably to prosper but requires constant nourishment in order to survive, that our individual dedication to constitution of the delicate nature of this self-government is a responsibility we neglect to our estimable peril.

LETTERS to the EDITORS

Opening for Extremists

To the Editors:

Now that the initial shock of the President's death has lessened, I have come to realize that much is lacking in the political portion of my poor mind.

I was and am a strong J.F.K. man. Yet the assassination has left me with, in addition to sorrow, a feeling of shame and guilt. Whenever someone had attacked John Fitzgerald Kennedy in the past, as I did the unfortunate Mr. Runnels, I had made arguments against the views of the attacker. However, these arguments were largely kept in my mind. As a liberal Democrat, I have been satisfied to think "well the great man is in—why argue about it—we've won." Maybe I'm way off base, but I can't help thinking that not enough of us spoke or wrote what we have felt. And this is really going out on a limb, but perhaps through satisfied silence we have left him open to the cowardly and treacherous far left and far right. All of us know that these sections of our political body are not strong, yet we have heard a great deal about them recently and have read their attacks.

As to myself, I feel that I as a liberal Democrat left my small portion of the political body void for some extremist to use. Some extremist quite similar to the miserable man who made Friday one of the saddest days of my life.

Yours very sincerely,
Romney Philpott

The Search for Excellence

To the Editors:

I applaud the Tiger editors for their efforts this year to improve the quality of the newspaper. But I am disturbed about misleading statements that have appeared in Tiger articles and editorials in important and controversial issues.

One of these statements appeared a few weeks ago. According to a Tiger article dealing with the residential college issue, the planned men's dormitory facilities are to be built with funds that might instead be used for a humanities building. This statement was misleading. Loan funds are available for revenue producing facilities like residence halls and are not available for academic buildings. The greater part of the money that might be used for a men's dormitory could not be used for a humanities building.

A second misleading statement appeared in last week's paper in an editorial on the advising and counseling system at the college. That editorial implied that students in academic difficulty are handled in a perfunctory fashion without any real examination into their cases. This is incorrect. Faculty members are asked to submit reports to the Dean on every student receiving a "D" or an "F" as a midterm or final grade in every course. Moreover, the cases of students in academic difficulty are reviewed periodically by a Dean's Advisory Committee composed of members of the faculty and administration. These procedures have been followed for a number of years.

The plans for a new men's dormitory and the advising and counseling system are matters of great importance to our students and critical comments about them by the Tiger staff are of great interest to all members of the campus community. The dormitory plans and the advising system might be changed and improved. But the effectiveness of constructive critical commentary is clearly lessened when it is associated with statements that are misleading or erroneous.

Many of us want very much to see the Tiger continue the advance toward excellence so well begun. In this advance responsible criticism must be associated with scrupulous accuracy in articles on controversial issues. —William R. Hochman, Assoc. Prof. of History

The fact remains, however, that federal loans will account for only 80 percent of the cost of a men's residence complex. The remaining 20 percent must come directly from the college's funds, and therefore represents a diversion from other projects.

Pershing vs. Ramparts

To the Editors:

(1) The article of 22 Nov., 1963, in the Colorado College Tiger, which discussed the formation of Rampart Rifles and its replacement of Pershing Rifles on this campus was brought to the attention of the officers and staff of the active and existent Pershing Rifles Company D, Ninth Regiment. We, the officers of Pershing Rifles, while not wishing to undermine or compete with the members of Rampart Rifles, must emphasize that Pershing Rifles is still very much in existence and is growing.

(2) At the beginning of the academic year 1963-64, certain members of the Pershing Rifles voted to withdraw themselves from the Pershing Rifles National Military fraternity and form an entirely intra-college group somewhat similar to, and with somewhat the same purpose as, Pershing Rifles. This group is now known as Rampart Rifles.

(3) Pershing Rifles is a national military fraternity organized to foster a spirit of friendship and co-operation among men in the military department and to maintain a highly efficient drill company. In recent years, this drill company, although encouraged, is de-emphasized in favor of efficient training in counter-insurgency and counter-guerrilla warfare.

(4) Pershing Rifles Company D of the Colorado College was nearly forced to disband early in the year because of the vote of withdrawal, but two officers decided to continue Pershing Rifles. At the moment, selection, initiation, and familiarization with equipment, files, and duties, for new officers is essentially complete. These new officers are receiving ROTC credits and are interviewing those who show outstanding performance in the classroom, on the drill field, and in expression of desire to supplement academic work with practical problems, tactical work, weaponry, and use of instruments. These selected students, if pledging, will be initiated about one month in advance of pledges who decide to pledge during the second semester.

(5) Pershing Rifles is opening a general pledging program during the second semester to all ROTC (basic and advanced) cadets who plan to enter the advanced course and wish to be familiar, and highly proficient, with all tools and tactics employed by an officers of modern American armies.

In addition, parties are planned, the Silver Ball (like the Military Ball) is a tradition, and the honor guard at the military ball is a Pershing Rifle duty. Merits are issued for all of these extra-curricular activities and for joining Pershing Rifles. However, Pershing Rifles must select the best of a pledge class, and this it will continue to do, thus sacrificing quantity for interested and competent quality.

(6) If a pledge is accepted and becomes an active, he will pay five dollars dues per semester and five dollars dues per month until he becomes an active. Thereupon, after activation, the member will pay five dollars per semester for as long as he is a member of Pershing Rifles.

many of the crucial foreign policy decisions confronting a President do not usually come before Congress, at least not in the form in which they have to be dealt with at the executive level. Nevertheless, if a voting record is a guide to general outlook, that of President Johnson gives us reason to assume a general continuation of present lines of foreign policy. It is interesting to note that of important votes in the foreign affairs field recorded by the Congressional Quarterly, Senator Johnson differed from Senator Kennedy on only four occasions.

The Foreign Policy

Framework

Finally, let us look at the larger context of the foreign policy process. In framing foreign policy, an administration operates within the context of at least three environments, expanding in concentric circles from the lonely seat of the President himself.

There is, first of all, the environments of the American governmental system itself, composed of executive/legislative/judicial branches, within a framework of shared powers and overlapping responsibilities. The structure of this environment remains precisely the same under President Johnson as it was under President Kennedy. President Johnson knows this structure intimately and knows how to operate within it as did President Kennedy. One difference: Mr. Johnson may have more access to Southern congressional leaders than Mr. Kennedy did. These leaders have in recent years tended to defect from the previous internationalist position. He may be able to reverse this trend.

Secondly, an administration operates within the larger American environment, characterized by a free press, an opposition party, an upcoming election, and a public whose broad aspirations and needs every administration must take into account. It is possible that in the wake of the tragic event of Friday, there may be changes in that public mood.

As I write this, the question of guilt for the assassination is not yet firmly ascertained. If the assassin were someone associated with an extremist group—right or left—surely the policy position of that group would automatically be beyond the pale of consideration. Other than that, a national crisis always brings a drawing-together of dissident elements within a population. President Johnson, for a period, he is able to count on the support of vast segments of the public—and, I believe, of Congress as well. This will be as largely because everyone recognizes the awesomeness of the responsibilities which he has had to assume.

The third environment within which foreign policy takes place, of course, is the international one consisting of all the other states of the world—some 120 of them—each with its own objectives and preferred methods; each with some power to affect events—linked together in complex networks of formal and informal arrangements and separated by conflicts of power, ideology, and interest. This environment was changing even before last Friday. Two of our major allies—England and Germany—have just named new leaders. Other changes will, in due time, occur. (There are, on the average, some 30 major changes of government per year among the states of the world.) But not even as monstrous an event as the assassination of an American President can make a decisive difference to the nature of the international environment. (For example, President DeGaulle came to the funeral—a courteous and

Possible Effects of Hallucinogens Examined By Various Researchers

By John Friesman

"Our favorite concepts are standing in the way of a floodtide, two billion years building up. The verbal dam is collapsing. Head for the hills, or prepare your intellectual craft to flow with the current." This statement, made by two expelled professors of Harvard University in the Harvard Review, stands as a general declaration of intellectualism's newest controversy—the Hallucinogenic Drug Cult.

Ser and narcotics have long been testing the administrative abilities of educational institutes throughout the nation, but the recent controversy of hallucinogens has created new problems. It appears that no one knows the nature of these re-introduced substances. Because of this lack of knowledge, Harvard has been one of the first universities confronted with the enigma of hallucinatory drugs.

Two professors of the University's Social Relations Department had been experimenting with the mental and physiological effects of such hallucinogens as LSD-25, psilocybin, and mescaline. The drugs were first ordered in 1960 from certain distributors, and experimentation began. Applications were first made with "outstanding creative intellectuals," most of whom reported their first experience as pleasurable. The scope of the experiment widened later to include Harvard students.

LSD Sold Freely

In the meantime, two undergraduate students were admitted to a mental institution presumably as a result of taking a hallucinogen. Word about the progress of some of the new experiments was passed around the University, and the students gained increasing interest in the research—not for the promotion of the professors' investigation but rather for personal research. Consequently, there was a rush on the drugs at various supply houses, and unusually high prices were charged. Individual sugar cubes containing the drugs were sold for one dollar in the Harvard Square black market. Eventually, all this enthusiasm together. The decor of these resulted in an expose of the research being done by Harvard faculty members. The abolitionists claimed the two professors were failing to control their inquiries. As a matter of fact, it was previously learned that the researchers were under the influence of the drugs while experimenting. The professors claimed this "involvement" was necessary, for the only way to realize the efficacy of the hallucinogens was to simultaneously experience the sensations with the subjects. Although the psychological results of the drugs were not validated, most of the critics felt that the substances, in recreating mental states (i.e., schizophrenia), were hazardous. Finally the University's investigation was tabled, because "no evidence of direct harm" had been shown. The primary restriction made on the future research was that no undergraduate students would participate in experimental sessions.

Instant Zen

"Instant Zen" periods invited government investigation, and the Federal Food and Drug Administration looked into the illegal sales of the drugs. Once again the situation seemed dismal, and the Harvard Corporation continued to investigate. Finally an undergraduate was jailed on explaining his participation in the continuing research, and thus came "the straw that broke the camel's back"—after a few formal arguments and legal disputes, Harvard's two "mystics" were dismissed from their teaching positions. The mutual feeling of the experimenters was that no one had the right to interfere with an individual's opportunity of obtaining "internal freedom"; their academic quest had been hindered.

Yet nothing halted the enthusiasm of these "social rebels." A new group of "misplaced lotus-eaters," as one source calls them, headquartered themselves in Massachusetts, Mexico, on an unknown island. Community houses were developed in which hallucinogen advocates gathered to undergo the occasion

"transcendental" meeting houses was presumably aesthetically satisfying—cushions on the floor, bossa-nova music, and "bug-lamp" light. The International Federation for Internal Freedom had begun.

Who can be critical of "If-It's" operations if there is no concrete proof of harm in hallucinatory drugs? This question is yet to be answered, for the responses to the drugs are various. As Aldous Huxley claims, "Verbal symbols can never convey its inwardness." Illusions alone are not created; there is a new sense of one's self and surroundings. The finite cultural and conceptual barriers used in describing experiences are shattered, and verbal descriptions are replaced with what might be called "aesthetic experience." Apparently an individual can be part of an experience.

Religious Awareness

Thinking he was God and could not be harmed, one person under the influence of a hallucinogen walked into traffic and was seriously injured. Novelist Alan Harrington, recounting his hallucinogen experience, said, "We talked about games of (life) and the love preventing monster of ego—which was the view of yourself as opposed to identity, yourself in action." An experiment at Andover Newton Theological Seminary was used to show the possibility of creating religious awareness with psilocybin. Although over ninety percent of the subjects had been unorthodox believers, their verbal response used to describe their experience used terms such as "God," "divine," "meeting with the infinite." Some people claimed suicide attempts after using the drugs. With conflicting views similar to these, the problem of the safety, distribution, and regulation of the drugs remains a moot question. Presently, hallucinogens are available only to those who successfully complete an application designating the procedures in which the substances are to be used.

The hallucinogenic controversy remains, therefore. Even the most recent Colorado College Psychology Department reading materials mention LSD as an effective chemical in working with behavior research. The United States' garden seed distributors continue to have a run on certain varieties of morning-glory seeds (found potent enough by students), and as long as the peyote cactus and certain mushrooms exist, hallucinogens remain also. The Reporter, in presenting several views on the controversy, suggests, "While legal protection must be provided for the public, responsible scientists surely must not be deprived of their freedom to investigate fully any possibility offered mankind by hallucinogens."

VILLAGE IDIOT

By Caroline Croyke

I shall not try to be gay, for I know that I cannot succeed. I am hungry, but cannot eat; tired, but cannot sleep. I thank God that I am a follower, and not a leader who must pull both himself and his country out of numbness. To pull myself out is difficult. I shall miss this man with whom I, at times, disagreed, yet always respected; never met, yet loved.

Rastall Board Members Attend Regional Meet

By Dan Cooper

Thursday, Nov. 14, the members of the Rastall Center Board took off for the sunny southland—Tucson, Ariz.—to attend the regional Student Union Conference. Twenty schools from seven states were represented with the purpose of stimulating and integrating the ideas of all Student Union Board members.

The theme of this year's convention was "The Creativity of Leadership." The approximately 120 delegates were divided into 10 groups with the task of setting up a student union at a mock university. Each group had this similar problem with variations in size of the school, the Greek ratio and participation, the publicity outlets, and the actual physical plant of the university.

Christian Scientist Speaks On Nature of Thought

By Larry Past

Last Thursday night in the Commons room, the Christian Science organization presented a lecture by Mr. Paul Stark Seeley. Mr. Seeley is a graduate of Princeton and the Harvard Law School; he is a member of the bar and, among his achievements, has been associated with many Christian Science publications. His talk was entitled, "The Origin and Power of Thought."

Mr. Seeley began his lecture by emphasizing the power of new ideas and his environment. To illustrate this, he gave the example of the contemporary "think tanks" and portrayed the effect of the mechanization of the world on the fishermen involved. He then examined the sources of thought. In order to account for human existence, he presented the concept of a universal mind. Under this theory, has no original thoughts as all thoughts of good, positive nature come from the ultimate mind which is of God. This universal mind is of a transcendental nature, yet is within all men and has always existed as such. In further explanation of this concept, Mr. Seeley drew an analogy between man's relationship to the universal mind and the relationship of a sunbeam to the sun. There are infinite numbers of separate sunbeams, yet each is a product of an ultimate source, the sun; following through with the comparison, there are vast numbers of individual men with separate thoughts, yet each thought is a product of the universal mind.

In further definition, Mr. Seeley asserted that the universal mind (as it is of God, and God is good) is composed only of those thoughts which are positive, constructive, healthy, etc in nature. Those thoughts which are of nature negative, destructive, and evil are derived from an opposite, contradictory source which he termed the devil. This was based on the idea that as negative cannot spring forth from positive, so evil cannot come from good.

Man, according to Mr. Seeley, is not determined; he does have the ability to differentiate between good and evil. To develop this ability is an exceptionally difficult task; however, once the end is obtained, it is enduring.

In closing, Mr. Seeley again emphasized that man must recognize that God (universal mind) is the source of all good, and the only true consciousness is that of the universal mind.

eous gesture. But I assume he will also wish to keep on building his independent nuclear force, and our present tragedy will not deflect him from that objective). Thus, President Johnson confronts much the same problems that President Kennedy would have faced were he still our chief executive.

Power and Patience

In a TV interview some time ago, Mr. Kennedy was asked whether the Presidency differed from what he had imagined it was like when he ran for the office. His response was that it did; that he had learned that while all things seem possible to a candidate, not all things are possible—not even to a President. He spoke with feeling on this point, having realized—and asking his audience to realize—that there are limits to the capacity of even as powerful a man as a President in as powerful a country as the United States. These limits will impinge on Mr. Johnson no less than they did on his predecessor. Perhaps the greatest service we can do our new President is to recognize the truth of Mr. Kennedy's appraisal—by not expecting impossible feats, by cultivating patience, and by being satisfied with the small advances which, as Elmer Davis once put it, in the course of ages do amount to something!

A review of the first semester work of ASCC shows few, if any, accomplishments. This group has concerned itself with appropriating the budget and with setting up a lifeless structure that has failed to develop any major programs. For the first few weeks of this truncated semester, the incomplete ASCC hesitated to act decisively "because of the lack of Freshmen commissioners." The remaining weeks have seen banal discussions of insignificant issues, and have given ASCC a "do-nothing" image.

This is an image that is well deserved because student leaders have been unwilling to lead and fulfill their responsibilities. These generalizations do not apply to all the members of ASCC, but rather to the bulk of leaders who seem to dwell on the trivial in the general meetings. Some preliminary work has been done in ASCC committees, but even here, progress has been slow, and students have been unwilling to contribute consistently.

The potential for a good ASCC exists. We have the leaders: we lack only the leadership. We hope that the coming semester will demonstrate the proposition that effective student government is possible at Colorado College.—Heckman

From the Chair

By Bill Mrachek

The Academic Committee of ASCC is striving this year to establish and to promote student participation in the formulation of a college academic program.

At the beginning of this semester it was felt by ASCC that students should have a voice in the academic policies and programs which pertain to Colorado College, and that in order for students to be able to voice their opinion a constructive academic relationship with the administration would have to be established.

Before the committee began any specific projects, letters were sent to outstanding educators across the country and meetings were held with the administration to explicitly clarify the areas of student participation. Many valuable suggestions and ideas were gathered from these conferences and it was felt very favorably that a student committee on academic af-airs would provide an important link between the administration and the student body.

So far this year the committee has been in the process of establishing a new format in order to demonstrate the potential of a student group which could be of valuable assistance in aiding the Colorado College academic program. However, in order for the Academic Committee to be an active body it is necessary that all

ASCC NOTES

After a short rest, the ASCC once again pursued its task this week. This was the last meeting of the year 1963 as the ASCC is taking advantage of the Dead Week arrangement. The business conducted was generally of the nature of tying up loose ends and postponing until the next session. The beauty contest for the opening of the pool has been postponed as has a presentation of recommended changes in the Constitution. The CCA is still functioning, this time at Boulder where topics of the drama exchange and the College Bowl will be discussed this Sunday.

Kastall is getting into the Christmas spirit and will be decorated appropriately Friday, courtesy of the Kastall Center Board and any interested participants. They will sponsor a Christmas party Saturday featuring a skating party, a dance and caroling.

There was some general discussion of the Enthusiasm Committee and the various pep organizations and of the residential college program both of which are of major concern to this council and will be more fully explored next semester.

The ASCC takes this opportunity to wish you a successful dead week, an enjoyable final schedule and a Very Merry Christmas.

Respectfully submitted
Karen McIvaine
ASCC Secretary

One Hundred Dollar Misunderstanding

Chinook, 95c with I.D.
"Immediately, right off the bat, without further ado, here and now, I wish to say that much of what happened to me that fateful weekend is completely unprintable, since it happened with a lady (colored) of ill repute." But it's printed.

This book by Robert Grover is the story of a weekend shared by a fourteen-year-old Negro prostitute (experienced) and a college sophomore (prigish). The chapters alternate between his narration of what happened and her narration of what happened. Neither understands the other. The boy, whose father is on the town's obscenity board and who writes pages of ambiguous sentences to avoid swearing, is a stereotyped product of the American middle class and its ambivalent views of sex. Kitten, the girl, invites him to spend the weekend with her because she wants the hundred dollars he has. J. C., the boy, thinks that she is impressed by his masculinity not his money.

The book is one of the most humorous I've ever read. The character of J. C. is repulsive mostly because he is so much like people we know. The chapters by Kitten are the funniest, though; she is frank and observant about the people she sees and about herself. Kitten says that J. C. mixes killing with funning. She blames this on the TV and tries to throw it out of the window of her apartment. So what does J. C., the pride of America do?

"He say, is I Kalminist? Or is I Apeezer? I say, Jimmy, is you blind?"

The sad part is that he is. Read it because it's got lots of dirty words and scenes. But don't, I mean, don't read it because it shows the conflict, according to Gore Vidal, between what society does, what it says it does, and what it feels. Don't read it because it will make you reconsider your ideas and values. Don't read it because it will make you laugh, cry, or think. Read it because it will make you snicker. Henry Miller says so, and he should know.

Ecumenical Council Hopes To End Religious Division

By Donna Haraway

In a world of tragic division, fanaticism, and hate, meaningless religious separation is less a tolerable situation than ever. This is the guiding principle and pregnant hope of Vatican II, the ecumenical council called by Pope John XXIII and continued by Paul VI.

The Council first assembled in September of 1962 after extensive preparatory work by commissions representing very broad lines of theological opinion. As a sign of the mood of the Council, numerous representatives of the Protestant and Orthodox faiths were invited. After a few months of ground work, the session adjourned to give the bishops, cardinals, laymen, and commissions time to break up into smaller groups to consider without pressure the areas opened up. Rescheduled in September, 1963, the Council has again called an intermission until next September.

A great part of the Council work is done by specific commissions, each consisting of thirty members from all corners of the Church. Final decisions are based on a majority vote of the bishops. Areas of concern run from sweeping reform of the liturgy, the public worship of the Church, in order to bring it into more meaningful relationship with local cultures, to discussion of freedom of individual conscience. The possibility of re-establishing the early custom of a married deaconate, especially in mission countries, is being seriously considered.

Increased local powers of bishops and national or language groups is a move to decentralize authority while maintaining essential unity through the pope. An appreciation of Catholic guilt in division, a deeper understanding of ethnic demands, and an honest effort to face the tremendous challenges to a valid Christian life are the issues Vatican II is concerned with.

The Council was called primarily to effect a Catholic renewal that can lead eventually to a reunion of all Christian peoples. Without the political pressure of many previous councils and of the Reformation itself, this is a chance for Christians to re-evaluate the words and forms they use to explain Christ and His Church. It is time to stop equating the traditional with Tradition, to check the corruption of hierarchical organization by needless centralization, to guard against making theological opinion more important than the essential dogmas and spirit of the Church.

The Church is trying to meet the legitimate demands of Protestant Christians, while asking others to meet her essential grounds. Hopefully, the Council will nail the lid on polemics, semantic misunderstanding, and downright cal-unmy and slander among Christians. The Council can be an important step in a continuing process of Church renewal, not revolution or reaction.

Hans King, a German theologian, has summed up the hopes and principles of Vatican II in his book, The Council, Reform, and Reunion. In it he clearly outlines

Sermon Title: "Man's Need and God's Action"

Worship Leader: Romelia Favrot
Preacher: Prof. Douglas A. Fox

This is the second Sunday in Advent, and our thought inevitably turns toward Christmas. Out of the unholy mixture of sacred and secular myth which surrounds this season, it becomes increasingly difficult to extract a meaning which rises above the level of fairy-tale sentimentality. Yet, it is to discover another kind of meaning that the Church calls us. There is something to be said about the birth of Jesus and its implications for the world which we may accept or reject, but which we must face if we would have any understanding of what Christmas has meant to generations of Christians.

Happy last weekend before dead-week. There are only five theatres still open, but a total of 10 movies will be shown by them between Tuesday and Friday the 13th (an ominous day on which to begin films).

"McIntock," "Under the Yum Yum Tree," "The Wheeler Dealers," "Take Her She's Mine," "The Man Who Shot Liberty Valance" and "Love Is a Liberty" are showing over the weekend. The latter two will give way on Sunday to "What Ever Happened to Baby Jane?" and "The Chapman Report" (not the Colorado College ASCO version). These leave on Wednesday, when "Come Fly With Me" and "From the Terrace" will be playing.

The Fine Arts Center Theatre is featuring the Civic Players' production of "No Time for Sergeants" tonight and tomorrow night, and Sunday afternoon (2:30 and 4:30) and Monday night (8:00) will show Gordon Palmquist's travogue, "Italy."

Thursday evening, Dec. 12, the Colorado Springs Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Walter Eisenberg, will present the Verdi Requiem. And thus ends "dead-week" entertainment.

Twenty-five dollars and thirty-eight cents has been added to the Shave Chime Fund, twenty-five dollars of which has been donated by one student, Mr. Louis Meyers. Thank you, Mr. Meyers. If one person can contribute that much, the eight-thousand dollar goal does not seem so far away. Several people have promised to contribute some of the money they receive as Christmas presents, so maybe next Christmas we can give to Colorado College a chime-ringing mechanism.

If I can look ahead a year, I guess I ought to back up 11

Kappas Hast Party

In what can justly be termed a departure from normal "pre-exam" activity, the members of Kappa Kappa Gamma Sorority officially celebrated the beginning of the holiday season with eggnog flowing to the tune of crumbling cookies and celestial caroling at their traditional Faculty Christmas Parties.

months from that start mentioning the 1964 Symposium, with all its movies, lectures, music, dramatics, and discussions, centered on "The Second World War." Our generation has never known the agonies of a "hot war"; perhaps it would benefit us to know something other than vague concepts about the one which has shaped all of our lives in innumerable ways.

the roles of authority, freedom, obedience, understanding, history in Catholic renewal. The goal is unity in essentials and freedom in uncertainties. A reorientation of Scriptural foundations in Christianity—especially in light of sociological, anthropological, and linguistic insights never before available—offers real hope for the success of the Council.

The honest effort is to "distinguish in doctrine as elsewhere between what is given, irreformably, by God through Christ in the Holy Spirit, and what comes, reformably, from men." It is a tragic mistake to let historical conditions, no longer valid, distort Christian understanding of essentials and above all of each other.

The Council is not minimizing the difficulties, but some concrete steps are being taken. Perhaps the most encouraging result of the unadorned Council is a mood of healthy openness and exchange. The work will not be complete for a long time; sheer size is a real problem. Over 93 languages are represented, a barrier partly overcome by the use of Latin. It is likely a great part of the remainder of the work will be carried out by correspondence, thus removing many delays. There will be no revolutions in basic truths of faith, but there is an effort to renew Catholic life in the best and broadest sense of those words.

Some specific acts of the Council to this point include broad permission to use the vernacular in the Mass and other parts of the liturgy. Guidelines of what to strive for are the goal, leaving how to the individual diocese. The nuptial blessing will be given at all marriages. Local traditional music in the liturgy is encouraged; this includes such things as the Mass sung to bongo drums and tribal chant. Laymen will be allowed to administer certain sacraments. Schemes on religious freedom, further organizational reform, etc., are in incomplete form. Finally, by taking time to think deeply about many basic aspects of the Church as she appears to herself and others, the Council is a sign of a major current of today: the desire and need to renew Christian understanding.

IFC Announces Change In Frat Rush Schedule

The Inter-Fraternity Council announces that fraternity rush week has been changed. January 18 and 19 will be the new dates for open houses, and the five days following (January 20-24) will be the dates of the individual fraternity preferential dinners to be held in the respective houses. Dates of each dinner will be announced later.

IFC hopes that these new dates will allow rushers to enjoy a longer vacation, while keeping Symposium week free for those who wish to attend.

Garner Gives the 'Word' In Perkins Hall Concert

By Penney Kimmel

A weekday noon might be a strange time to attend a concert but, as another gospel singer once remarked when the audience was reluctant to let her go, "seems like they was hungry for the Word." The spiritual singing of Valda Garner, like her religious conviction, is a voice that knows no time or place.

The program at Perkins Hall was delayed for half an hour which sorely discouraged those members of the audience who had heard Mrs. Garner at last January's Symposium and knew it was well worth waiting for.

The microphone Michael Grace used to introduce Mrs. Garner was not used again; the resonant tones of "Poor Little Jesus Boy" were carried note for note to every corner of the auditorium with apparently effortless phrasing and control. "Don't Leave Me, Lord" was a plea—simple, straightforward and powerful, and "I'm Ready to Serve My Lord" blended one note with the next until it appeared to be a chorus backing up a single pure voice.

Valda Garner uses the tricks of the jazz voice but under her command they become natural and honest, partly by reason of their lyric content and partly out of sheer emotional impact. She bends the notes, maintains an astounding volume, leans lightly on blue thirds and sevenths and concentrates on the twelve-measure line.

The full-throated feeling and expression of "Jesus, Be a Fence Around Me" swings (in the most infectious sense of the word) while the final selection, "In Times Like These, We Need a Savior," has a drama of its own that cannot be contained in any formal rhythmic pattern. In every gospel song, the beat is never imposed on Mrs. Garner—she emits a rhythmic spark of her own which ignites the listeners.

The added attraction of the rollicking "This Train" brought the audience into the magic circle and set them clapping almost involuntarily, from the first syllable.

The piano of Joe Phillips was most telling here. Though Mrs. Garner seldom uses the same accompanist, each one seems to know instinctively what she needs—backing for a highly individualized style that is subject to tonal and rhythmic alterations at a moment's notice, with never a false note or a hesitation.

If you're looking for a gospel singing or for an emotional experience that cannot be found on any cut-and-polished studio recording, join the congregation of Denver's Pentecostal Church any Sunday morning and listen to Valda Garner at her best. If you can't afford the fare or the time—make sure she's invited back to CC and keep the date, mind and heart open.

Although the Betas invited us to dinner three weeks ago, censorship has prevented us from describing the evening until now. We thank Frank Boyden for his skit which more than made up for the handsome sum paid by the Betas for the DG car washers at the United Fund Auction.

Congratulations go to our new officers who are: Ann Doremus, president; Cindy Pate and Sara Grogan, vice-presidents; Linda Lennartz, activities chairman; Linda Wangarin and Kathy Waterman, secretaries; Carol Rymer, treasurer; Margie Schmitz, social chairman; Sally Lentz, scholarship; Jo Heller, rush chairman; and Lynn Johnson, house chairman.

Tonight we will rush into the holiday season with our Christmas dance at the Gables. We have invited the D.G.'s to join us, since their dance was canceled two weeks ago. Continuing the holiday mood, we will have a Christmas Party with the Theta alums on Sunday. An exchange of gifts will highlight the occasion.

Plans are being made to visit the elderly residents of the Clair-Mor Nursing Home, our local philanthropy, next semester.

Balanced Rock got more than tourist trade last Tuesday "... behind the Kissing Camels ..." turned out to be a spot some blocks south; nevertheless our hearty group of mountain climbers vowed not to give up the chase for our elusive pledge class. Seriously, our thanks to the pledges for a new slant on sneaks; the Garden of the Gods should be grateful too.

Monday night we were surprised with a premature house warming party in the form of a kitchen shower. All sorts of goodies are now waiting to be used in our house.

Our congratulations to Lynn Ayers and Bill Pelz (Phi Gamma Delta) on their recent pinning.

Kappa Kappa Gamma

After a whirlwind week which saw Susie Mulliner's serenade, the arrival of our long-lost Field Secretary, Ann Fletcher, house decorating, and the traditional faculty Christmas parties ushering in the Yuletide season, Kappas are ready and waiting for fast-approaching finals. Well, maybe not ready, but waiting anyway. Susie and her pinmate, Greg Young, made it through formal pinning in grand style despite rather severe nervous tension on Susie's part. Before the advent of next week's Great Panic, we Kappas are looking forward as usual to Charlotte Adams' solo in the Christmas Concert Sunday. Good luck, Char. We also want to send rather belated but sincere thanks to Ann Williamson for her slides on Taipei.

Phi Delta Theta

Recently pinned were Fred King and Miss Kim Hall.

A couple weeks or so ago, the Phi held their annual Winter Formal at the Valley Hi Country Club. Intermission entertainment included "The Five Freshmen," accompanied by Vladimir Karpov and his "Dirty Rushins."

The "all par—no glory" officers were elected Monday night. Detailed lists of the winners and losers will be posted in inappropriate places throughout the campus.

This Monday evening, the Phi Delts will make their final social appearance of the semester at a dessert for the freshmen dorms, Ticknor and McGregor. The gala affair will be held in the Phi parking lot.

Phi Gamma Delta

Congratulations are in order this week for brothers John Simus, who is our newly elected President and for Steve Frough, who was elected recording secretary.

There was quite a bit of activity during the Thanksgiving holiday as the brothers that remained all helped in a basement remodeling program. Much work remains but we hope to have it completed by semester with luck. A Fiji fun-house fix-up function is contemplated to rally the brothers to the cause and have some fun in the meantime.

Beta Theta Phi

Saturday night we had our winter formal at the Paint Pony Country Club following dinner at the Red Cloud Inn. The Betas have no more excuse to study. Now we can spend our time constructively. Our pool table has a new felt and the cues have been retipped.

Notice!

The sign recently placed upon the Activities Center door is necessary because this is an activities center, not a study hall. Please use the library for studying so that students who want to use the center for activities may do so. Thank you. —RCB

Applications Open For Dutch Study

In 1946 the Netherlands College for Representation Abroad, also called Nijenrode, was founded by a group of businessmen who felt an urgent need for a practical training of students who would occupy a useful position in industry or commerce in post-war Holland or abroad. Since 1948 more than 1,500 men have graduated and today about 900 students are in residence, the vast majority of whom follow the regular two-year's course.

Nijenrode, based on a residential campus system, is fairly unique for the European continent as is its compulsory physical education averaging 6 hours a week. Both are incorporated in the college program to provide "a unique opportunity for the formation of character and personality." Most lectures are given in the campus' main building, an old and picturesque castle in a 65-acre park between Utrecht and Amsterdam.

Since about 10 years ago, Colorado College has sponsored a one-year exchange program with Nijenrode and whoever may have the opportunity to go there next year will find that most students and teachers reasonably understand English. However, they expect him to converse in Dutch within a reasonable time. Therefore, not enough emphasis can be put on his starting to learn that complicated language as soon as he knows that he is selected—and I will of course be glad to assist him.

The regular Nijenrode student spends less time on self-study than the CC student. This is because of his having to attend some 43 hours of lectures a week and also because of a heavier accent on extra-curricular activities. All students belong to one fraternity and as members of the many sub-committees and students fill at least one "responsible position and so acquire experience in leadership, organization and initiative." The CC exchange student will have only about 25 hours of courses a week, including lessons in Dutch, sports and whatever subjects he is interested in. The main advantage of his living in one of the three dorms is his being in close contact with the Nijenrode students whose ages range between 17 and 27. Most of the students live relatively close to the college which enables them to go home on the weekends, often inviting one of the five American exchange students to join them. Thus, the exchange student will become more familiar with the Dutch way of life and sometimes long-lasting friendships are established. In addition to the regular courses, weekly excursions to business and commercial houses are organized and there often are many agreeable activities on the weekends. On weekday evenings the exchange student will have ample opportunities to have a night on the town in Utrecht or Amsterdam and he will also find that the most popular meeting place on campus is the student-operated bar in the dungeons of the castle where the beer is better and the drinks are cheaper than in the United States.

An important matter is who should apply. I am sorry to say that girls can't, and as far as boys are concerned, the exchange program is meant only for majors or potential majors in business administration or economics—due to most Nijenrode courses belonging to that category. For these majors, Nijenrode may prove a very valuable experience; they will see what they have studied or will study, not only from a more European point of view, but also from a more practical angle—especially if they participate in the one-month January practical working period at a firm in Holland or any European country of which they speak the language fluently.

Last year's CC exchange student was Dennis Faulk; he and I will welcome any questions that you may have about the CC-Nijenrode exchange program.—Emile G. Duyster

CC's Foreign Student Committee Announces Scholarship Exchange

The Foreign Student Committee announces the opening of competition for the Colorado College-Nijenrode Scholarship Exchange Program for the school year 1964-65. In keeping with the preferences of NOIB (Netherlands Institute for Representation Abroad), candidates must be male and should be intending to major in business or economics, although consideration may be given to others who have had one year in economics or accounting. Although the program is designed as a junior year abroad, senior candidates will be considered if they demonstrate willingness to return to Colorado College for a full fifth year.

Basically, the NOIB is a two-year institute designed to produce young businessmen who are prepared to take up careers in international export and import trade right after graduation. The school itself is residential, and numerous excursions are made to various international corporations situated in Holland. All classes are given in the Dutch language, but special courses are provided for the five Americans (including the CC representative) who normally participate in the program. For more complete information concerning the school itself, please contact Dennis E. Faulk and Emile Duyster.

The Foreign Student Committee will appoint a special committee of students and faculty to review the applications and to conduct interviews with each of the candidates. Through this interview, the committee will attempt to make an assessment of the applicant's seriousness of purpose, his personal diplomacy, and his knowledge of NOIB and of Holland. All application material should be given to Mr. Garner on or before Feb. 1, 1964.

NOTICE!

Olympians Defeat Tigers with Three First Period Goals

Last Saturday the United States Olympic hockey team defeated the CC Tigers 4-2. The Olympians captured an early lead by scoring three goals in the first period. Gary Schmalzbauer scored at 4:11 and a little more than a minute later Wayne Meredith scored the second goal. Dan DiIworth scored the third goal at 13:30 to end the scoring in the first period.

In the second period at 11:31 Paul Coppo scored the last goal for the Olympians against Art Warwick. With less than a minute remaining in the period Tom Brindley fired a screaming slap shot past the Olympic goalie, Godfrey Wood, from about 50 feet.

Bob Otto scored for the Tigers for the last time with a shot past Wood that hit the upper corner of the net.

After the first three goals were scored on them, CC settled down and played with determination. It is very possible that the score would have been much higher against the Tigers except for the spectacular goal tending by Art Warwick.

Warwick made 48 saves in the game while Wood made only 16. Some people said that CC should have won the game by the good chances which were missed. The Tigers did fail to capitalize at certain times, but the Olympians also were robbed of several chances by Art Warwick.

In two weeks, the Tigers play Michigan State in two games at the Broadmoor. With continued determination and more practice, Coach Johnson should be able to have his team in fine shape for the oncoming games.

Easter Mexico Trip Planned

Colorado College Easter Holiday in Mexico has been planned again for this year, from March 26 to April 7. The students participating will be treated to a delightful vacation under the direction of Miss Clayton and the World Wide Travel Agency.

By popular request, Carlos, last year's extremely lively and congenial Mexican guide, will again be leading the group. Any interested student may join the tour by contacting Miss Clayton by January 31, 1964.

A $50.00 deposit of the total $275.00 will be required at that time (this includes many meals, all lodging in Mexico, and transportation from Juarez and back, as well as the tour features). No knowledge of Spanish is necessary.

The plans for this year's trip include four days in Mexico City, and seven days in the surrounding area, visiting Taxco, Oaxaca, and Cuernavaca. In the capital city of Mexico, some of the highlights will be a morning at the pyramids, an evening attending a performance of the renowned Ballet Folklorico, a Sunday afternoon at the Bull Fights, and a general tour of this unique city—from its gardens and castles to its modern buildings.

The days away from Mexico City will be spent visiting the extraordinary ruins of Teotihuacan, the silver works of Taxco, and seeing life in some of the Zapotec Indian villages.

There will be much time for relaxing and shopping to add to a complete vacation. It is anticipated that in Mexican tradition, all the hotels will attempt to earn the reputation for being the most hospitable—making each day a pleasure. Detailed itineraries are available at Institute desk.

Yuletide Yuk

This Saturday is the day for Christmas cheer on the new ice rink! In fact, this is Christmas weekend in Rastall Center. Come Friday afternoon from 3:00 on for decorating Rastall from stem to stern, followed by an FAC with Mike Sabom's band in the Hub. Prizes will be given for the best area decorated, so contact a Rastall Center Board member if you have any ideas; otherwise, just come.

Saturday is the big night. Beginning at 8:00, ice skating for two hours on the rink is "in." In fact, it's free. Then just come to the dining room for a dance (this time it's 25¢) in your skating clothes. Caroling in the lounge for the evening, so bring your best voice if you don't skate. This year's "Yuletide Yuk" is the best ever, so come and bring your friends, and watch the faculty fall on the ice (they'll all be there!)

Hockey Rules Explained For Benefit of Audience

By Herman Whitton

For the benefit of those who find hockey confusing, here are a few of the rules and penalties that the player must observe.

Offsides: You will notice the rink has two blue lines dividing the rink into three areas or zones. No player may enter the penalty's zone unless the puck is in the zone already, or unless the puck is carried into the zone on the stick of the player ahead of him. If any player on the attacking team does not comply with this, a whistle is blown and a face off is held outside the defender's zone.

Going the Puck: This offense occurs whenever the puck goes through two blue zones without being touched by any player, and when it is touched by a defender after going through the zones. This results in a face off at the other end of the rink, where the puck is "faced."

High Sticking: This foul occurs when a man lifts his stick above his hips in order to knock the puck down. This also causes a face off.

Palming the Puck: A player is not allowed to touch the puck with an open hand, and must bat the puck only with his hand. If he closes his hand on the puck or catches the puck in the air, the penalty is a face off.

Charging, Hooking, Tripping: These are different ways in which the play of the game becomes obstructed. These fouls are usually penalized by a two minute minor penalty. Charging is called when a defenseman has to take more than two steps while executing a body check. Hence, someone may not skate from one end of the rink to the other and then plow into the man with the puck.)

Drawing Blood, Spearing, etc.: These fouls are usually called when violent attacks are made on some individual. They are major penalties and can last from ten minutes to the entire game.

Spring Semester In Paris Program Offered in 1964

Applications are due Tuesday, Dec. 10, for a special spring semester in Paris program to be conducted in 1964 by the Institute of European Studies, Chicago-headquartered nonprofit institution specializing in overseas programs for US college undergraduates.

The new program will stress French language study and other courses taught entirely in French by French university professors. The fee for the program will be $1,230 or $1,500 including transatlantic passage.

Students accepted for the program will sail February 1, 1964, and return after the end of the program late next June.

Further information is available from the Institute of European Studies, 35 E. Wacker Dr., Chicago, Ill. The Institute also conducts full year and spring semester programs at the University of Vienna and the University of Freiburg, West Germany.

students and faculty be made aware of its existence and of its new approach to actual student participation.

Their aims and goals can partially be achieved by the committee taking the responsibility of planning new projects which would exhibit their desire and willingness to participate in one of the most important phases of college life.

First semester projects have included the possibility of establishing a German student abroad and exchange program as a beginning of a junior year abroad program; secondly a study has been launched to establish student participation on the board of admissions for next year's freshman class, and finally a resolution was given to the Dean of the College stating that greater student attendance at faculty and all college lectures would be achieved if a moratorium on tests would be observed by the faculty on days following these lectures.

There are further ideas and suggestions which will be looked into in much greater detail second semester. The establishment of a spring student lecture series, the preparation of a list for sophomores stating the requirements and course description of the different majors, and the compiling of a reading list for freshmen and upperclassmen are only a few of the proposed undertakings.

The members of the Academic Committee include seniors Mike Durfee, Marla Bullock, Norm Liden, Ken Reeves, and Dave Holdorf; juniors, Jim Heckman and Sue Caudill; sophomores Beth Anneberg, Brad Scharf and Dee Wilson.

If any student has suggestions or ideas concerning the academic policy or curriculum at Colorado College they should be brought to the attention of one of these committee members, for only through this means of cooperation will the Student Academic Committee be able to function to make the voice of the students heard.

FASCINATED FRESHMEN LISTEN closely as President Worner answers one of their many searching questions.

Frosh Problems Discussed By President Worner Dec. 3

President Lloyd Worner was honored guest of the freshman class Tuesday, December 3, at a dinner in the Rastall Center Dining Room. The President and the freshmen class were entertained during the dinner by the Colorado College Glee Club led by Dwight Kramer.

A good time was had by all at dinner, and President Worner is reported to have enjoyed participating in a facet of student life, about which he had been largely enlightened.

Scheduled after dinner was a "question and answer" period in the main lounge of Slocum Hall. This session was attended by approximately one-hundred students, including many upperclassmen. At this time the President was taken to task to explain the policies of Colorado College concerning student life, places of study, future housing situations, and many other topics.

During the course of the four-hour visit, the first and most obvious point which arose was that pertaining to the poor academic record of many of the freshmen.

During the discussion many factors were presented such as the dispersal of the occupants in the dorms for one another, the lack of an atmosphere conducive to study in the library, and the difficult work expected by the instructors. President Worner reminded the students that college life is, of necessity, a more difficult life and that more should be expected of college people. He was willing to admit, however, that the curriculum is harder than it has been in the past and the instructors should have some measure of consideration for the students.

It was observed by many students that social life—which is an integral part of college life—

Notice!
In last week's TIGER, Josef Korbel was mistakenly identified as an Eastern European Communist. Mr. Korbel is actually an anti-Communist Czech who now teaches at Denver University.

is almost impossible for the CC freshman, due to limitations placed on him by such things as deferred rush, a "no cars for freshmen" policy, a lack of activities from the Rastall Center Board and others. The fact that it is nearly impossible for a boy and a girl to be alone anywhere near the campus was reiterated time and time again.

President Worner expressed sympathy for the students on all these points. His view was that some rules of deferred rush might be eased such as the one which states that freshman boys cannot ride in a car with the fraternity men. He stated that if certain individuals were always seen together, that this could be construed to be dirty rush, but that it is sometimes almost necessary for a freshman boy to catch a ride from a frat man.

President Worner, though suggesting no answer to the question concerning cars for freshmen, said that he thought a feasible plan could be worked out, although he thought the parents of the stu-

Budget Reaches 4 Million Mark

Colorado College today reported a $4 million operating budget for the first time in its history.

Robert W. Broughton, vice president and treasurer, said the operating budget has more than doubled in the past seven years, with operating expenditures for the 1956-57 fiscal year totaling $1,695,000. More than $2,450,000 has been allocated for general education expenditures for the current fiscal year, which started July 1.

The college has a scholarship budget of $338,000 this year, Broughton said. Some 318 students already have received scholarships amounting to $319,000. More than half of them are from Colorado.

Poet Spender to Speak On Pre-War Literature

By Alex Primm

Mainly concerned with the literary aspects of the World War II era, Stephen Spender is one of the more well known participants in the quickly approaching 1964 symposium.

Mr. Spender will give this year's Denarest Lloyd Memorial Lecture on Wednesday of the Symposium week at 8:15 in Shove Chapel. He will speak on "The Literary Mood of the 1930's and 1940's," the period during which he achieved his greatest fame as a poet.

Born in 1909 near London, he attended Oxford and turned to writing poetry along with W. H. Auden and C. Day Lewis. Having been influenced by his father, a liberal journalist, as well as leftist friends, Spender became briefly associated with the Communist party. His book, Forward From Liberalism, which he no longer supports, was chosen for a Communist "book-of-the-month club" in Britain.

During this period of the 1930's many writers and intellectuals were communists or at least sympathized with their cause because of the failure of European democracies to stem the tide of Fascism. Many of Spender's poems, like the novels of Malraux in China, Koestler in Germany, Steinbeck in the United States, reflect his political ideas.

Even though Spender rejected Communism, he did not reject what it was supposedly fighting for: a classless society based on the common good. While the majority of the writers of this period dropped their party connections with the signing of the Nazi-Soviet Pact in 1939, Spender's disillusionment came earlier, when he realized that Russia would use any means to achieve its ends.

In The God That Failed, Spender says, "Because I do not believe that the central organizations of the Communists are capable of making a classless society, or indeed of doing anything except establishing the rule of a peculiarly vindictive and jealous bureaucracy, I do not feel that I should surrender my own judgment to theirs, however powerful and effective theirs may be, however ineffective my own."

Spender's poetry during the 1930's often bitterly attacks the society of Britain and the western world which refused even to support the struggling democracy in Spain against Fascism. In one poem, he pleads, "oh young men oh young comrades it is too late now to stay in those houses/your fathers built where they built you to build to breed/money on money . . ."

In 1937 Spender visited Spain to attend a conference of Communist writers supporting the Republican cause against Franco. The bitter and often bloody conflict between the Communists and the other parties supporting the erupible helped to turn him from the "double think" Communist policies.

Handel's 'Te Deum' Performed At Christmas Choir Concert

By Michael Grace

Last Sunday, the college choir, under the direction of Mr. Donald Jenkins, presented its annual Christmas Concert, consisting of one large work—Handel's "Dettingen Te Deum." The piece was composed in 1734 to commemorate the victory of George II over the French at Dettingen on June 26 of that same year. In order to fulfill this function, it was clear that Handel would have to write a work of majestic, if not monimental, nature, and this is exactly what he did. In general, Sunday's performance lived up to these demands. There were a few shortcomings, some of which were most likely unavoidable, but which should be mentioned.

The orchestra, consisting of faculty, students and local musicians gave an excellent performance. The quality of the sound was professional (as were many of the members of the orchestra), and the technical musical elements exacting. It is part of the style of this music that all innuendos of melody and rhythm should be deliberate, and that they were. Yet in relation to the nature of the work, it is unfortunate that there were no brass instruments, which were called for in the score, and that furthermore, there was a shortage of oboes. Certainly the most distinguishing element of Handel's instrumental music is his use of winds and brass, and for this reason, whenever possible, the correct instrumentation should be included. Yet the fine quality of what was done with what was available still deserves praise.

Most of his recent writing has been prose, dealing with the problems brought on by the cold war. While this recent work lacks the power and conviction of his earlier poems, it shows that Spender has not lost the insight he had during the more violent 30's.

Besides the lecture he is giving on the literary aspects of the war years, Spender will discuss the "war novel" with Dwight McDonald on Wednesday, January 15, at 4:00 and read a selection of war poetry the next day at 9:00.

Soloists for the performance were Charlotte Adams, alto, Paul Tatter, tenor, and Ben Lyon, bass. While all three soloists should receive credit for the one, well-sung trio, Mr. Lyon performed three bass solos and deserves special attention. As has been mentioned above performance of Bampton above performance of Bampton.

THE YUK

Saturday's "Yuletide Yuk" was a surprising success, largely because of the Winter Wonderland, White Christmas atmosphere imparted to the ice rink by Rastall Center Board. Its very success, however, points up a pressing need at Colorado College.

What became the "Yuletide Yuk" was initially placed on the calendar as a full-fledged all-school Christmas Formal. Somewhere between summer's hopes and winter's reality came a considerable comedown for the ambitions of Rastall Center Board, which had originally, and we think rightly, seen the need for such an all-school function near the end of the semester.

Largely because of the apparently untenable possibility of a conflict or overlap with fraternity or sorority formals, the Board decided to avoid a possible formal failure by sponsoring an informal on-campus dance instead.

This tendency on the part of campus organizations to defer to Greek social functions leads inevitably to a preemption by fraternities and sororities of the college social calendar. In turn non-Greeks and the entire freshman class are deprived of virtually all organized social activity through the first semester of each year, that semester during which freshmen formulate their views of the college. This fragmentation of campus social life for the freshmen, who have little choice but to remain on campus, may well be part of the explanation for their reportedly widespread dissatisfaction with CC.

What is needed is a recognition of the forced social isolation of a sizable part of the student body and an earnest effort by organizations like Rastall Center Board to end this isolation by sponsoring more all-school functions, and by sponsoring a greater diversity of such functions.

Saturday's Yuk was a somewhat spasmodic movement in the right direction, but something more than an extended Friday Afternoon Club was needed as a Christmas dance. The Rastall Board, by shrinking before the possibility of any sort of conflict with other groups, failed to carry out its responsibility to all the students of the college.

THE 1964 SYMPOSIUM

With a full year of planning behind it, the 1964 Symposium on "The Second World War" is beginning to assume tangible form as an event which should prove fully as rewarding for all members of the Colorado College community as was last year's study of "Contemporary Arts and the Citizen."

One of the most rewarding and encouraging aspects of last year's Symposium was the heavy attendance during a period of the year when students were under absolutely no coercion to spend their time doing anything in particular, let alone to spend it thinking or attempting to delve more deeply into something previously little known. That an overwhelming majority of CC students took part in last year's program was a tribute to the students themselves as well as to those who planned and conducted the Symposium.

This year's program promises to be as searching and comprehensive in its analysis of a special topic as was that of 1963. Hopefully it will be as well attended.

LETTERS to the EDITORS

To the Editors:

I would like to take this opportunity to use The Tiger as my sounding board concerning the controversy over the Greek System. Some of the non-Greeks in print in your newspaper have forced the Greeks to pause and make a careful re-evaluation of their aims and — what is more important — if and in what manner these aims are being realized at CC. Any organization needs to have its purposes questioned periodically. It also needs to be able to present these purposes. This was well done by Dave Holdorf in a gentlemanly manner.

I am afraid I can't say as much about the majority of the comments being made by non-Greeks. The valid points they can present and have presented have been lost in a muddle of senseless, very crude, illogical and childish ranting. In point are the publications of "The Weakly Bitch." Surely most of the non-Greeks, except "the if," are ashamed to have this material circulating. (I wasn't aware that "non-Greek" necessarily meant "anti-Greek"), but I have heard of no non-Greeks objecting. Maybe they feel it is not even worthy of comment. I myself have felt this, but Vol. 4, No. 4 (December 6, 1963) of "The Weakly Bitch" handed me my last straw. If the Greeks had created a similar bit of poetry from the opposite side of the fence, they would have been bodily ousted from the campus by the time this goes into print!

Incidentally, who are you, if? Aren't you man enough to stand behind your scathing attacks?

In January the anti-Greeks are going to have new fuel for their fire of protest in the form of fraternity and sorority "Rush." It is true that Rush is cruel for all involved — the persons rushing and the persons being rushed. But for many years Greeks have attempted to devise another plan for accepting selected persons to live in their groups. No plan has resulted, other than modification of the present plan, so next year just as this year the protest will continue, and more people will be disappointed. Many non-Greeks are happy they are non-Greeks. There are also many Greeks who are happy to be Greeks. As the old saying goes, "To each his own."

The choice between independent living and Greek living is as personal as choosing a religion. Nevertheless the friction is going to continue, abetted by those people who will be dropped from Rush.

In answer to the attacks leveled at the Greek System, whether a person is Greek or whether he is unaffiliated doesn't determine the worth of his character. That can only be determined by the individual and what he makes of himself.

Please don't fall back on the sour grapes attitude, claiming loudly that all Greeks are snobs,

OPINION

By Genevieve Vaughn

Many students are finding it impossible to spend as much time as they would like in pulling together the loose ends of their courses, giving themselves a coherent picture of the semester's work, or studying for exams, because of heavy assignments, or tests during the last week of classes, and because of the lack of a reading period this semester.

The reading period was not included in this semester's schedule because, since the semester must end before Christmas and it was felt that beginning classes in August was the best of the question, it was simply impossible to include three or four days of reading period in the schedule. In order to extend as much as possible the limited time available for classes, the administration lengthened the period of instruction by four days, beginning one day earlier, ending two days later, and eliminating the one day reading period of last year's schedule. This was felt to be the only solution, although many faculty members are in favor of a reading period.

The calendar adopted in 1961-62 added one day to the exam period in an attempt to ease the pressure on students. However this extra day does little to remedy the situation during the last week of classes and does not help those who have exams during the first days of exam week.

Dead week, contrary to the belief of most students, is not prohibited assignments or tests, but only social activities, was abandoned in 1963 because the administration felt that was impossible to enforce.

Without any reading period and with no defense against unusual assignments during the week before exams, with the shorter semester in addition, the average student finds himself in a straining bind. It is simply not true that an efficient student can complete every bit of reading before the last week of school or finish every assignment ahead of time. Something has to come last.

The cramped situation would be greatly improved if the semester could be arranged, perhaps by beginning one day earlier, to include at least one day of reading period, and more teachers showed an appreciation of the very real pressure upon students during the days immediately before exams.

or that you wouldn't have that life if someone gave it to you.

This is taken for exactly what it is — "sour grapes." In the three years that I have been at Colorado College I have never heard a Greek run down a non-Greek simply because he was unaffiliated. You are judged on your own merit, not on the right of someone else.

Can we not work hard for ourselves and for our college and stop splitting the campus up into bitter, petty factions?

To the Editors:

The Black and Gold organization has received a bill from Couture's Cleaners for Miss Sharon Flett's sweater, dress and skirt, and Miss Ann Bryant's underwear. We hope that by reimbursing these two girls for any damages they might have received at our hands, we will dispel any notions remaining on the campus that our organization is a group of rabble rousers.

Films to Play Important Role in the Symposium

By Sue Auer

One of the highlights of the Symposium will be the films which will be shown every day during the week.

These films range in type from Nazi propaganda to documentary films, from feature films to cartoons.

Of Triumph of the Will, the Museum of Modern Art says that the supposed documentary was actually staged like a Hollywood production. Those to be impressed were not the participants in the Nazi Party Conference at Nuremberg, but the battery of 93 cameras who were present.

Hitler is exalted as a demi-god, his cohorts achieve only slightly lesser stature, and other nations are warned at great oratorical length.

La Retour is one of the most moving documentaries to come out of World War II. Edited by the photographer Cartier-Bresson, this film catches poignant images from the stream of events. The soldiers are coming home. In their eyes one can see their incredulity at sudden salvation after so much suffering. Their relatives eyes are equally naked.

Munro is a delightful cartoon by Jules Feiffer. Munro is only four years old, but Uncle Sam wants him anyway, so off he goes. He passes his physical with flying colors ("Buttun me Mister") and leads a thoroughly exemplary life as a soldier until he decides he has had enough of the Army games.

At this point he breaks into tears and points out that he is, after all, only four years old. The commander reminds him that soldiers don't cry, and then realizes that it is perfectly logical that this soldier do so.

Open City is the film that established the fame of Rossellini, Fellini, and Anna Magnani. It was made in Rome before the German soldiers pulled out. Such comforts as studios and conventional locations were simply not available, and the precedent for realistic filming was set that was to influence all post-war films of its nature.

About this film, the New York Times said: "Screen drama of tremendous power in which the techniques of realism—and the attitudes—are shattering. The performances, writing, and directing are excellent and unqualifiedly fine. Brilliant illumination of hu-

War Music to Be Discussed At Symposium

In the words of Professor Carlton Gamer, "It is difficult to write great music in war time. Music, being a social art, has great significance during times of stress. It stirs up emotions and holsters morale."

Professor Gamer went on to say that music as other arts during periods of historical upset, contributes to a combined effort of a given nation in creating an emotional patriotic force. Music, therefore, often has a chauvinistic purpose.

It is not considered in its own right but rather as an attribute of the patriotic effort, and for that reason war music is often not particularly good music. War music usually tends to have popular appeal, and even the more serious concert music frequently smacks of programmatic qualities, like background music for a war movie.

However, some music pierces the limiting purposes of patriotic responses and tries to capture some of the tragic sufferings of the war. For example, Martin's "Memorial to Lidice" (describing the scene of a massacre by the Nazis) or Schoenberg's "Survivor From Warsaw" and "Ode to Napoleon" (the latter a deeply cynical work which obviously referred to Hitler but ostensibly to Napoleon). These pieces along with some others infused by the tragedy of war may be considered among the best.

World War II was a great boon to music in the United States. Many composers came here as a result of the deplorable conditions in Europe (for example, Schoenberg, Hindemith, Bartok, Martin, and literally hundreds of others).

Professors Gamer and Seay will present a program during the symposium giving examples of typical World War II music. They will choose pieces from some countries immediately involved in the war, for example from France; Milhaud's "Suite Française," from Russia, Shostakovich's "The Leningrad Symphony," from the United States "The Ballad for Americans." These works will be played, analyzed and discussed.

man qualities. One of the best in 40 years."

Night and Fog is directed by Alain Renais. It is the predecessor of Hiroshima Mon Amour. This film focuses on the incredible universe of the concentration camp.

The brilliant young director, Francois Trouffaut, had called Night and Fog the most important picture in his life, artistically, politically and in every other way. "It is certainly a powerful and terrible document, which all the living owe to all those dead to keep available the freshness of its horrors forever," said Brendan Gill, of The New Yorker.

Freshmen Show Dissatisfaction: Want Activity, Social Outlets

By Frances Ponnell

There have been rumors circulating recently of some dissatisfaction in the freshman class. This dissatisfaction is not a new development but one which has just recently come to light in the statement that 40% of the class have requested transfer slips and 69% of the boys received deficiency slips at mid-term.

It certainly doesn't seem that this is a normal record for a freshman class and the fact that there is a problem is evident. The question which remains to be answered is whether the problem is a result of the students themselves or of some element of CC life.

Many freshmen seem to feel that the problem stems from an attitude that CC is just an overgrown prep school. This attitude is due, in part, to the discrepancy between what CC is actually like and how it was presented in the material prospective students received. The impression which was conveyed by this material was that CC is a big campus always bustling with activity.

The letdown felt by freshmen seeing the campus for the first time is illustrated by the freshman who was wondering where The Hub, the center of all the Big Activity was, only to discover that he was standing right in it. The impression that the student body itself, was full of excitement and enthusiasm was dispelled at the first football game and the first class discussion.

Other students feel that this attitude is a result of the activities, school sponsored and otherwise, during freshman orientation week. From the events of this rather disillusioning week, rivalries developed not only between the freshmen and upper-classesmen, but among the freshmen themselves. It is hard to forget that "Joe Smith over there" failed to support his class when he was needed. This is the first year that the freshmen have lost the fight and as a result an "I could care less" attitude might easily have developed.

Nearly every freshman emphasized that the problem was due to a lack of social activities. This deficiency involves many different factors in CC campus life. First, the freshmen boys have no convenient way of getting off campus. If they want to go some place, they either walk or have to ask some unaffiliated upperclassman to give them a lift.

Of course, with this in mind, they are hesitant to ask a girl out, realizing that it would involve a long cold walk or the expense of a taxi. This wouldn't be such a problem if there were always plenty of activities taking place on campus. As it stands now, it is felt that there is nothing to do after 10:30 except return to the dorm or out to the bleachers.

The lack of transportation also rules out the opportunity of taking advantage of the activities the Colorado Springs area offers. I wonder how many freshmen have been to the mountains, or explored the local tourist attractions, or have taken advantage of or know about the facilities at the Broadmoor.

Freshmen girls feel that their main problems in dating lie in the fact that most freshmen boys don't date, and except for the first two or three weeks, there haven't been very many opportunities to become acquainted with upperclass boys.

Many students feel that the problem is a result of the emphasis placed on academics. They find it is impossible to take an evening off, whether to attend a lecture or have some fun, without getting behind. Considering the cost of tuition, one expects the work to be difficult, however not at the expense of activities which help to develop the individual as a whole. Several suggestions have been made as to how the situation might be improved second semester and for next year's freshmen. Nearly everyone felt that a more accurate picture of CC should be presented, diminishing the effort to make CC another Yale or Harvard. They also felt that Freshman Orientation Week should not be abolished, but enacted in a spirit which would tend to integrate the class into the school rather than make it the rival of the other classes.

Suggestions were also made that might give the freshman a greater opportunity for social activities. These included allowing the freshmen to have cars, increasing the number of social activities on campus, a student union or something similar where the students could dance and play records, softening the IFC rules, and the construction of a 3.2 place near campus.

The latter would give students a place to go on weekend nights, a place for quick, relaxing breaks, or a place to sit and talk to professors and buddies over beer. I wonder if the administration realizes how important it is to just be able to completely relax sometimes. Without this it is difficult to return to one's studies with a refreshed enthusiastic outlook.

Finally, it was suggested that the freshman boy might adopt a new attitude toward dating. Instead of calling a girls up a few hours before to ask for a date, he might try it a few days before. Also an effort might be made to create one's own fun on campus.

There are lots of crazy things to do and there are also many girls who sit in the dorms on weekends who would much rather be skating, learning how to play pool or cards, or just goofing around. We should be mature enough by now to realize that entertainment cannot always be provided and that one can create one's own fun through initiative and imagination.

Finley Speaks To Phi Delt

Last Thursday night, the Phi Delt hosted the third in their continuing series of "great ideas" lecture and discussion programs. Guest participant was Dr. Finley of the political science department who presented his views on the implications of the President's assassination.

Approaching the topic first in terms of the national temperament which apparently had become fertile ground for such an incident, Dr. Finley pointed to the so-called extremist factions and their radical doctrines as prime contributors to the growing "fashion of hate."

Directing his comments to the immediate political consequences, Dr. Finley suggested in light of his previous comments, the perhaps weakened position of Goldwater and the venting into the political scene of Mr. Nixon.

Earlier this year, the members of Phi Delta Theta discussed (with Dr. Hochman) possible avenues of extending their work as a cooperative organization and as a group further their contributions to the academic and social tents of the college community.

Following an evening of Symposium discussion with Dr. Sonderrmann, the Phi organized their symposium committee which is presently in the process of inviting Mr. Spender and other program participants to entertain informal group discussions during Symposium Week.

Xmas Spirit Hits Bemis

Last Monday night Bemis Hall had a decorating party—and the girls had a ball. It started with a fifteen minute black-out. (Ever try to light a cigarette in the dark?)

But soon everyone quit screaming out the windows as the counselors—and Mom Russom—came around in nightcaps to invite the dorm to a tree party in the lobby. A candle lit procession started down the stairs and the Christmas carols echoed.

The tree and the lobby were quickly decorated with boughs, bows, and mistletoe to the tune of seasonal songs beautifully descanted by Carol Parsons and Margie Ryan. A fire was lit as a bit of snow obligingly fell outside. Then everyone went up to bed (or English papers) feeling warm and peaceful.

The Village Idiot

By Caroline Creyke

Sitting here under a ladder in Rastall, my black umbrella opened full above me and the nine black cats I hold in my lap, I look darkly through my cracked glass and see reflections of a Christmas tree star and students cramming. This week, nobody is saying "Thank God it's Friday!"

Nevertheless, all but the really far behind (and methinks even they) are going to take some type of study-break, hence I am not yet out of a job. Tonight only, the chief is putting on a "Friday the Thirteenth Jinx Show" (their title, not mine)—Barry Sullivan in "Pyro, the Thing Without a Face." Otherwise, "McLintock" will play there through Wednesday night. Next day starts Walt Disney's "Incredible Journey."

The Peak features Laurence Harvey and Lee Remick in "The Running Man" this weekend and Yu Brynner (love him) in "Kings of the Sun" starting Wednesday. The Broadmoor is now showing "Lilies of the Field" with Sidney Poitier.

Tonight is the last time to catch "Take Her She's Mine" at the Cooper, but I think 'tis better to wait until tomorrow when "The Leopard" (Burt Lancaster) starts.

"Fun in Acapulco" will begin there on Thursday.

The Ute gets the prize for the best double feature: "Vertigo" and "To Catch a Thief"—both Alfred Hitchcock's—are there through Wednesday. But then "Who's Minding the Store" (Jerry Lewis again) starts there Thursday, so I guess it all balances out in the end.

"From the Terrace" and "Come Fly With Me" are at the Eighth Street for the last times tonight. Saturday, "The Days of Wine and Roses" and "Oklahoma" begin. Wednesday, "Return to Peyton Place" and "The Horizontal Lieutenant"—an odd combination—start.

Nate Cloak, John Pasley, and Dale Spall—the Goldcamp Trio (not the Rampart Range Ramblers; my mistake; my apologies)—are playing both Friday and Saturday nights at the Chat.

Shove Chimé money is coming in slowly but surely. Miss Terry Kidner, a 1963 graduate, has sent in a check for two dollars and fifty cents, and Cindy Lee Muntwyler has added five dollars to the cause.

I'm having an open-house the Sunday after Christmas (December 28), so if you're going to be in the Chicago area, do drop in for a cup of Christmas cheer.

Applications Open For Dutch Study

Those students applying for Netherlands study should submit applications to Mr. Carlton Ganner, Foreign Student Advisor and professor of music.

The application consists of four parts. The student must submit a letter to the Foreign Student Committee, outlining the reasons why he wishes to study in Holland, his plans and what he hopes to gain through the exchange.

A statement concerning the student's background, including information about his interests, hobbies, personal data, educational data and experience, including organizational affiliations and offices held should accompany the letter.

A transcript of the student's grades and three letters of recommendation from CC professors complete the application requirements.

Since the deadline for applications is February 1, 1964, candidates are urged to submit their applications as soon as possible.

Cambridge Debaters Steal The Show from CC Stars

By Arlene Kaplan

Susan Caudill and David Helms, members of the CC debate team, joined two debaters from Cambridge University on Thursday evening, December 5, in an exchange of witticisms while debating "Law and justice are incompatible in a capitalistic society."

The English debaters are graduate law students on a tour of 43 debates and were brought to Colorado College under the joint auspices of the Debate Club and the Religious Affairs Committee.

As Mr. Kenneth Burton explained in his introductory remarks, the style of debate varies greatly between England and the United States. Perhaps the most noticeable difference in Thursday's debate was the degree of formality and sobriety to which the debaters were accustomed. In the United States debate is a relatively formal and serious affair, whereas in England the format is not as rigid and the speakers cultivate a hitting, sardonic humor.

Thursday night's debate was a combination of the two styles, with the participants using the American format but filling it with the British spirit and humor.

CC Has Two On All-RMC Team

Two Colorado College footballers, hailing from distant parts of the globe, have been named to the 63rd annual All Rocky Mountain Conference Football team. Lee Muller, CC's lanky, sure-handed end from Honolulu, Hawaii, and Steve "Sudden Death" Sabol, the Tiger's heralded 205 pound full-back from Philadelphia, Pa., were both named among the Rocky Mountain stars.

Muller, who led the Rocky Mountain Conference in pass receiving with thirty-four receptions, was a standout for the Tigers all year on both offense and defense. His slashing, blocking and alert defensive play made Muller one of the finest ends of the year. Scoring two touchdowns for a total of twelve points, Muller's offensive abilities in both blocking and receiving make him one of Colorado College's finest linemen in many a year.

Sabol, who was Academic All-Conference last year, is CC's other member of the All-RMC squad. "Sudden Death" finished second in the Conference in rushing this year with five hundred thirty-five yards and averaged 48 yards per kick. Sabol was ranked 20th among the nation's kickers. This season he tallied two touchdowns, two field goals and seven extra points for a total of twenty-five points.

Both Muller and Sabol are juniors and will return next fall.

Cagers Win Practice Game 89-71; Season Looks Good

Last Thursday night in a pre-season tune-up game, Coach Red Eastlack's hoopsters bombed the Englewood National Bank A.A.U. team 89-71 at Cossitt Gym.

With this opening victory, Colorado College's basketball team appears on its way to an exciting, if not successful, campaign. Dave Herrington, a six-foot, 175 lb. junior guard, paced the Eastlackmen with 16 points.

Willie Pelz, a balding 25-year-old cage veteran, twisted the net for 14 tallies, as did Bob Henry, who also garnered 14 points and picked off 12 rebounds to lead the Tigers in that department.

The only place that the Tigers seemed lacking was at the free throw line, making only 17 for 31, for a paltry 55% free throw percentage.

With one or two excusable lapses, CC basketball teams have fared extremely well over the past few years. With tremendous depth and an abundance of experienced players, this year's B-ball team should continue the successful trend.

Although it is difficult to say anything concrete until semester grades are in and the eligibility or in many instances, ineligibility of the participants is revealed, it is reasonably safe to say that CC's basketball team, along with CSC and ASC, is a strong contender for the conference crown.

Bob Baker, Carl Cabiness, Dave Herrington, and Willie Pelz, all experienced guards, give Coach Eastlack a solid back court of accurate shooters. But since Baker's back is bad and Carl's in a snarl grade-wise, the guard posts are not as strong as they could be.

The H boys—Howell, Henry, and Hildebreth—coupled with Loosli and Susemihl, provide the strongest corps of forwards in the league. All five forwards can shoot and rebound with equal facility.

At the center position is Steve Sabom (not to be confused with Steve Sabot) a 6'6", 230 lb. youngster from Houston, Texas, who is returning to the hardwoods after a two-year lay-off. Sabom, or stretch as he is called by his friends, moves well under the basket and is an accurate shooter for a man of such frightening proportions.

Despite their lack of height (6'1" team average), the Tigers are a well-coached, smooth operating team who, with one or two breaks, could walk off with the RNC laurels.

CC Rifle Team Scores Improve

Seven CC shooters continued to improve their scores as CC fired a 1379 postal score on the home firing lines Dec. 6.

As far as this writer has been able to ascertain from records of previous years, 1379 is the highest score in CC history. This score was not due so much to individual outstanding performance, but to generally good scores by the five shooters whose scores count on the team score.

Co-Captain Jim Blackmer fired a good 282 to lead individual scoring. Robert Strieby fired his highest match score to date, 250 for second place in the match.

Lyman Hunter also obtained his highest match score with a fine 277, and Dan Humes got his season's high with a 268. Captain Bill Johnson had to settle for a very disappointing (for him) 272 as he saw his outstanding kneeling score fall to 907 points below his usual kneeling score. Hard work for CC's crack captain began to pay off, however, as his standing score improved significantly.

Outstanding individual position scores of this meet were: Blackmer and Humes (99-53); kneeling Strieby (97); and standing, Hunter (88).

The averages of the top five shooters on the team are:

1, Blackmer (7 matches) 280.71; 2, Johnson (7 matches) 274.73; 3, Strieby (7 matches) 272.43; 4, Hunter (7 matches) 271.15.

* Handel's 'Te Deum'

roque music must be deliberate, yet with a firm conviction to the pulsating quality of the rhythm. While Mr. Lyon occasionally slipped into a rather romantic stylization, it was not often that he lost this conviction.

The final, and certainly most important part of the work, is the choir. In a composition of this nature, the choral sound is very important, and in this respect the choir was not lacking. The tone was extremely rich and full, for it was clear that the chorus sang with conviction and achieved a mature sound. Yet it must be mentioned that a non-selective choir of such great size (132 voices) is bound to run into technical problems, as did this one. While the instrumentalists were rhythmically exacting, they occasionally served to bring out a sluggish quality of such a large group. However, where rhythmic vitality may have been lacking, strength and beauty of sound were not. The work was a bold undertaking, and resulted in a fine musical experience for all. In view of the circumstances, much praise is deserved for the work as a whole, and especially for the excellent sound of Mr. Jenkins' choir.

* Frosh Problems

dents would generally be unhappy to see such a plan come about.

After suggesting that couples seek privacy along the banks of Monument Creek, the President found that words failed him when students retaliated by saying that to ask a girl to sit on the banks of the "creek" in winter weather is highly unchivalrous. The President did mention that even faculty members had noticed this problem on campus, and it is under study by faculty members and administration.

Though nothing was resolved in the visit, the freshman class is grateful to President Wornor for being present to expound upon his and the college administration's views, and for listening to the sincere opinions and suggestions of the freshmen.

GREEK NEWS

Phi Delta Theta

Brother Foust having volunteered the use of the level, 29 room Aspen Ski Villa, the championship Phi ski team will be returning from the holidays early for a week of concerted fun. Included in the agenda are the Folies Bergere in the lower level romper room and progressive sounds from Miles and the boys from dusk 'til dawn—a fete anxiously awaited by all.

Happy returns to the young lovelies from the freshman dorms who so graciously attended our annual Christmas open house last Monday. Indeed 'tis to our dismay that such occasions are so infrequent.

Beta Theta Pi

The rumor spread like Imperial margarine on hot toast. "Finals start Friday!" From the tube room to the pool room, icy terror mummied the Betas.

The House President called an emergency Executive Council meeting. With the scholastic pressure up to a record high of five hundred pounds per square inch, some clever plan had to be devised if the Betas were to retain the Scholastic Trophy.

After a stormy, two hour session, a decision was reached and announced to the chapter. In compliance, the trophy was hidden in the basement and the annual tube-a-thon begun. Remember, you get triple-the-score for each hour of test pattern watched.

Sigma Chi

The Sigs joined with the Kappas at their house in a serenade for Greg Young and Suzie Mulliner, recently pinned. Congratulations to Greg and Suzie.

Coach Peterson and staff (assistant coach Palm, waterboy Kopsky, and technical advisor Rashagen) have started training the Sigma Chi hockey team. A pre-season warmup drill was held with In spite of a loss to the "ladies" the Thetas at the broomball rink. by one goal, a belated thanks to them for a great time and an excellent breakfast.

We all bemoan the loss of Ron's Roman mural, an antique of our heritage, recently destroyed in a tragic accident.

Alpha Phi

The Alpha Phis and their alum big sister, their Auntie Phis, held their last get-together of the year Monday evening at the annual Christmas party to formally usher in the holidays. As an extra surprise, Marsha Hayes passed a big white candle to announce her pinning to an Air Force cadet.

This, however, wasn't the only surprise of the evening—Santa himself (herself?) arrived later in the form of a bearded and padded Lynn Sipple. And to top off everything, the identities of all the Secret Sisters were revealed in various little impersonations, culminating several weeks of secret clues and silly little gifts.

A warm, friendly fire, a beautifully decorated tree under which lay many, many colorful gifts, hot cider and cookies and the singing of traditional Christmas carols all helped the family to get in the festive spirits and to have a last merry fling before finals.

Friday, the annual Christmas formal was held at the Antlers. The general consensus revealed everyone had a ball, particularly the male delegation who received and played with an assortment of toys and goodies found in their Christmas stockings.

Phi Delta Gamma

The DG's last fling before finals has come and gone but as we face the books hour after unending hour, our thoughts creep back to last weekend.

Friday night was delightfully shared with the Thetas at their Christmas formal. A good band, lots of people and all kinds of fun equaled a wonderful evening. Thank you Thetas for including us.

Sunday night brought our alumni to the house for a Christmas party; popcorn, cocoa and a few minutes of just plain relaxation.

Well, the end is here (in more ways than one). Our last thought is to wish you all a VERY MERRY CHRISTMAS!

Sociologist Zahn Speaks On Church and Warfare

By Donna Haraway

Why did Germany's Catholics give nearly total and unquestioning support to Hitler's wars, especially in the light of traditional Catholic teaching on the morality of participation in just and unjust wars?

This is the question explored by Gordon Zahn, Loyola University sociologist, in his book German Catholics and Hitler's Wars: a Study in Social Control. The query takes on vital significance for every man who wonders how men can kill each other by the millions and justify it by calling the atrocity a moral duty.

Hitler's Germany was a near-perfect authoritarian state. Any deviation from the prescribed form of cooperation was, to say the least, imprudent. Conscientious objection was a capital crime, but this in itself is inadequate to explain the explicit support for the war effort given by Germany's hierarchy.

Dr. Zahn's story revealed that, despite courageous opposition to Hitler in aspects of domestic policy, especially in the infamous

A Statement from President Worner

To many of us World War II seems to have been only yesterday. To most of the Colorado College students it appears to have been a long time ago. To all of us, this year's Symposium will bring a better understanding of where the Republic has been and the better possibility of forming sound judgments as to where it is now. This should in turn help us as students and as citizens to be better prepared for those responsibilities the future will surely bring.

Dr. Fred Sondermann and his colleagues, both faculty members and undergraduates, have done an outstanding job. I am confident that our second Colorado College Symposium will be at least as rewarding as was our first a year ago.

Lloyd E. Worner
President

Dr. Snell to Discuss European Strategy

By Jo Heller

John Snell will be the first Symposium speaker on Monday, January 13 at 9 a.m. in Perkins Hall. His topic will be "The Outbreak of the European War, 1939." He will also speak with Herbert Feis on Tuesday afternoon at 2:30 p.m. in Tuttle Auditorium on "The Diplomacy of the Global War."

Dr. Snell received his degree from the University of North Carolina, where he taught history from 1946 to 1949. After joining the faculty of Tulane University in 1953, he was promoted to Professor in 1959, and is presently the Dean of the Graduate School.

During the Second World War Dr. Snell served in the United States Air Force, receiving several medals for outstanding service. He is the author of Warime Origins of the East-West Dilemma Over Germany (1959), and co-author and editor of The Meaning of Yalta, (1956), and The Nazi Revolution, (1959).

Charles K. Tensill's book, Back Door to War, a scathing attack on Roosevelt, stimulated Dr. Snell's interest in Roosevelt's part in the Second World War. His principal thesis is that Churchill and Roosevelt were severely limited in their selection of alternatives in dealing with Stalin. On the basis of this proposition, Snell defends Roosevelt's actions by challenging those who have accused FDR of everything from stupidity to treason. He has coined the phrase "policy of postponement" to describe Allied response to Stalin's demands. Whenever Churchill and Roosevelt felt that the Russian leader was asking for more than the Western Allies were prepared to grant, they would respond by postponing any action at all.

John Snell's most recent book, Illusion and Necessity: The Diplomacy of Global War, 1939-1945, (October, 1963), is a presentation of his thesis that both sides were operating under two assumptions. Both sides were acting under a veil of illusion concerning certain issues and circumstances, and both sides were acting out of practical necessity. This view of the limitations placed on both participants in World War Two will undoubtedly provide a lively topic of discussion.

JAN 13 1964 Symposium Promises to Be Exciting Week for College

By Caroline Croyke

Once again, Colorado College is undertaking a project of wide general interest to supplement the education received in classes during the year. The Symposium represents the only program of such scope to be attempted on any American campus. No other school devotes an entire week of the academic year to a thorough investigation of a single subject in depth. Seventy-five participants from the campus and from across the country will draw a picture of the Second World War in a number of its aspects.

"The Second World War" is Colorado College's second week-long, but actually fifth, symposium. In 1960, a coalition of several student clubs sponsored a week-long panel on the population explosion in America. The discussions were held at night; the discussants were CC faculty members.

Taylor to Discuss Nuremberg Trials

Dr. Telford Taylor, one of the 35 symposium participants, served on the General Staff Corps and was Chief of Counsel for the War Crime trials at Nuremberg during the Second World War.

Although Dr. Taylor will mainly be concerned with the war years while participating in the symposium, he served in the Roosevelt administration during the depression years.

After earning his MA and teaching at Williams, he entered the Department of Interior in 1933. Until the war broke out, he held numerous government positions, among them Senior Attorney to the AAA, Special Assistant to the Attorney General, and General Counsel to the FCC.

In 1942 Dr. Taylor was commissioned a major in the Military Intelligence Service of the Army. He then served on the General Staff Corps until 1945 as an Intelligence Officer.

Having served as a member of the staff of the Chief Counsel at the Nuremberg trials, he became the U.S. Chief of Counsel for War Crimes in 1945. Mainly because of his participation in the trials, Dr. Taylor was awarded decorations from the United States, Britain, France, Poland, the Netherlands, as well as the Vatican. Since the close of the Nuremberg trials, Dr. Taylor served from 1951 to 1952 as an administrator for the Small Defense Plants Administration.

Telford Taylor

However, most of his time has been taken up with the writing of several books, Sword and Swastika (1952), Grand Inquest (1954), and The March of Conquest (1958) and numerous political, legal and military articles.

Dr. Taylor will discuss the problem of "The Third Reich: Legal Guilt and Moral Responsibility" on Thursday at 2:00 in Perkins Hall with other symposium speakers. On Thursday night, in Shove Chapel at 8:15, Dr. Taylor will discuss "The Military Strategy of the War" with Hanson Baldwin, Richard Leighton and Colonel George Lincoln. He will discuss the Thursday night panel on Friday morning at 9:00 in the Tuttle Auditorium again with Baldwin, Leighton and Lincoln.

A two and one-half day symposium on "The Science-Humanism Controversy" was organized by Professor Alvin Ederman (sociology) in 1961. The discussion, led by a Duke University psychologist and an author-professor from Montana State, revolved around C. P. Snow's study of these two forces.

"War or Peace in the 1960's" was sandwiched in amongst three days of classes in 1962. Hans Monaghan, Bernard Brody, and Walter Mills were imported to discuss the present power struggle and the possibility of nuclear war.

The symposium idea was good, the topics thought-provoking, but the numerous would-be-interested students were under too many classroom pressures to participate. A change in the academic calendar provided a solution: an extra week, prior to the opening of second semester classes, was added. Last year's "The Contemporary Arts and the Citizen" proved successful, and so, this year finds us delving into the annals of Der Zweite Weltkrieg.

Hanson Baldwin

Baldwin Is Military Analyst for N.Y. Times

By Elizabeth Akiya

On the roster of noted guests participating in the 1964 Colorado College Symposium will be the distinguished editor of military affairs of The New York Times, Hanson W. Baldwin.

As a journalist who was an intimate observer of the war years, Mr. Baldwin will be contributing his broad experience with the circumstances and the event of the period. He covered the Asiatic and European theaters and in 1942 won the Pulitzer prize for his coverage of the war in the Pacific.

He received his basic technical training at the Annapolis Naval Academy and later as an officer aboard ship. In 1927 he resigned from his Naval post and presently went to work for the Baltimore Sun as a police reporter. In 1929, he began his long association with the New York Times. There he rose from the position of military correspondent to the post of Military Editor (1942).

Mr. Baldwin is noted for his outstanding analysis of the complex aspects of military strategy. He combines a basic technical background with other contributing factors for his completed analysis. When asked about the process of analyzing military developments, Mr. Baldwin stressed the importance of employing every aspect of his total experience. This

American, Canadian Military Figures To Play Major Role in Symposium

By Terry Winograd

The politician, the historian, the sociologist, and the economist all must deal with the unpleasant subject of war in the course of their studies. But to them it is but another type of event, a phenomenon which affects their field. However often they discuss it and analyze it, war remains the province of another—the professional military officer. War is his business, all of his training, planning, and purpose is directed to that end. When it comes, he is the one who must carry out the battle.

A discussion of a war would be insufficient without recognition of this fact, and this year's symposium is no exception. Ten authorities with backgrounds in the Army, the Navy, and the Air Force will provide students with information on the military aspects of World War II. The proximity of the Air Force Academy is certainly a great aid, as six participants are professors there.

ten. He is now the assistant dean for Graduate Programs at the Academy.

Capt. Thomas G. Pinckney, a professor of political science, will preside at a discussion of the War in Eastern Europe. Capt. Charles Cooke will be the presiding official at a panel on "The Role of Air, Sea and Ground Forces in the War." He is in the military history and Far East history departments.

Capt. John S. Pustay will serve as discussant for a talk by Vladimir Dedijer on "Guerrilla Warfare in World War II." A member of the political science department, Capt. Pustay has published many works including a doctorate thesis on Counterinsurgency Warfare.

Col. Wayne A. Yeoman is a professor of economics at the APA and will be part of a panel on "The Economics of War."

Also on the panel will be Major General William H. Draper, Jr., (ret.) U.S. Army. He served in several advisory capacities during the war, and was the Chief of the Economic Division of the Control Council for Germany in 1945-46. He was also the chairman of the committee which drafted the "Draper Report" on U.S. Foreign Aid in the late 1950's.

Col. George A. Lincoln, U.S.A., will be the third member of the panel. He received a Rhodes Scholarship at the U.S. Military Academy, and returned to teach there before the war. During the war, he served in the General Staff, and was a military advisor to the Secretary of State at the Paris Peace Conference in 1946. At present he is the chairman of the Social Science Department at West Point, and is a consultant on various government groups including the U.S. Arms Control and Disarmament Agency.

Air Marshal G. R. Slemmon, GB, GBE, CD, RCAF, is deputy commander-in-chief of NORAD. During the war, he organized the famed All-Canadian Bomber Group of 15 squadrons. Before coming to NORAD he served as Chief of the Air Staff of the RCAF. He will take part in the ican, Harper's, and Commentary. His major works include Love Is Not Enough, Trautman from Life, and The Informed Heart.

From his study of modern man's search for individuality in an age of mass culture, Dr. Bettelheim concludes:

"Work and art, family and society, can no longer develop in isolation from each other. The daring heart must invade reason with its own living warmth, even if the symphony of reason must give way to admit love and the pulsation of life. No longer can we be satisfied with a life where the heart has its reasons, which reason cannot know. Our hearts must know the world of reason, and reason must be guided by an informed heart."

panel on Air, Sea and Ground Forces.

Also on this panel will be General William H. Gill. He served as a Division Commander in New Guinea and the Philippines, and accepted the surrender of Japanese forces under General Yamashita. In 1947, General Gill became president of Colorado College, a post which he held until his retirement in 1955.

Each of these men is qualified not only as a military officer, but also as an expert in his particular field. Through their efforts, a deeper understanding of the war will be made possible.

Josef Korbel, director of the Social Science Foundation and chairman of the Department of International Relations at the University of Denver, will discuss the consequences of the war in Eastern Europe on Friday of the Symposium Week.

Young Deals with Problem Of German Responsibility

By Norm Liden

The trial and punishment of Nazi war criminals at the close of World War II were based upon laws set forth in the charter of the International Military Tribunal.

The main charges against the Germans were: (1) Crimes Against Peace—planning and initiating a war of aggression, and violation of international treaties; (2) War Crimes—violation of laws and customs of war; and (3) Crimes Against Humanity—crimes committed against the civilian population, and persecution on political, racial, or religious grounds.

For those who sat in judgment at Nuremberg in 1947-48, there existed more than a question of the administration of a well-defined legal justice. It is an ill-defined line that separates the heinous excesses of war from those actions which are to be labeled crimes against humanity.

The guilt of the more than 20 German officers at Nuremberg required deeper philosophical justification than that prescribed by some set of "international laws," laws that could not look out of the second story windows of the Nuremberg courtroom at the ruins of civilian and religious buildings senselessly destroyed during British and American bombing raids.

Could sights such as these be written off, along with undeniable atrocities on the part of the Allies in the handling of prisoners, a natural excesses of war, only to condemn the Germans for similar actions? Then, ironically, the Germans would be condemned, not for their crimes and atrocities, but only because they committed them in a war which they had the misfortune to lose.

Moreover, where is one to find the evidence for the existence of a super, international state, to whose laws every human owes first allegiance, and who is necessarily servant to its judgment?

What are the laws of this international state? And more important how does one give ones highest allegiance to an abstract entity that does not possess the reality, as did the Nazi state, of an assured execution for disregarding orders?

Hazel Barnes, of the University of Colorado, is already familiar to most CC students due to her lectures during last year's Symposium. This year she will speak on "Some Reflections of World War II on French Philosophy and Literature."

And if one does succeed in handing down a verdict to such an individual, to what extent has judgement been passed according to a set of ex post facto laws—laws made after the "crime".

The trial of the Germans at Nuremberg was, then, not merely a trial according to a set of definite, easily applicable laws, and therefore it required of those who sat in judgement a great deal more than just a knowledge of law.

One such judge at Nuremberg was John C. Young, Presiding Judge, Tribunal No. 5, War Crimes Trials, Germany 1947-48.

Mr. Young will be participating in a panel discussion: "The Third Reich: Legal Guilt and Moral Responsibility" together with Mr. Telford Taylor and Professor Douglas Mertz, Thursday, January 16, 2:00 to 3:00 p.m. The discussion should be one of the highpoints of the Symposium.

Historian Feis Is Expert on War Diplomacy

Beginning his career as an instructor of economics, Herbert Feis taught first at Harvard, where he received his Ph.D. in 1921, then at the University of Kansas, and finally for three years at the University of Cincinnati as the head of the economics department. His writings during this decade dealt with labor-management problems and between 1922 and 1927 he served from time to time as the American industrial advisor at the International Labor Office in Geneva.

In 1931 he accepted an appointment as an economic advisor in the Department of State. He remained in this capacity until 1944, when he became a special advisor to the Secretary of War. During his years in the State Department he represented the United States at a number of economic conferences, including the World Economic and Monetary Conference in 1933.

Since the war, Dr. Feis has concentrated on a study of the diplomatic history of the Second World War. The fourth of the five volumes, Between War and Peace; The Potsdam Conference won the Pulitzer Prize for history in 1961. In the last volume, Japan Subdued; The Atomic Bomb and the End of the Pacific War, Dr. Feis examines the validity of President Truman's decision to bomb Hiroshima.

Although his books are generally conceded to be remarkably unbiased, Feis' Between War and Peace has been described by A.J.P. Taylor as, "a State Department brief, translated into terms of historical scholarship." Another historical work, Churchill-Roosevelt-Stalin; the War They Fought has been widely acclaimed.

Since 1948 Herbert Feis has been intermittently a member of the Institute for Advanced Study in Princeton. He also spent several recent years as a visiting professor at Harvard and Columbia.

ethanasia program, German bishops actually represented a social control in support of a war of highly questionable justice. Pastoral letters and other documents of the war years were a positive moral booster at home, while the few who risked and lost their lives in objecting to the aggressive Nazi war aims received no support from their spiritual leaders.

Usual explanations of the problem ascribe such support to stark necessity and the workings of tremendously powerful secular controls on each individual. Another factor was the effective Nazi communications control hindering the accumulation of adequate information for many to make essential judgments.

But this barely touches some basic questions. Whether or not the war was just, whether or not Christian morality permitted participation in the war, and if not, whether the individual would choose to follow the moral pattern mapped out for him by his Church or by his State: these are the problems that seem to have been avoided.

The bishops, as opposed to a private citizen, should have had access to the means to make a more objective judgment of the Third Reich. But instead of a value selection dimension arising to any degree, it was considered a moral obligation to "defend Volk, Vaterland, and Heimat" under the leadership of the Fuhrer.

For the German love of country coupled with a total subjection to authority was nearly a way of life. Because of this, German bishops were honestly unable to distinguish between love for and defense of the Volk and aggression that violated the rights of others.

It is all too easy to pass this off as a quirk of historical character building, German style, until we realize to what extent America has allowed nationalistic sentiments to obscure the real issues in a pluralistic world.

As Dr. Zahn expressed it, nationalism is hereby; that is, placing subjective interests over concern for the brotherhood of man is morally insupportable.

The author of the book briefly outlined above will be a participant in the upcoming Symposium Week. Dr. Zahn attended St. John's University in Minnesota, College of St. Thomas, and earned his masters and doctorate in sociology at Catholic University.

During the Symposium Dr. Zahn will lecture at 11:00 in Shove, Sunday, on "Religion and Modern War" and again on Monday at 11:00 on "The American Conscience Object to World War II."

German War Paintings On Exhibit in Rastall

By Ted Prescott

During the early stages of World War II, Adolf Hitler established an Art Unit in the Propaganda Division of the Armed Forces High Command. In the early days of the war, the unit was 80 of Germany's "top artists." Their duties were to glorify the Third Reich's achievements and to disseminate visual propaganda for the continuation of war effort and militarism. The unit produced some 9,000 works, which, in the last days of the War, were collected and secreted against the impending Allied invasion. Directly after the war, the U.S. Army conducted a massive search to locate and confiscate the Nazi Art works. The works are now in the custody of the Chief of Military History Department of the Army.

The paintings in the exhibit which, according to the Department of the Army, represent the best examples of German War Art, are not blatant propaganda depicting Aryan supremacy. Rather, they are visual records of battles and simple scenes of military routine.

If it were not for the technical details of uniforms and equipment, the characters in the paintings might well be American boys protecting Mom's apple pie and the girl next door. The paintings depict all of the factors that a nation inherently visualizes in its heroes and defenders, humble patriotism; the desire to win and get home; a willing acceptance of danger, discomfort, and death; to maintain the right ideals. These particular works depend upon a tangible, emotional impact.

Any work, such as the German, whose primary reason for existence is to portray an event or set an idea through the use of human emotion, sentiment, or other types of descriptive appeal, cannot be judged as or called art. The goal of these works is to illustrate and describe (as in commercial art) and the existence of any aesthetic beauty is a secondary fact of the work.

Aesthetic beauty, according to the British critical logician Clive Bell, is the only factor common to all works of art. Briefly, aesthetic beauty connotes a relationship of form (including color, line, space, etc.) that can be appreciated as an emotional or intellectual experience without having any dependence on recognizable reality. This does not mean that "realistic" works cannot possess aesthetic beauty, but the availability of tangible ideas often hinders and overshadows the possibility of aesthetic appreciation.

It is my contention that the German War Exhibit is not an art exhibit, but an interesting group of documentary illustrations. The collection shows a facet of visual reality through a portrayal of human situations, but, being limited by this, fails to provide the combination or relationship of forms necessary to aesthetic experience, and to art.

McDonald to Speak On War Literature

By Dee Wilson

Malcolm Muggeridge has called Dwight McDonald our first essayist, and though this is perhaps stretching it, it is not too much to say that he is a member of that special group of American writers which also includes, for example, Mary McCarthy, Edmund Wilson, Gore Vidal, and perhaps Norman Mailer, who have made the essay an important part of American letters.

McDonald's development is, in many ways, parallel to the development of McCarthy and Wilson, and to numerous American intellectuals of his period. During the depression years of the 1930's he became interested in Communism, but was quickly disillusioned with Stalin. In the late 1930's McDonald began, in the Partisan Review particularly, to actively oppose Stalinism and to sympathize with the Communism of Leon Trotsky. He, like many other American intellectuals, opposed American participation in World War II, believing it would become, as the First War had, a senseless bloodbath. McDonald is different, in that he continued his opposition to the war throughout the conflict, and espoused instead, in his famous magazine Politics, first pacifism and with the war's end anarchism. In Politics he continually insisted that, though the Allies might be the lesser evil, any victory won by such means and at such cost would be of little value. McDonald ceased to publish Politics in 1949, thus ending, he has written, his political involvement. He explains that he ceased to be interested in choosing between alternatives, all of which he disliked. Like many other American intellectuals during the 1950's his interests became more exclusively literary and continue to be so.

McDonald has been for some time and is now associated with the New Yorker; for the past few years he has written film criticism for Esquire, criticism which has won him the respect, if not the love, of those associated with or interested in the cinema.

We may hope that his Symposium contributions resemble his pepping essays—acute, witty, caustic. If so it will be a jolly good show.

He will speak on the "Literary Mood of the 1930's and 1940's," the period when he achieved his greatest fame as a poet of the left. He will also discuss the "war novel" with Dwight MacDonald and read a selection of his poetry while attending the Symposium.

experience includes his years of Naval service, his journalistic observations of the military scene, the opinions of the experts, and much travel. Thus, to arrive at a comprehensive evaluation he makes comparative judgments on the basis of all facets of his past.

Mr. Baldwin's visit to Colorado College has several purposes. He expressed a great interest in the general topic of World War II and a symposium on the subject would capture his interest at any time. This concern for World War II has resulted in several books such as United We Stand (1941), The Strategy for Victory (1942).

In addition to these works, Mr. Baldwin has produced other outstanding books concerning the Navy (What the Citizen Should Know About the Navy, 1941) and on the position of the United States as a military power in the cold war (The Great Arms Race, 1958).

Another reason Mr. Baldwin provided as a justification for this visit was a projected tour of the Air Academy and the Air Defense Command. As editor of the New York Times Military Affairs Division, he is constantly searching out recent developments in the military area.

Finally Mr. Baldwin asserted his enjoyment of a symposium held for a college audience on the subject of World War II. He expressed the feeling that young people are relaxed and stimulating and do not hesitate to ask provoking questions about the War.

Yang Speaks on War Repercussions in Orient

By Dennis Faulk

Dr. Richard R. H. Yang was born in Sheusi, China, in 1924. In 1946 he received his Bachelor of Arts degree in political science from the National Central University, in Nanking, China. After some post-graduate work there, he worked as a high school teacher, dean of students, and dean of faculty in Taiwan, China, before coming to the United States in 1954. During his tenure on Taiwan, Dr. Yang served as a spokesman of the Taiwan Provincial Department of Education before assuming other duties which included his service as the secretary to commissioner of Taiwan Department of Education and the secretary to the former Chinese ambassador, Dr. Hu Shih.

After coming to the United States in 1954, Dr. Yang enrolled in the University of Oregon and in 1955 received his Master of Arts degree. From Oregon he went to Columbia University where he earned his doctorate from the Graduate Faculty of the New School for Social Research. His dissertation was entitled "The Role of Senator Vandenberg of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee under the 80th Congress 1947-1948."

From 1960-1962, Dr. Yang taught at the Institute of Far Eastern Languages at Yale University and also held a lectureship in economics at New Haven College. Since 1962, he has been acting assistant professor at the University of Colorado, as well as assistant professor of the University of Kansas-University of Colorado joint Summer Intensive Chinese-Japanese program. Presently, Dr. Yang is also a member of the staff of Asian Studies Program at Washington University in St. Louis.

Dr. Yang will discuss China's war with Japan and the rise of Chinese Communism on Wednesday, Jan. 15.

APPLICATIONS for Student Handbook Editor for 1964 must be submitted at Rastall desk before January 25. Any questions concerning the position should be directed to Ben Lyon, chairman of Publications Board.

Tigers Win Six Games Face Tougher Schedule

The Colorado College Hockey team won its sixth straight game Thursday to wind up its Eastern tour against weak Ohio University in Athens.

The tour started with the Brown Invitational Tournament and our Tigers displayed their Western boldness by defeating Providence, Brown, and Colgate Universities on successive nights. The best game of the lot in this tournament was played against Brown and here CC was forced to come from being one point down to a final period victory.

CC then moved back toward her native country pausing to take on Ohio en route and scored two smashing victories of 10-7 and 7-3.

The sophomores on the CC squad seem to have been carrying quite a bit of the load all season thus far. Yearling Dave Peterson netted himself a hat trick in the final game against Ohio and Glen Blum had done the same previously. Veteran Maglie and McAlpine have put on some dazzling shows thus far.

Goalie Art Warwick returned to the nets for the Ohio finale after missing several games due to a bout with the flu. Normally this might be a tragic situation, but little hard rock Mike Carter filled the gap admirably.

It will be of interest to many CC followers to note that the final game against Ohio saw an old CC record shattered when the Tigers got 79 shots on Ohio goal tender Mike Homovex. The old record was 62 shots set back in the days when the fabled Red Hay led his fellow Canadian Clubbers to the 1956-57 championship and set this record in a Minnesota game.

The Tigers take on North Dakota Jan. 10 and 11 and it is many people's guess that Coach Bob Johnson will not unfrequently remind his boys that they are now back in the Wild West where the game of hockey is played on a rougher, faster and more talented level than it is in the "colonial states."

In the Western Division of the WCHA Hockey League the Tigers stand in second place to Denver which has a one win one tie record while CC has a one win one loss record against Michigan State. After North Dakota CC must return home and face a week's preparation for Michigan University.

Cagers Seek First Victory

The Tiger basketball squad had an unhappy Christmas this year, losing two close games in the University of Chicago Holiday Tournament.

Going up against high-scoring Grinnell, a team which had previously been averaging 88 points per game, the Tiger defense held the hot Grinnell marksmen to 68 points. But the Tiger scorers were unable to match their strong defensive effort with an effective offense.

"We needed to shoot a lot more," said head Coach Leon Eastlack, "as well as hitting more of the shots we took."

In the consolation game against the University of Chicago, the Tiger defense again played well in a see-saw battle that was tied five times. Again CC marksmanship was poor, and the game ended in a narrow 50-49 victory for Chicago.

Resuming drills on the third for the Rocky Mountain Conference opener against Adams State College on January 10-11, the Tiger squad has been concentrating on improving its marksmanship. The Tigers also are badly in need of a guard to pair with the number two scorer, Dave Herrington. Such a pair could give the Tigers the effective distance shooting which they now lack.

The Adams State Indians are shooting for their first sole conference title this year, after sharing the championship with Western State College last season. The Indians have a strong nucleus of returning lettermen, centered around a pair of deadly guards, Lonnie Parker and Willie Davis. Parker was the leading scorer in the conference last year, and freshman Davis is top scorer this season.

Adams State comes into the Springs with a losing 4-5 record in non-league competition, but with a front line averaging 6-6, the Indians will be a tough team to beat. The Tigers have, however, gained needed experience in Chicago, and with the emphasis on offense in pre-game drills, a rejuvenated five should be ready and waiting for the Alamosa Indians.

Zahn States CO's Position Merits Study

By Donna Haraway

Does the United States lay claim to the ideals of individual freedom and the right to dissent while actively denying these ideals in practice? This is the basic question posed by Gordon Zahn in his presentation of The American Conscientious Objector to World War II.

There were 12,000 American conscientious objectors, as the term is legally defined, during the war. To obtain this classification, one had to prove moral objection to war, and preparation therefore, by reason of religious training and affiliation. In practice this definition was often extended to include religious objectors not associated with peace churches, but objection here was difficult to prove.

A second possibility open to the objector was the IAO military classification, under which a man was inducted for non-combatant purposes and received regular army pay and benefits. The social stigma attached to many conscientious objectors was not a factor in these cases.

For men with families, IAO was almost the only course open to them, as the civilian public service projects undertaken by the legally classified objectors were unpaid. An army estimate of the number in the non-combatant service program is about 25,000.

But there remained many who were unable to prove objection on religious grounds or whose objections rested on dictates of conscience not associated with conscientious convictions. There were 6,000 such men who spent World War II in prison.

The group to suffer most from this practice were the Jehovah's Witnesses, not strictly a peace church group, who attempted to obtain ministerial deferment, but who were refused. According to these figures, nearly 15% of the conscientious objectors in the United States were forced to go to prison to be true to their ideals.

The problem here is not whether the majority of Americans agree with the objectors, but whether Americans are willing to place a serious burden on another's conscience while professing to fight the destruction of the individual personality in Nazi Germany.

Spender Speaks on Leftist Literary Mood of the 1930's

By Alex Primm

In a poem of the 1930's, Stephen Spender writes, "it is too late/ to make or even to count what has been made/ Count rather those fabulous possessions/ which begin with your body and your fiery soul." These lines capture powerfully and beautifully the literary mood of the 1930's, the topic of Stephen Spender's Demarest Lloyd Memorial lecture on Wednesday evening of the Symposium Week in Shove Chapel.

Approaching the literary period of the 1930's, Spender said that the years during the First World War and just after appeared to be reckless and discouraging to the artists and intellectuals of his time. The League of Nations, due to the military rise of Italy and Germany, was destroyed and thus ended the intellectual's trust of the Western democracies.

Also important in shaping the 1930's was the First World War, which completely destroyed the foundation, heritage and sense of the past of the pre-war world and substituted an existence based on fear and despair.

Thus those living right after the war came to distrust politics and had no real interest in anyone's affairs except their own. The artists of this period, with few exceptions, did not feel responsible for society or what it did and created an unreal and pleasant picture of reality.

Sondermann, Three Other Symposium Participants Discuss War's Effect On Relations with Russia

Dr. Sondermann, professor, associate dean and director of the symposium, E. Raymond Platig, director of studies, Carnegie Endowment for International Peace, and William C. Olson, chief, Foreign Affairs Section, Library of Congress, combined to round out the process began five days before by speaking about the emergence of the postwar world. Proving his ability as participant as well as director, Dr. Sondermann described postwar development from the view of public opinion. The war, he said, was coming out of the bag, he said, was the US relationship with Soviet Russia. The necessary wartime alliance had left Russia in conflict and made subsequent conflict unavoidable.

Beginning with a thaw in the late 1930's, American opinion became frozen early in the war. The Russians were allies, Communist or not, and the American public accepted them as such. It was only after the war that a shift in public opinion facilitated the change in foreign policy which had been foreseen some time before.

During 1944 Americans remained decidedly pro-Russian. Opinion was shaped largely by foreign correspondents, more numerous now than ever, who praised the Russian's courage and humanity, and seemed convinced that following the war Russia would leave Europe alone in order to rebuild herself, socially and economically. Men like Wendell Wilkie and Sumner Wells were optimistic about postwar cooperation.

By 1945, however, dissenting voices began to be heard more loudly. Editorials in Life magazine

Symposium Opened with War Songs, Literature Excerpts

The large crowd which filled Shove Chapel last Sunday night for the formal opening of Symposium was greeted with a bright note of expectation and sobering warning. Displaying considerable pride, Dr. Fred A. Sondermann, director of the second annual Colorado College Symposium, read a telegram from the White House commending the Symposium administrators and participants on the undertaking of this project.

Then addressing himself to the audience Dean Sondermann predicted that all would be stimulated in the next few days. We could not expect "a pleasant, relaxing, enjoyable week," he cautioned, "for war is none of those things."

Hazel Barnes Discusses War and French Arts

By Sally Dietrich

Miss Hazel Barnes, Professor of Classics at Colorado University, introduced her speech on the effects of the war on French philosophy and literature by saying that she would confine herself to commenting on the effects of the war on existential literature, since she is most concerned with that field.

It is impossible, she said, for an occupied nation to look on the occupying forces as evil beasts. Thus, in Jean-Paul Sartre's The Flies, and in Jean Anouilh's Antigone, the rulers are reasonable, rational, men and the heroes are the people who refuse to bow to expediency.

The psychology of collaborators also interested the French existentialists. Sartre concluded that collaborators were primarily people who had been outcasts in pre-war French society and those who refused to accept responsibility for others. The latter attitude, which Miss Barnes said is the more dangerous of the two, is illustrated in Helene, of Simone de Beauvoir's "The Blood of Others".

Before the war, Sartre and other existentialists refrained entirely from politics. Under the occupation however, this attitude changed. Nothing seemed inevitable and individual actions could actually contribute to the ultimate overthrow of the Nazis. Therefore, in existential thinking, drifting with the tide and making no resistance is as bad as actual collaboration.

Military Experts Discuss Strategy of World War 2

By Connie Cooper

Hanson W. Baldwin, Richard M. Leighton, Col. George A. Lincoln, and Telford Taylor participated Thursday evening in a panel on "The Military Strategy of the War." Glenn Brooks of the department of political science presided. Taylor's initial discussion was confined to German strategy. The German objective was to win additional territory in Europe primarily to the east. For this supported by air was developed to be used at first only as a threat.

Taylor compared this force to a boxer who is terrific at short range and for a short time. The fundamental blunder of Germany was that they did not confine military action to the capacity of the forces.

One reason for this is that Germany's diplomatic strategy failed with Poland, and Hitler was then faced with the prospect of European war which he had not bargained for. When Britain was in dire straits, cut off in Belgium and France, Hitler had his last chance to win the war quickly and perhaps to win at all.

However, he did not follow through against Britain at this time. The next mistake which he made was giving Britain her two first war and not retaining her for a long war. This mistake proved fatal.

Baldwin spoke of the European strategy of the allies, stating that that it hung upon four points: 1, Nazi Germany was the main objective since Germany was more dangerous than Japan; 2, joint command and joint efforts of the allies; 3, keeping the USSR in the war; 4, strategic bombing campaigns.

Britain's main emphasis was on the navy and air force since she was hoping for a victory won by a long war with a minimum of risks and losses. The U. S., however, wanted to concentrate allied strength as soon as possible to force the situation.

Allied strategy was finally determined by our insistence on the

Snell Blames Hitler, Stalin For W W II

The first working session of the Symposium featured historian John L. Snell with a paper on the outbreak of the European War, 1939. Setting the background with appropriate confusion for his clarifying powers he told of the many interpretations of the reasons for the Nazi war: the Nuremberg interpretation which held German leadership exclusively responsible for planning and launching the war; another which involved the Soviet Union and Stalin as encouraging Hitler; a Russian view which held that Western powers had encouraged Fascist expansion, or that at least they had acquiesced; the claim that Poland had forced the war by mistreatment of its German minority and by border attacks; the interpretations which involved Mussolini and Italy as instigating Nazi action; and finally the opinions of Taylor, that the cause of war was British blunder, and Hogan, that it was by British design.

In the process of clarifying his own explanation of the outbreak of World War II, Mr. Snell called attention to the artificial situation

The Unseen Symposium Hero Award this year goes not to Director Fred A. Sondermann, but to the many knitters who faithfully attended each discussion, lecture, and even movie at the week long session. The sound of clacking needles, the lowered heads, and the ball of yarn rolling down the aisle were comforts to those of us attempting to listen to the speakers. And we're sure that the little old lady really didn't mind being speared by the knitting needle dropped from the balcony in Tutt. But at least there will be numerous new sweaters gracing the campus. — ATP

There is a new order in the Hub. Rastall Center Board, suddenly embarking on a radical Rastall Reform movement, has swept aside the old book and bridge-laden regime, and voila, un Bistrot stands before us every evening.

Not only are the lights way down low, but we are to consume our chicken salad sandwiches and lemonade (non-carbonated) to the tallow glow of hurricane lamps placed on the tables each evening by enthusiastic Hub personnel. It really is a restful atmosphere after a hard evening at the library. The care-worn student enters to the soft red glow of said lamps, seats himself, and begins to read or talk, whichever happens to have been predominating at the library.

Abruptly and inexplicably the atmosphere of intimate conversation and close student-student and faculty-student interaction which is part of the meaning of a small American independent liberal arts college steeped in the Judeo-Christian tradition is shattered by the haunting strains of "Hooka Tooka" by Fats Domino. The student looks up, the beginnings of fear in a tiny knot within him, and sees it, there in the corner, glowing in fluorescent splendor: the Board's juke box, latest addition to the cultural offerings of Rastall.

Now the bistrot idea is fine; we are willing to run the risk of wax fights during particularly violent discussions. The juke box may be another matter, from what we gather of student reaction so far. Suggestions range from confining it to the ping-pong section of the games area, with dancing in the Berg Hell room to simply adding a recording of perhaps two hours of silence to be had for the payment of some sort of tribute to the box's sponsors. We are at best dubious about the value of the box, and apprehensive of the effect it is likely to have on the feel of the Hub. Perhaps, however, an era has passed. If "Hooka Tooka" is to reign supreme over our new Pub, then so be it.

LETTERS to the EDITORS

To the Editors:

Since you were responsible for the publication of the statement in a recent issue of the TIGER that 40% of the class (freshmen) have requested transfer slips, I thought you would be interested in the facts. Presumably by transfer slips you meant requests for transcripts; since this is the only indication we have that a student wishes to transfer.

After reading your article I asked the Registrar to make an analysis of the transcripts to be sent to other institutions (by class and by sex) that have been requested this semester. The statistics are as follows:

	Male	Female
Sophomores	4	1
Seniors	29	15

Senior requests for transcripts include those for themselves, the Danforth Foundation, Marshall Fellowships, National Academy of Sciences, graduate schools, professional schools, etc. Obviously, the seniors who intend to continue on to graduate study are beginning to request transcripts for that purpose.

Dean Mathias tells me that the percentage of students pre-registered is the highest since the college adopted the pre-registration procedure. To date 97.6% of all students have pre-registered. This does not mean the other 2.3% may not register for the second semester, since some of them have simply failed to get in their forms on time.

Among those who did not pre-register were twelve (12) freshmen. I am not counting Judahme Fotheringham, since she is skating in the Olympics and will not be in school for the second semester. Nine of the 12 had deficient grades at mid-semester and presumably are in academic difficulty. The breakdown of the nine is as follows:

Man—11 hrs. D, 4 hrs. F.
Man—4 hrs. D, 9 hrs. F.
Man—4 hrs. D, 4 hrs. F.
Man—8 hrs. D, 7 hrs. F.
Man—1 hr. D, 7 hrs. F.
Man—4 hrs. D.
Man—4 hrs. D, 4 hrs. F.
Man—4 hrs. D, 4 hrs. F.

CC Soldiers Urged to Kill Compulsory ROTC!

By Terry Winograd

"Compulsory ROTC must go!" This cry has rallied male students on campuses all over the country since time immemorial. The groans and grumbles have continued with little or no effect and the sporadic efforts to change the program have usually died at birth or resisted force pushing against a seemingly immovable object.

This fall, a concerted effort was produced at Colorado State College in Greeley, and the results were surprisingly different. In mid-October, the Compulsory Air Force ROTC program was attacked by the Young Democrats, and immediately an Ad Hoc Committee sprang up to carry on the work.

An attack by this group in the student newspaper, the "Mirror," charged that the program was incompatible with the goals and standards of the college. It pointed to the laughable academic level of Military Science courses and stated that they were an infringement on academic freedom.

They also pointed out the fact that the defense department has stated that compulsory ROTC is not necessary for the maintenance of the armed forces.

The following week found the Mirror printing a counter-attack by Cadet Col. William Hagan, Jr. He vehemently denied the charges and stated that the purpose of the course was to allow students to "take a look at a military career."

"They are free to turn it down if they so choose." Freedom of the individual found its outlet here. The editors didn't seem to agree, so they wrote an editorial entitled "Compulsory ROTC Must Go."

The battle lines were extended as the YD's and Ad Hoc brought their proposal to the Student Council in an open meeting. The council passed a resolution agreeing to set up a student referendum to test opinion.

On Nov. 15, a vote was taken of all interested male students. This was the first time in CSC history that such a referendum had been attempted.

The proposal read, "Be it resolved that the Associated Students of Colorado State College, after considering student opinion concerning the compulsory ROTC program recommend that the now compulsory program be made voluntary at the end of the 1963-64 school year."

The students turned out to vote, and the vote was 489 to 117, more than a four to one ratio. In accordance with this, a recommendation was made to the Board of Trustees.

Action was delayed due to a bill that was up before Congress which would have accomplished the same purpose. But on Dec. 2, the House voted down a rules technicality, effectively killing the bill. On Dec. 13, the Board of Trustees for Colorado State Colleges and Universities voted to drop compulsory ROTC at CSC.

At the present, only two schools in Colorado have a program of compulsory ROTC—Colorado College, and the School of Mines.

The criticisms which removed the program at CSC are certainly valid here, where a "professor" recently told his military history class that the best way to study for the course would be to cram for each test and then forget everything, because he wasn't interested in retention.

His attitude was that those who were interested would learn, and the others were of no concern.

If this is the case, as we are told it is, the "others" should not be forced into a situation in which no one, the professor or the student, is interested in learning.

If the program cannot stand on its own merit, it should not be forced on those who are not interested in it. It would be unfortunate to completely relinquish the opportunity for students to receive commissions, but unless this can be done on a voluntary basis, there is no question that it must happen.

ASCC NOTES

Rastall Center Board has been working hard to do the following: The first announcement is that stamps will not be sold at the desk. In keeping with the policy set by other campus post offices, they will be sold in quantities no greater than 10.

Looking ahead (already) to this semester's finals, RCB will be selling CARE packages. Plans are already underway to include more and better items than in previous years.

Bulletin boards have been reorganized. Beginning last Monday, the notices for foreign students and town students will be posted upstairs (second floor) and pertaining to rides, typing, skiing, and articles for sale will be posted on the bulletin board by the bookstore. All items for any bulletin board must be OK'd at the desk.

The greatest innovation is a juke box in the Hub in the evenings. We are experimenting with the hours, music, etc. for a while until we see when you want it most.

There will be slips of paper beside the juke box for suggestions of records to be put in and taken out. If we find a large number of people wanting some song or songs changed, it will be changed. Comments and suggestions are welcome on any phase of this project.

As a P.S.: The movie this Sunday is "High Noon" to be shown in Perkins at 7:30. It's free—do come!

Seay and Gamer Examine Value Of War Music

By Genevieve Vaughn

Characteristics and developments in both the popular and the serious music of the Second World War years were examined in lectures by Professors Albert Seay and Carlton Gamer on Tuesday and Friday of the Symposium week. Very little music of lasting value was produced during this period, because most of the music composed was written as a part of the war effort, depending on non-musical connotations rather than musical coherence for its meaning. However, among the small number of compositions written solely as musical entities are some of the great works of art of the twentieth century.

Music was first used to build morale and foster loyalty to a cause during the French revolution. Patriotic words easily remembered and the solidarity which came through group singing were the methods by which these ends were achieved. The German army made use of music in this way during both world wars. However, attempts to move American soldiers with this type of music fell flat, and those in authority came to emphasize to music which would boost morale by taking the soldier's mind off the war rather than create solidarity. It was to this end that bands such as Glen Miller's were formed. Popular music on the home front—"We're going to Hang Out the Washing on the Siegfried Line" and the like—served much the same purpose. This was also the era of the big band, of the hot tone and highly arranged music which provided little room for improvisation. The big band trend, which was well under way before the war, gave way afterwards to smaller groups and to the cool tone, that is, a tone with little vibrato.

Serious music was composed under somewhat different circumstances. It occupied considerable time of composers, but they must remain silent. Others attempted to write what the regime demanded of them. Hitler felt that real music had ended with Wagner, or perhaps Richard Strauss. Some rather innocuous war music was written, and the music of Mendelssohn was replaced by music written by Aryans. In the Allied countries many composers tried to write music which would back up the far effort. This music is generally of low quality, depending on its connotations rather than on its musical logic for its effect. One of the most widely performed pieces of this type was Shostakovich's Leningrad Symphony. Little of this music is performed now.

The most significant music to come out of the war years was not war music as such, but music written in time of war; such music is often deeply emotional, but not programmatic, that is, it does not attempt to portray specific events. Instead it is a personal expression, where the emotions involved are vague, not specific. Such a work is the deeply moving "Symphony for Strings" by Arthur Honegger, written during the German occupation of Paris.

The emigration to the United States of Schoenberg, Hindemith, Bartok and Stravinsky has had profound influence on the American musical scene. Virtually an entire generation of young composers have studied under these men. Like the Honegger symphony the music these men wrote during the years of the war (for example, Bartok's Concerto for Orchestra, or the expressionistic Ode to Napoleon of Schoenberg) was written for personal, not political, reasons, and is likely to survive because of its meaning is musical, not propagandistic.

A TYPICAL AUDIENCE crowds the Tutt Library Atrium during the Symposium Week.

Pineau Discusses the Military War of Japan

Roger Pineau, author of The Naval War in the Pacific and Handson Baldwin, the military editor of the New York Times teamed up during the Symposium to present a program on military strategy in the Pacific. Roger Pineau presented his paper first, and he tended to stress the Japanese strategy and hopes for achievement immediately preceding and during the first part of the war. The war in China was proving to be very costly to the Japanese as it consumed much material without the gain needed raw materials in compensation.

To solve this situation, Japan looked hungrily towards the Southwestern Pacific region with its rich supplies of raw materials. In order to obtain a "sphere of influence" in this area, Japan would, of necessity, have to challenge the United States.

Japan had been long and laboriously building up her naval forces prior to World War II. The term of enlistment in the Japanese Navy was long, and a highly proficient naval corps was developed.

This development into a top naval power, however, was a long and costly strain on the Japanese economy. It lacked depth in reserve and the ability to be replaced if sunk.

Realizing this, Admiral Yamamoto, the commander of the Pearl Harbor attack force, predicted that the Japanese would run rampant for a year and a half, after which the American industrial power would reverse the tide. The Japanese hope was that the United States would tire of the war and negotiate a peace giving Japan her "sphere of influence."

This did not prove to be the case, and Admiral Yamamoto's prediction turned out to be correct.

In summing up, Mr. Pineau blamed the Japanese loss on about five different causes, the lack of new war material, an underestimation of the might of the American enemy, a "victory disease" which lead them to view the war unrealistically, the Japanese naval myth of battleship invincibility, and the huge numbers of American opposition.

The next speaker, Hanson Baldwin, agreed with Mr. Pineau and merely added little bits to clarify the situation further. He noted that the Americans before Pearl Harbor greatly underestimated the Japanese strength as a people and as a nation.

Thus, Pearl Harbor came as a great surprise, and was followed by a vast overestimation of Japanese power on the part of the Americans.

Baldwin also came out with a biting anti-MacArthurism when he noted that instead of being subordinate to the Pentagon, MacArthur's command was almost in a position of being an independent power.

He made sharp note of the fact that the war in the Pacific quickly became a "total war," a very brutal war. American submarines waged an unrestricted war in the Pacific, the very reason for the US had entered into World War One.

In their island hopping, the Marines quickly learned to take no prisoners; the enemy was destroyed, man by man. This was ended appropriately, by the fire-bomb raid on Tokyo and the dropping of two atomic bombs.

In summing up, Baldwin attributed the American victory to our rapid development of aircraft carriers, a mobile supply system, excellent intelligence and communications, the Marine Corps, American battlefield realism, good leadership and superior materials.

Dr. Bettelheim Lectures On Totalitarian State

By Sue Phillips

Dr. Bruno Bettelheim began his lecture of Monday night with the admonition to listen, lest we, too, fall into the false belief that "it can't happen here." His first major point was a weak parallel between sensory-deprivation experiments and life in the concentration camps. Once he left this topic behind, Dr. Bettelheim gave one of the most lucid and important lectures of the symposium.

A totalitarian state is organized for special purposes, even at the cost of personal freedom. A man becomes an "object not a subject." At first the concentration camps were experimental in that techniques in human control were first tried out on the prisoners to determine their use on the rest of the population. The goal of these camps was to rob the prisoner of his individuality and to make him dependent on the state. For example, at first only leaders of subversive groups were put in camps. The Nazis changed this policy to imprison representative members of groups. This policy robbed prisoners of the feeling that they had committed some specific crime. Fate or the large impersonal state caused their misfortune. How could man resist fate?

The totalitarian state operated not only on concentration camps, but on groups outside the camp—primarily the family. The Nazis aimed much at destroying the position of authority—primarily paternal authority—which was the center of German family life, while there was little denouncing of parents, there was much threatening. To the child, threatening to denounce the parent was like threatening to run away. Generally the child who did denounce his parent felt great guilt when he realized the seriousness of his action. The child who really wanted freedom from parental authority paid the price of greater submission to the state.

This policy of forcing individuals to give up their personal freedom to the state extended to non-organized activities. For example, those who listened to foreign broadcasts were denounced and consequently put in concentration camps. Long afterwards listening to foreign broadcasts was made illegal. Thus, in states where there was no law, no man knew what behavior might be punished. The only safety lay in being able to predict the next "wrong behavior." The only way to predict was to identify completely with the state.

In the discussion the next morning Dr. Bettelheim made clear the fact that although the Germans knew about the concentration camps (to heighten the fear of the people, the SS gave no details), they knew nothing about the extermination camps. In answer to Dr. Bracher's question about Eichmann, Dr. Bettelheim replied that thousands more deserve his fate. "Those who say, 'I did it because I was scared,' generally weren't; those who really were scared made up much less flattering stories to keep from admitting that they were cowards." Dr. Bettelheim agreed with Dr. Bracher's highly significant remarks that Hitler's "pseudo-democratic methods" convinced the German people. In addition Germans responded to the rewards of the success of the army, the theory of the master race, and economic progress brought about by Hitler's regime.

However, Dr. Bettelheim disagreed that the indoctrination of the Hitler youth had little permanent effect. Tests show that beliefs rejected by college-age people return in full force in middle age. These are the people who maintain Dr. Bracher's conspiracy of silence. This is the importance of Dr. Bettelheim's lecture. The Chinese Communists are employing a refined SS technique for brainwashing. In view of the lasting effects of this treatment we must overcome Dr. Bettelheim's accusation, "We cannot face it because it has no face."

Macdonald, Sears, Bracher, Bettelheim Discuss Aspects of German War Guilt in Tuesday Panel

By Daniel Jaffe

A concentration camp victim, a German soldier, an anti-war newspaper man, and a prosecutor at Nuremberg met in a panel last Tuesday to discuss the ramifications of war guilt. It became immediately apparent that they were as diverse in point of view as in background. Dwight Macdonald, who published Politics during World War II, which he described as a radical socialist anti-war magazine, began the discussion. Macdonald pointed out that it was impossible to indict a people as a whole. Guilt is always an individual thing. He felt that the only people who are guilty are those who take criminal action or those who actively condone such action. Macdonald stressed that we cannot have a law based on the assumption that people should act as heroes. Historically, he said, people have not acted as heroes. However, in Germany there was a group which should be held directly responsible, he felt, and these were the people in power. For power by its very nature arrogates to the person who holds responsibility for its proper use. Macdonald reiterated a theme found in Hannah Arendt's article "Eichman in Jerusalem" that Germans in power could have relinquished their posts. This would have put them in disfavor with the Nazis but was not likely to have occurred. These people could not claim ignorance of the atrocities and yet many of them instead of rebelling tried to perfect such techniques as mass extermination and experimentation on human subjects.

In conclusion Macdonald attacked the Nuremberg trials as a travesty of justice. He felt this was for two reasons. First, the trials were based on ex post facto laws; second, because of the fact that the judges came to the trials with unclean hands. Macdonald contended that the Russian work camps and atrocities in Poland and the American use of the atom bomb made the judges incompetent to judge others' atrocities.

Mr. Edwin M. Sears, prosecutor at Nuremberg, then took up the discussion, pointing out that a distinction should be made between the externality of law and the internality of morals. Law, being an artificial construct, could make one culpable for acts for which one did not feel guilty or leave one unaccountable without expunging the sense of guilt. Sears maintained that the Germans suffered from a phenomenon common now in America: A search for vicarious guilt. This phenomenon is experienced by people in the North who feel culpable for the situation of the Negro in the South. In the same way, the average German felt guilty for the acts of the Nazis.

Then Sears went on to discuss a point which the other panelists felt was debatable, for he contended that resistance was impossible under the Nazis. He stated that, since it took the whole world to subdue Germany, how could a few disorganized people hope to resist them?

Following Sears' speech, Dr. Bracher, a German soldier during the war and now an eminent political scientist and historian, tried to give the German position on the war. He felt that the general attitude could be divided into two parts. The first point of view was enunciated most consistently by Karl Jaspers, who stated that Germany must accept its collective responsibility. Jaspers felt that particularly the German intelligentsia had failed to meet the crisis in Germany by following a self-imposed muteness to the growing atrocities that had become more and more evident. The other point of view called for a feeling of collective shame that, though the German people were not directly responsible, they should feel shame for what had taken place.

Dr. Bracher also felt that though the Nuremberg trials had legitimacy because of the unusual circumstances of the times, he felt that the trials themselves psychologically were mishandled. The Allies, by completely running the trials, made it impossible for the Germans to expunge their own guilt. The trials also gave a feeling of completeness which mitigated against an unflinching look by the Germans at what had taken place in their country. The leaders were killed and de-Nazification started which, to be effective, had to cover over memories of the efficiency and logic of this process.

Finally Dr. Bettelheim spoke. Dr. Bettelheim was an inmate of Dachau; however, he did not dwell on his experiences there and instead turned his attention to certain ambiguities of guilt. First he told of how he had been back after the war to Vienna and had seen his confiscated house there. This naturally upset him, as it brought back many memories of the times. He then went on to state that his house in Chicago is on land that used to belong to the American Indians and this land was legally stolen from them in the same way that Hitler stole from his conquered peoples. Yet we feel differently about these two cases.

Panel on War Novel Proves to Be a Failure

By Alex Primm

One of the more notable disappointments of the Symposium was the panel discussion on "The War Novel," by Richard Christiansen, Dwight Macdonald and Stephen Spender on Wednesday of the Symposium Week in Perkins Hall. After a lively introduction to the topic by Dr. Gilbert Johns of the psychology department, Dwight Macdonald, who is presently on the staff of New York, approached the novels of World War Two through the novels of the First World War.

Macdonald pointed out that the great novels of the first war, The Enormous Room, All is Quiet on the Western Front and A Farewell to Arms looked at the war through the combatant's point of view, but the novels of the second war, such as The Naked and the Dead or From Here to Eternity, took a more civilian point of view.

The British poet Stephen Spender also compared the novels of the First World War with those of the Second World War, but from the British point of view.

Agreeing with Macdonald that the points of view of the novelists of the two wars differed, Spender also said that the novels of the Spanish Civil War were extremely different than those of either war. He pointed out that Malraux's Man's Hope, a novel from the Spanish Civil War, is more heroic and revolutionary in its mood than novels from the Second World War.

Mr. Richard Christiansen, an associate editor of the Chicago Daily News, briefly talked on the American novels of the Second World War, especially on the poor quality of recent novels such as James Jones' The Thin Red Line.

During the question period after the participant's short speeches, Dwight Macdonald pointed out that the American novelists seem to be almost sexually fascinated with the art of war. He said that their treatment of fighting scenes approach the pornographic as the author's see combat in the same a fifth rate novelist sees a love affair.

While the discussion was often lively, mainly through the efforts of Dwight Macdonald, it lacked depth and any original ideas on the novels of the Second World War. No European novels of the period were discussed. If the panel were more fully prepared and the topic had not covered such a broad field, the discussion would have been interesting as well as lively.

tion existing in Europe as a result of the settlement of 1919. The weak states while the West had brought into existence formed a large Central European power vacuum, a situation which the West did little to correct. At the same time, the Fascist nations and the democracies held illusions about the unwillingness of either to act.

But after Czechoslovakia, Western illusions were gone, and in March, 1939, Czechoslovakia signed a guarantee for the protection of Poland. The Polish crisis willfully created by Hitler during the summer of 1939, opened the way to a new complication: the interference of Soviet Russia. While Chamberlain reluctantly negotiated with Moscow, Hitler in an attempt to prevent opposition alliance, reversed his attitude towards the Soviet and quickly signed a trade agreement followed by a non-aggression pact with Russia. Stalin's reason for entering into such an agreement is not very clear; but Mr. Snell explained them first as a calculated effort to turn Hitler against the West according to Communist dogma which predicted war amongst capitalist nations; and second, as an attempt to make territorial gains and weaken the anti-communist position in the world without any physical effort on his own part. Thus it was, said Mr. Snell, that Hitler, the most vocal anti-communist in Europe, allowed himself to become a tool for Stalin while achieving his own ends.

Meanwhile, Britain and France assured Poland of their support, at the same time asking Hitler to negotiate. But Hitler had done with negotiations, and on the days following the ratification of the German-Soviet pact, September 1, he began the invasion of Poland and with it the Second World War.

The primary responsibility, said Mr. Snell in conclusion, was Hitler's and the secondary responsibility was Stalin's. But one must also not discount the influence of Mussolini, the illusions of the Anglo-French appeasement, and non-committal position of the United States, all of which in some way, brought about the war with a combination of blunder and plan.

Finally, he said that the judgment of subsequent history depends upon our interpretation of the causes of the Second World War. But he warned against any contemporary foreign policy on that basis, because it is not the same Germany today.

• Zahn States

Dr. Zahn himself an objector to the war, argued strongly for a broader legal definition of conscientious objection and for a more satisfactory program for those given the classification.

He extended the problem to include the income tax system, which forces a man to support the defense installment against his conscience. He suggested an alternate equal contribution system for the objector, a course of action that would eliminate abuses of the privilege.

Dr. Zahn went on to classify the objector in World War II and to evaluate the implications of the various types of objectors. Over 64% belonged to peace churches, Quakers, Mennonites and the Brethren. The average person in this group was under 25, rural, and largely uneducated.

The greater part of the remainder, those belonging to churches either neutral or actively supporting the war or to no church, fell into an almost entirely different descriptive category. They were older, very well educated, urban, involved in organized peace movements.

The first category often represents conformity to the system of values laid down by the church, while the second gradually indicates resistance to any established value system in order to follow the dictates of the in-d-i-v-i-d-u-a-l conscience.

The civilian public service programs assigned to the objectors were criticized on the basis of the above divisions. Felling trees appealed to a segment of objectors, but such programs denied to many the opportunity to dissent in any meaningful way.

Dr. Zahn concluded that in a nation like ours, totally committed to subscription, it is necessary to correct not only the legal definition of a conscientious objector, but to provide a real opportunity for the individual to turn his convictions into a service for all of human society. The stigma is often attached to the objectors is unjust and an actual betrayal of the ideals we claim to be fighting for.

Greek-Independent Dispute And Frat Role Examined

By Joe English

What do fraternities do for Colorado College which otherwise would not be done? In order to answer this question in a not-too-soury grapes attitude, or outside-looking-in approach, let me try to state my viewpoints first as opinions, and the attempt to support these opinions with observations. Much of the controversy over fraternities on this campus is the result of an inability to comprehend and accept differences in others. Through repeated self-deceptions we have convinced ourselves that Colorado College is some sort of super-school, and we, therefore, are super-students. Any such statement is its own disproof, and in particular, in saying "I don't need a fraternity for my social life" (a statement we'll consider later), the supercilious independent passes moral judgment on those who do. His super-brain either ignores his ungracious fellow-student, or does not give a damn about him.

While the independent preaches conformity of non-conformity, the fraternities embrace the status quo too readily. Fraternities on the Colorado College campus have existed on inertia; pledges merge and move, life goes on. While denying that it is the fraternity that makes the man, they fail to practice the converse which they preach. The ungracious student does not change; super-Greek continues to view those who differ with him as finks; pledges receive their "know-all, see-all, do-nothing" indoctrination.

Now that I have alienated everyone, we should attempt to define the raison d'être for fraternities at Colorado College. This task returns us to the earlier statement of the independent. The majority of independents, I presume, think the primary function of fraternities here is a social function. I suppose it is unimportant whether this contention is true or not; we should be concerned rather with the intended purpose of fraternities. But since we're not, we should at least state what we think fraternities should be, and then express our dissatisfaction with them because they fail to live up to our definition. As far as I know, no independent has done this. We have our "Weakly Ritch" and who likes a weak bitch? proclaiming the negative aspects of fraternities, but we have no "strongly Cheer" broadcasting the advantages of independent life. Most independents don't know what fraternities are, but neither do they know what fraternities should be.

Incongruously members of fraternities frequently support the opinion that a fraternity's raison d'être is its social advantages. "A fraternity," we hear, "gives the student the opportunity to live with other students he gets along with. A fraternity teaches the student to live with others. It emphasizes the community, rather than the individual."

All this is noble and fine. But if such actually is their reason for being, fraternities are unnecessary on the Colorado College campus. If this is their raison d'être, fraternities offer nothing more than the Lovelace Hill's Development, Inc., with a little Greek added for flavor.

Thus, the basic question is "Do fraternities exist solely for their members, disregarding the welfare of Colorado College?" If fraternities exist solely for themselves, we must leave fraternity matters to fraternities under a policy of enlightened self-interest. If, however, fraternities exist also to advance the welfare of Colorado College, they then are the concern of every member of the Colorado College Community. Since this latter position is my outside-looking-in approach (supported by watermelon rinds, short-shorts and the Colorado School for the Deaf and Blind), I examine fraternities from this approach.

Where is the fraternity that sponsors a James Farmer or George Wallace lecture? Where is the fraternity that once a year encourages (initiates) travel to Denver in support of our hockey team? Where is the fraternity that drums up support for our football and basketball teams? We have no "Zelta Chi Theta: Its Role in World War II" during symposium; we have no "Fraternities and the Civil Rights Question" during the rest of the year.

Joining a fraternity is a positive action, but unfortunately this is where the active role stops.

• Spender Speaks

The mood of the 1920's, Spender said, was one of "tragic gaiety." T. S. Eliot's poem, "The Waste Land" was a picture of a possible future that a few sensitive artists realized the 1920's might lead to.

But in the early 1930's many young Europeans and Americans realized, through experience with the rise of Fascism, the vast unemployment and finally the Spanish Civil War, that the status quo could not be accepted.

Therefore, usually non-political people such as painters, writers and poets were compelled to be come political in the face of the Fascist threat. In becoming political, the artists showed that they realized the danger of Fascism to their intellectual freedom and that they had to defend this freedom themselves as the democracies were not offering resistance to the totalitarian governments.

According to Spender, this was why so many of the artists of the 30's were Communists or openly sympathized with their cause; that "the democracies were not democratic," that it was Communism alone that openly opposed Hitler.

The democracies seemed to have taken an "either-or" policy towards Fascism. This policy was shown in the Spanish Civil War when the Western allies realized that they either would, or would not, have to support the Spanish Republic.

In choosing not to support the Republic, the West was actually supporting Franco and, after several months, it became obvious that the policy of non-intervention was impotent as an attempt to contain militant Fascism.

During this period, roughly from 1932 until the signing of the Hitler-Stalin Pact in 1939, intellectuals were actively fighting the totalitarian governments and social injustice in Europe and elsewhere. Andre Malraux fought with the Comintern in China, John Steinbeck took part in the American labor union struggle, Arthur Keostler was in the German Communist party, and Ignazio Silone fought in the Italian underground.

However, Spender pointed out there was constant disagreement among the liberals themselves about philosophic and moral points which often dulled their cause. "Liberalism seemed to fail when it was forced to make a stand," Spender said, "because liberals don't live liberally."

George Orwell, an English novelist, was an example of a liberal who did not live liberally, but his case was the exception. During the Spanish Civil War, instead of joining the more romantic International Brigade, Orwell joined an anarchist group in Catalonia and fought as a common soldier.

As an effort to stop Nazism, the intellectuals could do little themselves other than write and attempt to warn democracy of its coming danger. But, that they alone realized the danger and did attempt to warn democracy of its peril shows that these scattered individuals contributed more than themselves to save democracy from Fascism.

The spirit of the 1930's was killed mainly through two events, the signing of the Hitler-Stalin Pact, which denied by Russia everything the liberals had been fighting for, and the outbreak of war in 1939, which marked the allies realization of Fascism's danger.

While the 1940's were characterized by a lack of passion that was rampant in the 30's, the traditional values of the Graeco-Christian world were reinstated.

Mr. Spender's address was one of the most interesting of the Symposium. Closing the lecture, Frank A. Krutke, Chairman of the English Department, paraphrasing St. Paul, said that Stephen Spender had given the audience "All of which he saw, All of which he was."

urged caution, and the predominant question became: What is Russia up to? The burden of the argument in 1946 had shifted to rest upon those who favored cooperation. The actions of Russia had come to the point where a tough line was urged by men like Kennedy and Dulles with a policy of deterrence.

Mr. Sondermann concluded by saying that during this time much of public opinion vacillated greatly because America lacked an understanding of international relations. There was an unwillingness to let common interest rule policy, and perhaps more important the American people couldn't distinguish fact from value judgement (as opposed to truth from falsity).

Then Mr. Platig took up the topic of the spirit of American participation in World War II. It was a spirit of subdued optimism with its roots deep in American history, a spirit which sought the final end of war as a human institution. The UN Charter was the principle for which we fought, and a return to the peaceful progress of Capitalism. Americans were tired after the war and wanted rest.

The postwar problems came as a shock. American economy could not be freed of its global burden. The People blamed Washington and considered a new neutrality to separate themselves from a struggling world. An example of the trauma experienced in transition to the Cold War was the election of 1948. But a rapid readjustment leading into the Korean War proved America's ability to live in an uncertain world.

We have moved now, said Mr. Platig, from a time when we could have things our own way or ignore them to a time when we are unavoidably involved. The American people have matured to some degree. There is now moderation and confidence in our foreign policy. Our major business, he said is to salvage the weak and the individual from the power which threatens them today.

Following these two US oriented presentations, Mr. Olson introduced the European reactions to the outcome of the war. The only victor on the continent, he said, was Soviet Russia. The rest were bloody and broken. While America was feeling strength and exaltation, Europe felt defeat, exhaustion and despair. Europeans felt world politics were irrelevant. Unaware of the possible tensions between the two new powers, Europe remained friendly towards both. They had only two outside interests: a sense of universalism, the UNO concept, which left them prone to ignoring the negative side of arguments, especially those against Russia; and the necessity for a restoration of the old order overseas.

The only thing which united Europe in the war was a common foe. After the war, nations again took up their self interest, making any generalization of European opinion impossible. Britain, the most internationally minded nation, took "bridge the gap" attitude, thinking that it's common interests with the US and Russia could smooth over differences between them. France was well aware of defeat. Groping for a new role, she looked for Russian cooperation to keep Germany weak. Italy was engaged in an internal struggle for democracy and remained little concerned with international affairs. Scandinavia, except for the neutral Swedes, changed their former neutrality for a commitment to a new order for collective security; this mostly because of fear of Soviet Russia. Of the low countries, Belgium, effectively restored her overseas influence, while the Dutch futilely attempted to regain theirs. Spain, the condemned power of Europe, was ostracized as the last remnant of Fascism East Europe, except Yugoslavia, fell under Russian control.

Most of Europe, said Mr. Olson, was reluctant to accept the emergence of the Cold War. They had

USAFA Band Concert Imparts Mood of War

By Genevieve Vaughn

Music of the Second World War, from Beethoven's Symphony No. 5 in C minor to "Praise the Lord and Pass the Ammunition" was presented in a very well received concert by the United States Air Force Academy Band, directed by Captain A. D. Gabriel, Friday night in Shove Chapel.

Perhaps the most interesting of the selections played was the arrangement for band of the first movement of the Beethoven symphony. If it sounded a bit odd to hear Beethoven's fifth played without strings, the arrangement was excellent, and the band performance seemed to lend some of the flavor of the war years.

The performance might have been more effective if the piano phrases had been played with more definition. However, aside from that one shortcoming the performance was competent, and during the climax, exciting.

Richard Rodgers' "Victory at Sea", written to commemorate the United States Navy's victories, was given a spirited performance, as was Robert Russell Bennett's "Guadalcanal March." The performance of "Victory at Sea" suffered only from one or two crescendos which were loud to the point where the quality of the sound suffered. Otherwise, the performance, again, was entirely competent.

The last selection of the program was devoted to songs popular during the war, such as Richard Rodgers' "The Last Time I Saw Paris", written as a tribute to hoped for cooperation, and the US-Russian split forced a profound change upon European attitudes. It was after the Truman Doctrine, a major shift in US foreign policy, that rapid readjustment allowed Europe to take a leading role in establishing the new order. Mr. Olson closed with a quotation from Arnold Toynbee which recalled the ruler of Plato's Republic and compared his action with the reluctance of the United States to accept the burden of power, and the quick and unfavorable response of Europe because that power was beneficent.

the conquered France, and Tin Pan Alley's "I Left My Heart at the Stage Door Canteen."

In this section the band was assisted by a male quartet, which it at times outshone. This section of the program included such classics as "Praise the Lord and Pass the Ammunition," "Coming in on a Wing and a Prayer," the British soldiers' song "I've Got Sixpence," "Waltzing Matilda" of the "Ausies," "Lily Marlene," a German Song which became popular among American troops, "Let's Remember Pearl Harbor," a bounding ditty, "The Führer Says His Is the Master Race," and "God Bless America".

The playing was spirited and the enthusiasm of the band communicated itself to the audience, many of whom began to sing along to themselves.

The concert as a whole was well performed and well received. As a part of the Symposium it succeeded in communicating some of the spirit and mood of the war years in a way in which lectures could not.

Dr. Duke Speaks About Chemistry

Colorado College was fortunate during the past week in having Dr. Frederick R. Duke, Professor of Chemistry at Texas A. and M. Dr. Duke was under the Visiting Scientist Program of the Division of Chemical Education of the American Chemical Society sponsored by the National Science Foundation.

During his visit on Jan. 23 and 24, Dr. Duke lectured on many subjects pertaining to his own fields of study and research. Dr. Duke relied on his personal background in analytical, physical, and inorganic chemistry to provide a variety of topics for his lectures.

Various chemistry classes heard him speak on the subjects of enzymes and electrical conductance in ionic fluids. These talks were rather limited to the developments of present theories pertaining to the subjects.

In a special Delta Epsilon meeting, he lectured on the recent advances and future objectives of fuel cell research. Fuel cells are devices which convert chemical energy directly into electrical energy for immediate use as such. A common example is a car battery.

Dr. Duke

Dr. Duke evaluated different fuel cells on a "merit" scale which related efficiency to the weight of the cell. At present there is much work being done to perfect the aluminum cell because it is one of the few cells that can be efficiently researched, yet is applicable to self-powered mobiles.

He gave a number of advantages for employing a fuel cell in automotive electric motor in automobiles, such as no atmosphere pollution, greater efficiency than the gasoline motor, and ease of recharging. In light of recent advances, he predicted that research in the next 25 years would produce efficient and practical fuel-cell cells.

In his final lecture, sponsored by the student affiliates of the American Chemical Society, Dr. Duke talked on the subject of acid-base reactions in fused salts. Melted ionic compounds are used as solvents for certain acid-base reactions to study these reactions over a much wider pH range than possible for the solvent water.

Dr. Duke was also available for his stay for consultation with students wishing information on graduate school opportunities.

Reid Says Discussion Closed On Residential College Idea

By Paul Tatter

According to the administration, the question of whether CC shall or shall not be a residential college is closed. However, the question of policy within the context of a residential college is not closed.

In a statement read before the ASCC last Monday, Dean Reid said that the character of this college has been established by the Board of Trustees, that the administration and student government operate within that framework, and that this character will not be altered to satisfy internal or external pressure groups.

Character in this statement applies to the concept of a residential college, and this has been decided several years ago, with some student participation. Since then the college has proceeded with its plans in this direction.

Don Oden, chairman of the Upperclassmen's Residence Complex Committee, said that at present the architects are meeting to discuss site development for the new upperclass men's dormitory.

This involves determining the unique features of the building area. The architects are also awaiting receipt of a summary of program requirements from Mr. Oden's committee, which includes the ideas to be incorporated into the building designs.

President Wornor suggested that the critical time for student-administration discussion on the physical aspects of the new residence hall should be in mid-spring when the preliminary plans will be delivered by the architects. At that time the plans will be in sufficiently vague form to facilitate changes suggested by the Residence Committee.

Following a presentation to the ASCC, said President Wornor, an open meeting may be useful, allowing for the showing and discussion of these preliminary plans in order to consider anything that may have previously been overlooked.

Until that time, students interested in making clear their views on the prospective residential situation, in terms of the physical plant and policies affected by that plant, are encouraged to do so by talking to Mr. Oden.

ASCC Executive Council to Vote On Proposed Constitution Revisions

On Monday, January 27, the Constitution Committee of the ASCC, Executive Council proposed several revisions to the By-Laws of the Constitution of the ASCC.

The committee, composed of Jim Lucey, Bev Carrington, and Diane Cox, has been reviewing the By-Laws for the past several months, hoping to make the Constitution a more workable guide to follow.

The committee proposed the following revisions, which will be voted upon by the Executive Council at the next meeting on Monday.

1. Article I, The Executive Council, Section 6, Faculty Advisor. At the first meeting of the new Executive Council, the new Council shall elect one member of the faculty to serve as an ex-officio member of the Executive Council.

Lodge Committee Organized for '64

It has been announced that a national STUDENTS FOR LODGE Committee has been formed to solicit signatures requesting Ambassador Henry Cabot Lodge to return from South Viet Nam and seek the Republican Presidential nomination.

It is expected that Ambassador Lodge, who has served in the U.S. Senate as U.S. Ambassador to the United Nations, and as the Republican Vice Presidential candidate in 1960, may be receptive to a draft movement.

Students interested in representing the Students for Lodge, National Committee on this campus and organizing a campus committee should contact:

Dean Reid Announces

Administration Brochure to Supplant Student Handbook

By Paul Tatter

Without consulting the Pub Board, Dean Reid announced at the last ASCC meeting that this spring the administration will publish a brochure on the non-academic services of the college. Non-academic services include housing, board, recreational facilities, etc. The Dean said that this was basically a public relations move to inform prospective students of the services at the time of application.

This brochure obviously assumes some of the functions of the Student Handbook. When asked why the Handbook would not suffice, Dean Reid mentioned the necessity for early publication date, dissatisfaction with the job done by last year's Handbook editors, and the desire to have a single permanent publication.

He also explained that since it was to be the administration's publication there was no need to consult Pub Board, which deals only with student publications. The Dean said that he would be happy to have a student work on the new brochure, but that since it was frankly advertising, the student would have to present the situation from that, and the administration's point of view: no negative editorializing.

This, however, leaves the Handbook with the rather trifling task of describing student activities, and all but eliminates its usefulness. Also, funds will be taken from the Handbook's present budget in order to finance the brochure.

The administration seems to have ignored several proposals made some time ago by the Pub Board. Those included: (1) that the selection date for Handbook editor be moved up so that he could work with the advice of administration and Pub Board, (2) that the Handbook contain an introductory essay by the editor in consultation with the admissions department, (3) that the remainder of the Handbook be strictly a factual description, and (4) that the Handbook pass a final review by the Pub Board.

It was the feeling of Pub Board that students were capable of producing a fair Handbook under these conditions. This the Pub Board did on its own initiative.

At no time, according to members of Pub Board, has the administration contacted them concerning past problems or future desires and possibilities with the Handbook.

Dean Reid

Text of Reid's Statement

The character of Colorado College is established by the Board of Trustees. The basic policies governing the operation of the college are the responsibility of the president. Faculty committees and administrative officers are delegated responsibility for interpreting policies in specific areas. Student government and student organizations operate within this framework and are given authority over student activities that conform to the basic policies of the college. The fundamental character of the college will not be altered to satisfy pressure groups, whether they be within or outside the college.

Winter Carnival Plans Underway

The first Sophomore Class meeting of 1964 was held last Tuesday morning. Plans for the annual OC Winter Carnival, which will be February 20-22 this year, were the main topic of the discussion.

Bill Mracheck, Sophomore Class president, announced that festivities will begin Thursday evening, Feb. 20, with a fashion show and ski movies in Perkins.

The annual hockey and broom-ball games will be played on Friday afternoon and evening on OC's ice rink. One of the big moments of Winter Carnival, the crowning of the King and Queen, will take place at the dance, which will immediately follow the finals of the hockey and broomball games on Friday evening.

Festivities will move to the Broadmoor Saturday afternoon for the ski races and individual skiing. A skating exhibition and presentation of the King and Queen will take place between the OC hockey game, which will climax the Winter Carnival on Saturday evening.

LETTERS to the EDITORS

The following is a memorandum from the Dean of Men to President Worcester. The TIGER is printing the memorandum at the President's request.

From: Dean Reid
To: President Worcester

It was unfortunate that the Tiger publicized a rumor to the effect that 40% of the freshmen were planning to transfer from Colorado College at midyear; since it created quite a bit of unrest among our freshmen men, many of them actually believing it. In fact, some members of the faculty gave this rumor some credence. We received several letters from parents of freshmen men who were not doing too well academically, making reference to the rumor. I am sure you are interested in the facts now that we have completed registration for the second semester. Actually, eight freshmen men failed to re-enroll for the second semester. The attrition percentage was .035, a far cry from the 40% rumor. Only one of eight is transferring to another school.

Freshman attrition is as follows:

Withdrawn During Semester

Man—withdrawn 11-19-63; had two F's and two D's at mid-semester; he rightfully determined that he didn't belong in college and withdrew.

Withdrawn End of Semester

Man—1.72 average, planned to transfer to a state institution in his home state where the academic demands would not be so great.

Man—1.37 average, local boy, placed on probation, decided not to re-enroll.

Man—1.33 average, placed on probation, decided not to return for the second semester.

Suspended at End of First Semester

Man—0.18 average, local boy living at home.

Man—0.43 average.

Man—0.20 average, local boy living at home.

Man—0.11 average.

—J. Juan Reid

Dean of Men

The TIGER regrets any misunderstanding of last semester's article noting a rumor to the effect that 40% of the freshman class was contemplating transfer. We appreciate the efforts of those concerned to set the facts in order and hope that our publication of the memorandum and the letter from Dean of Men Juan Reid printed in last week's issue will settle the issue with some finality.

The point of Miss Pennell's article was not that a particular percentage of her class was considering transferring, but that certain facts about the social atmosphere at this college have led to dissatisfaction among the freshmen.

ASCC NOTES

The ASCC had a fairly routine meeting this week. Constitutional changes were suggested which may be found elsewhere in the paper.

Black and Gold will sponsor hockey buses to the rest of the home games. Round trip will cost the students $25.

CU has announced that they are dropping out of the Colorado Collegiate Association because the programs of the group are not beneficial to CU.

The Academic committee is hoping to meet with Dr. Peterson and the Committee on Instruction soon to discuss the possibility of student participation in the selection of curriculum.

The Freshman class will have a dance for the whole school on February 8, following the basketball game.

Cordon Aoyagi announced that the trash can committee is going full speed and that now they have only to decide upon a color appropriate to the campus. Any suggestions will be considered.

Respectfully submitted,
Karen McVaine
ASCC Secretary

EDITORIAL:

All's Fair with Love, and More

Governor John Love, the politician who ran on a lie, and who is now seeking to live it, is in serious trouble, and justly so. This year he has had to admit that one cannot cut taxes and maintain state services. He has expressed his inability to do this by seeking tuition raises at state universities, and by cutting down on budgets of state penal institutions and mental health hospitals. In short, he has replaced missing tax revenues with a selective taxation of students, indigent mental patients, and prisoners, to name only three groups affected.

Even if he could have cut taxes and maintained services, his fundamental political premise would be wrong. It should never be a question of maintaining state services, but rather of developing them and making them more efficient in human and economic terms. Love's blanket 10% cut of appropriations to all institutions gave public social workers the dictum that they could not continue, or develop strong rehabilitation programs; that in Pueblo the progress away from a custodial type of hospital to a rehabilitation center must be slowed if not halted. Certainly if more cuts are made, state hospitals and prisons will be forced to house a growing number of uncured inmates, and this will eventually result in greater cost.

At CU and other state universities Governor Love has decided to save money by charging a 60% higher tuition rate to out-of-state students, and a 25% higher rate to others. Here again he has used the clever tool of the politician of taxing the minority to benefit the majority.

But the real question is how large was the benefit to the average Coloradan. In most cases the tax cut is a pittance when measured against yearly income. We could almost say that Love has robbed the poor to feed the unknowing rich.

Handsome Governor Love has all the makings of a fine politician as long as he can continue to deceive the people about what a state can and can't do. Certainly political observers should note the effect on a local and national level of politicians who promise more for less, and who are willing to sacrifice a state's human awareness for a crass and insignificant monetary saving. —JHH

How to Prevent World War III

The follow-up meeting to the 1964 Symposium will take place on Thursday, February 6th, at 8:00 p.m. in the Loomis Lounge. It will seek to translate the lessons learned during Symposium Week into present-day terms by answering the question: "How to Prevent World War III."

The program will be in the form of a panel discussion, which will leave ample time for audience participation, including challenges, criticisms, and alternative suggestions. In fact, the bulk of the meeting time will be given over to an Open Forum type of discussion.

In keeping with the general approach to the Symposium itself, the panelists are chosen from the college constituency in a larger sense—including faculty, students, and alumni.

Four major approaches to the prevention of World War III will be discussed. These approaches run the gamut from a high level of armaments, with policies of mutual deterrence, to pacifism. Intermediate positions will deal with the role which regular diplomatic processes can play in avoiding another war, and also with the role of international organizations, leading to world government and world law.

Speaking on the subject of arms control and balance of power politics will be Mr. Robert Williams, a senior majoring in Political Science. Mr. David Findley of the Political Science Department will discuss the role of diplomacy, negotiation, and mutual accommodation.

Mr. Cerald Jones, CC class of '44 and a resident of Colorado Springs who attended most of the Symposium functions, will speak on the place of international organization and the need for world government and a world rule of law.

Finally, Professor Carlton Gamier of the Department of Music will discuss the Pacifist solution to the problem of violence and war.

Sunday, February 2
Morning Worship Service
11:00 a.m.

Sermon title: "The Resonance of Faith."
Preacher: Professor Kenneth Burton.

Worship leader: Jack Covles. In our contemporary secular world man finds great difficulty in finding faith. The obsession with the particular, the individual and privatism has reached absurd proportions. Religious people have also countered this in the same kind of way using religious terms. This has often proved to be irrelevant and unappealing. One recent religious thinker has described faith as "that dimension of reality in every event and thing which provides the possibility of reverberating to the sound of other events and other things." This coming Sunday's sermon will attempt to speak to this definition of faith as a live possibility for today.

Here's Your Chance

There will be a traffic barrier on Thursday, Feb. 6. All people who have received tickets, and wish to contest them, come to room 202 at 7:00 p.m. at Rastall.

Dr. Carl Roberts of the Psychology Department will preside over the panel. The meeting is open to all interested students, faculty, and others who want to participate.

The crux of the residential college issue is the question of how Colorado College is to be structured socially after 1966. It is really a matter of determining whether the Greek-independent dualism is to continue much as it is now, with about half of all men students dependent on a fraternal organization to form a nucleus around which their social life is ordered, and half relying on the college itself and their own resources as off-campus residents.

If the new men's residence is planned and constructed around a monolithic institutional concept, with no provision for the formation of natural social groups, and if stringent social regulations are imposed on its residents, the result will be a renaissance of fraternity importance on this campus. Whether by using their institutional nature to sponsor comparatively free off-campus functions or through the informal permissiveness of house entertainment, fraternities would become the only remaining viable social units able to offer their members some degree of freedom to drink and to be alone with a girl in at least a semi-private environment. A residence hall constructed along such rigid lines would lead inevitably to a college whose social life is centered not around all-college activities and individual inclination but around five distinct social entities. Once again CC would be a Greek-oriented institution.

If, on the other hand, some provision is made NOW in planning the new residence hall for private social activity on or near the campus (the aging 3.2 beer parlor idea might be reconsidered, for example), then there will remain at this college two paths of social endeavor, each of which offers certain advantages. There will remain a possibility for each student to choose for himself which path he prefers to follow. It is our belief that the continued existence of both alternatives is essential if CC is to maintain the diversity and vigor which have characterized it and its students in the last ten years.

There should be no misunderstanding; the issue is a crucial one, one which will determine the nature of the school for years to come. The trustees' decision has, as Dean Reid pointed out, set a particular frame of action. Within that frame, however, there remains considerable opportunity for interpretation of the residential concept. The question of what type of residential college CC should become is a crucial as whether it should become such a college.

An encouraging consensus is beginning to emerge that open student-faculty-administration discussion of the issue would be helpful. The time, however, for such a discussion should be now. No longer should we be subjected to the reiteration of empty philosophical justifications, or to stultifying and negative attacks. The time has come to advance constructive and realistic proposals which will enable Colorado College to continue to offer its students a wide spectrum of social as well as academic alternatives. —P. B.

'Come Back, Africa' to Be Shown Sunday

A full length documentary movie featuring Miriam Makeba, entitled "Come Back, Africa," will be shown 5:00 Sunday, Feb. 2, in the WES room. Today the native South African faces frustration; tomorrow rebellion.

"Come Back, Africa" shows what it is like to be a native in Johannesburg today. Made in secret (the South African police were told a musical travogue was being filmed) with a non-professional cast, the thread of the story grew from actual experiences of the collaborators.

The problems of the non-white are dramatized in individual poignant terms in the story of Zacheariah and his wife Vinah, who leave Zululand because of famine.

The social paradox is aired in discussion as well. It is clear that the general feeling is one of despair, the atmosphere charged with the impossible situation of racial tension.

The vivid reality of the scene is transmitted in sequence of men going down into the mines, of bands of urchins with penny-whistles and steel drums beating it out in the dusty streets of the squalor of the huts in which is planted the inevitability of tragedy.

This is a historical document on the eve of an explosion.

"The helplessness and frustration that the average African must feel in the face of the social dilemmas that exist in South Africa today are put forth with raw vitality."—New York Times.

OPINION

By Paul Tatter

A basic cause of student-administration conflict on this campus is not so much a matter of mis-information as it is a matter of near-total lack of any information whatsoever. There is a pressing need for a medium of voluntary explanation, in unmistakable terms, of administrative, as well as of student developments and opinions.

It is indeed a regrettable state of affairs when a policy which was crystallized quite some time ago by the administration has not been placed before the student body clearly enough to eliminate, for example, the last semester's debate in the TIGER about the residential college.

It should not be necessary for individual students to probe the administration in search of a clear idea of its policies. It should rather be the duty of the administration to make unequivocal these basic policies which form the "character" of this college.

It may even be desirable for the administration to periodically inform the student body, through the TIGER, of developments in policy, in specific terms, as they occur. Students are seriously concerned about what, exactly, the administration is thinking and doing, and rightly so. And it can only strengthen the relationship if both are candid about their opinions.

Partly as a result of this situation, students are never certain of how seriously their comments are considered. Certainly a well-thought proposal cannot be ignored, but that is no guarantee that it will receive adequate attention and response.

It has become practice on this campus that if any response be found at all it is well after the issue has been raised, and is at best diversionary. The time lapse and the disingenuousness lead only to situations and statements which obstruct constructive discussion; witness the SCC demise last year and many minor clashes this year.

This situation is inexcusable and unnecessary. The administration claims to be receptive enough; it only remains to be responsive enough to prove that receptivity.

To the Editors:

I am sorry that your newspaper did not come out more vehemently against the Greek system, and I am equally sorry that you did not mention that such groups as Phi Delta Theta practice overt discrimination against Negroes and Jews. I am also sorry that you cannot mention the preferential treatment given to fraternities by the Board of Men, who publicly opposes drinking by minors, but who privately sanctions drinking in all of the frat houses.

There is much to be said against the Greek system. We have seen how members tend to disappear from college-wide social and intellectual life into the fraternity dens, where the greatest interest is not in the ideas of Plato, but the ideals of Playboy. You could have mentioned the lack of first semester social life, which is directly attributable to the Greeks, that drove the freshmen into fraternities and sororities. You might still mention that the proposed residential college will drive even more people into the Greeks, as off-campus independent apartments will be forbidden, and with them, the bulk of off-campus social life will disappear.

Apparently you are handicapped by the administration and ASOC, but you should not be afraid of printing the truth of any and all campus issues. Your inability to speak is the best sign of the times at Colorado College, where students, and future alumni, can only live and learn, and cannot participate in forming the future of their school. — Poor Richard

To the Editors:

The administration, in the past few days, has been showing its usual respect for student opinion and desire for meaningful communication—none. Its current handling of the residential college controversy is instructive. When asked to offer some justification for the concept of the residential college, the administration refuses, saying simply that this is what they want and that this is what has been decided.

The administration seems to hear any student discussion of the residential housing policy. We are told that the time for discussion was three years ago, when the matter was being decided. But the administration make no argument that will stand up to as why the decision cannot be reconsidered. Various arguments are given to various people; none seems to have survival value.

The policy itself seems to change as the need changes. Sometimes we are told that the plan is to have everyone live on campus. This seems to be what residential college means. But some students (that is, students now living off campus or students opposed to residential college) are told that it was never planned to bring everyone back on campus, that there will always be male students living off campus. And, it is added, the building will not be completed until the fall of 1966. Interpreted, this means 'you will not be affected, so drop it.'

We would like to ask then 'what is the administration's policy? Are all students to live on campus or are they not? If not, who is to be allowed to live off campus and who will make the decisions on this matter? Are senior girls to be allowed to live off campus at any time in the future? If there is to be a strictly residential campus, is there to be any liberalization of dorm rules?' No doubt the administration will answer these questions as it answered last year the question of sophomores off campus. At the last possible moment all freshmen were informed that there would be no off-campus housing allowed for sophomores for the coming year—a clever maneuver which avoided any chance . . . (or is it danger) of student reaction. So much for the blubs about student-administration communication.

Forum Committee, IRC Sponsor Guest Speaker

The Colorado College Forum Committee and the International Relations Club are joining forces to bring to this campus Mr. Glenn E. Smiley, director of field work for the Fellowship of Reconciliation.

Mr. Smiley will be on campus next Tuesday, February 4th, and will give two talks.

He will speak for the Forum Series at 11 a.m. in Olin Hall on the topic "Peoples and Ideologies." Having recently traveled in Eastern Europe, he wants to deal with some recent experiences he has had with opposite numbers in three communist countries—Czechoslovakia, Poland and East Germany.

According to Mr. Smiley, in these countries large groups of Protestants, Catholic intellectuals and humanists are confronting communist governments with a more creative spirit than has previously been the case.

At 7:30 that evening, Mr. Smiley will speak for the International Relations Club in the WES Lounge of Rastall Center, on the topic "Cracks in the Kremlin and Other Walls." In this talk he will deal with "fissures in the walls which both East and West have erected against the other."

The speaker is a native of Texas and an ordained minister of the Methodist Church. He has traveled widely in the United States and abroad, lecturing to many groups in his travels.

In Europe he has taken speaking tours through 13 countries on three occasions. He has also taken an active part in the struggle of Negroes in the South, conducting workshops in nonviolence in Montgomery, Birmingham, Tallahassee, Columbia, and Nashville.

Both meetings are open to all interested students and faculty.

Alum Jeannie Gibbs Killed

Colorado College officials today were notified that Miss Jeannie Gibbs, graduated from the college in 1962, was killed January 1 in an auto accident near Appomattox, Va., when the car in which she was riding skidded out of control on a partially snow-covered road and went over an embankment.

Miss Gibbs, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John G. Gibbs of Hot Springs, Ark., received her bachelor's degree with honors from Colorado College in French.

She had been attending the Presbyterian Graduate School of Christian Education at Richmond, Va., and was to have been sent to Belgium as a Presbyterian missionary.

Ullr Dag Festival

Jan. 31 to Feb. 2

Friday — Saturday — Sunday

• By a slip of the legal pen in Territorial times, the Breckenridge area was not "officially" admitted to the U. S. until 1906. At that time citizens retained the right to be a free and independent kingdom for 3 days each year. This independence is to be celebrated Friday, Saturday and Sunday—the Ullr Dag Festival.

• This is the only festival commemorating Ullr (Nordic god of winter and skiing), who Ullr is recognized as the patron of skiers the world over. (Ullr is Nordic for "days.")

• Friday—Beginning after sundown, fireworks and torchlight parade on Peak 6, delivery of the torch to the Crown, the official opening of the Festival.

• Saturday—Dog Sleigh Races start, 3-miled slalom, kids' races, Broadmoor Skat-

SOCIAL NEWS

Gamma Phi Beta
Last Thursday night seventeen girls were formally pledged into Gamma Phi Beta. Afterwards our Alumni hosted us to a combination dessert and fashion show. Saturday afternoon we welcomed the Fill pledges at the Honeybucket.

Gamma Phi Beta's new officers were installed Monday and we wish them the best success in the coming year: President, Marcia Irving; Pledge Trainer, Pat McLain; Social Chairman, Linda Bjelland; Recording Secretary, Onnie Costello; Corresponding Secretary, Liz Hickman; Treasurer, Judy Jaccard.

We congratulate our three Phi Beta Kappas, Judy Clark, Jean Torcom, and Carol Wright.

Kappa Alpha Theta

Saturday was a big day for the Thetas, for we attended our annual Founder's Day luncheon, where the new pledges were introduced to our alumni; and afterwards joined the Sigma Chis, much to our pleasure, in greeting their new pledges.

Congratulations are in store for Pam Peterson and Clegg Wingate on their recent pinning.

Beta Theta Phi

Welcome to the following new, stalwart Beta pledges: Dave Alger, Skip Calvert, Mike Johnson, Ray Jones, Art Kerkhof, George Lindley, Steve Lyman, Chris (Zeke) Secor, and Kurt Sontag. Following the pledging last Saturday, these men were entertained at an afternoon tea by members of the local D.A.R.

Sigma Chi

The chapter welcomes 21 new pledges: Power Boothe, Andy Barnes, Seth Bradley, Tom Cogswell, Dick Englestad, Dave Friend, Mike Grogan, Neil Hamilton, Brad
Jones, Stuart Johnston, Mike Ju-govich, Tom Knudsen, Rick Lopez, Jim W. Mayer, Bill Metzger, Denney Pendleton, Mike Runnels,
Jim Salzenstein, Don Smith, John

Sheldon, and Bill Thomas. House redecorating began Tuesday. . . . Congratulations to pledges and actives in raising Sigma Chi to first in scholarship of fraternities on campus. Special credit goes to Scholarship Chairman Bud Fleming.

In a tragic automobile accident over vacation Tom Copeland was killed and Madgie Knowlton critically injured. Tom, a Sigma Chi pledge and a fine fellow, is a great loss to us all. We wish Madgie the best of luck in making a rapid recovery.

Alpha Phi

The new semester has been ushered in in a grand and busy style—ask the Alpha Phis. Rush, Symposium . . . and alas, classes. To begin, during Rush, Lynn Siple formally announced to the House her engagement to Cadet William Sweetay, with a candle.

Thursday, January 23, was the day of all days, however. Undoubtedly the earliest A. Phi. has opened their tired lids in many a week, the active chapter braved the dark and cold of the morning to honor the new pledges at a break-fast at the lodge.

The pledges were awakened by the Big Sisters at the unrealistic hour of 6:45 and escorted (more like "dragged") to the surprise meal. That night, the pledge pins came out.

To add to the excitement and joy of the Phi, an announcement was made: "Cathy Grant, president of McGregor Hall and winner of many other honors, has been named Junior Phi Beta Kappa!" We are indeed a happy house.

Kappa Kappa Gamma

The entire sorority wishes to congratulate its new officers who were elected Monday night. These girls include Sharon Shackelford, president; Linda Dunkin, 1st vice president and personnel chairman; Jamie Adler, 2nd vice president and efficiency chairman; Judy Stampfli, pledge trainer; Mary Anne Hubbell, rush chairman; and Lauree Sails, treasurer.

We would also like to extend our congratulations to all the fraternities and sororities for their very fine pledge classes.

Finally, our best wishes to Barb Couey who passed a candle announcing her engagement to Sam Coleman.

Delta Gamma

Four D.G.'s have returned to join the ranks this semester: Sue McAlister, Joan Schmitt, Nancy Schorling, and Sally Sikes. It is great to have you back!

Fifth West

Fifth West wishes to take this opportunity to welcome back the 250 brothers who live in our house. We are especially happy to welcome back Robin Rudolf, and we want to thank him for having Slocum repainted.

At the wing meeting brothers Rufe and Mortimer suggested that Slocum get into the mainstream of campus life by sponsoring a series of lectures by foreign students. Their resolution was killed 12-2, and instead a motion complaining about cigarette machines in the lobby was passed. Our bill calls for an elimination of all such dangerous objects from our residential college.

At the same wing meeting, brother John announced that he had given his fountain pen to a beautiful CC coed, Miss Alice Bemis. We sang a chorus of "Rock of Ages" and adjourned for the evening.

We would like to thank the Tiger for letting us publish our news in their columns. We, too, believe that we can contribute to all-college news, and we hope that future issues of the Tiger, our student newspaper, will carry our news, and that the editors will not censor it.

Best wishes also to Vicky Jacobson who is pinned to Chuck White, Phi Delta Theta.

The D.G.'s joined the Kappa Sigs to help usher in their new pledges last Saturday afternoon at the Krazy Kat.

The Delta Gammas send their heartiest congratulations and special best wishes to Buffie Buffman and John Collias on their wedding today.

Kappa Sigma

Our latest victims include such stalwarts of Druidistic Depravity as Tom Mahony, Jim Studholm, Bob Stapp, Adolph Otterstein, Jim Amidon, Dick Haugland, Steve Mills, Gordon Aoyagi, John Genz, Bob Luidbergh, George Brice, Tom Bruce, Ted Wert, Ron Kinkston, Bill Cogswell, Paul Matray, Vic Kitt, Warner Reeder.

And speaking of "rush," the K-Sigs are at it again. John and Buffie are finally getting married Friday, following John Barker and Sue Lindholm over Christmas.

Here's another thing you might get a kick out of: Mike Durfee got pinned to Karen McIvaine.

Phi Delta Theta

• NOTICE—After this week Social News will be discontinued, and will be replaced by an all-school social calendar. News from social groups must be submitted to the Tiger news editor by Monday at 4 p. m. and will be handled as regular copy.

Honor Council Publishes Book To Help Prevent Plagiarism

In the last two semesters the Honor Council has held an overabundance of plagiarism hearings. This has been all the more noticeable because many of the cases were avoidable. That is, they were not results of conscious attempts to deceive. The accused students had merely failed to fulfill their responsibility to learn what is proper acknowledgement and apply these rules conscientiously.

Several students, even seniors, have expressed to me the belief that you need use only footnotes and not use quotation marks when you take a paragraph or sentence from an author, so long as you add a few words of your own. Such a failure to understand the need to acknowledge one's dependence on the words of an author as well as his ideas is far too common.

An honor system cannot work unless its members accept the responsibility of learning what is honorable procedure. Certainly attempts have been made to give the individual an opportunity to learn the methods of acknowledgement.

However, it became clear that all the methods have suffered from a lack of uniformity. Many professors are negligent in stressing what they expect of the students. Students are expected to use any one of a number of different style manuals such as Pirenne's, if they have any questions.

The Honor Council has failed to always stress proper acknowledgment in freshman orientation. With these methods some students have managed to maintain completely erroneous concepts.

To help correct this major failing, an Honor Council committee under Phil LeCuyer has prepared a booklet "Source Acknowledgment" to be distributed to all students in the next few weeks. In following years it will be given at no charge only to freshmen and transfer students.

It should be stressed that the booklet is not designed to dictate a set of rules for adoption by all faculty members in their classes. It is a clarification of generally accepted standards which a student must follow in all writing and speaking unless he is given different instructions by a particular professor.

This booklet will contain a detailed discussion of students' responsibilities in acknowledgement and will have examples of actual plagiarism cases turned in at another school.

Careful reading of it should be an invaluable aid to all students in obtaining a real understanding of accepted scholarly procedures. We hope it will help eliminate what are truly tragic incidents in which individuals must face an honor hearing and possible conviction because of ignorance of basic rules.

Krutzke Awarded Faculty Fellowship

Professor Frank A. Krutzke, chairman of the English department, has been awarded the college's new Rotating Faculty Fellowship to spend a year analyzing college freshman English.

The fellowship, designed to enable one member of the faculty to spend a year on a project to improve undergraduate teaching, was made possible through $40,500 grant from the Danforth Foundation of St. Louis, Missouri.

"Freshman English is one almost completely universal course in American colleges," Prof. Krutzke said. "The diversity of ideas and attitudes concerning this course is evidenced by the entire spectrum in course descriptions and operations."

The consensus is that the course is highly important — but with that point agreement ceases.

"At this time, partly because of the great numbers of college students, the pervasive opinion that 'English' should be learned — and therefore, presumably, taught — much better than it is, and the proliferation of 'honors' English sections and of Advanced Placement English courses in high school, the situation is becoming even more complex than before," he said.

Professor Krutzke said he plans first to review the history of the course at Colorado College, read every available opinion on the problem and visit selected colleges throughout the country for first hand observations.

The new program, established last fall, was named the Louis T. Benetz Rotating Faculty Fellowship in honor of the former president.

The fellowship will pay the recipient his annual salary plus a full summer session salary and $1,000 for expenses. Fellows will be released from teaching and other campus responsibilities. It will rotate among members of the faculty.

"Each fellow will use his year to increase his effectiveness as a teacher of liberal education, and, in so far as possible, to demonstrate new approaches to effective teaching," commented Kenneth J. Curran, acting dean of the college.

CC to Send Delegation To Principia Conference

Colorado College has been invited to send up to three delegates to the Public Affairs Conference at Principia College in Elmhurst, Illinois.

The subject of the conference is Latin America: Asset of Liability to the United States. There will be addresses by outstanding experts in the field and round-table discussions.

The dates for this year's conference are April 8 through 11, which means that it will come at the very end of our spring vacation. Student delegates who attend the conference will be excused from their Colorado College classes that week and will not have to return to the campus until the first day of the following week.

The cost is $15.00 for registration fee, to cover cost of room and board.

All juniors and seniors who are interested in being nominated to attend this conference are asked to inform Dr. Fred Sondermann, No. 103 Kennedy House (1105 N. Cascade) of this fact prior to February 10th.

Former Prof. Dies

Colorado College faculty members this week were informed of the death of Guy Harry Albright, who taught mathematics and physics at the college for 39 years, from 1907 to 1946.

The retired Colorado College professor died Jan. 10 at Oxford, Ohio, at the age of 87.

A native of Lamar, Mo., he held bachelor's degrees from Harvard University and the University of Michigan and a master's degree from Harvard. Professor Albright taught at Brooklyn Polytechnic Preparatory School before coming to CC. He was the author of numerous articles in professional journals. In 1913, he was an exchange professor from Colorado College to Harvard.

In 1932, he received an honorary Doctor of Science degree from Colorado College.

TIGRESSES BE ADVISED THAT THE SWINGING PLACE TO BUY YOUR MUFTI IS IN KAUFMAN'S SPORTSWEAR DEPARTMENT

That is to say, starting right now our sportswear department, second floor, is brand new. There is some rubble and debris standing around and some brand new fixtures still in cases, but by this time next week we will be no longer in flux, but newly there. In our new department we will feature madras that really bleeds and all sorts of things made of leather like jumpers and jackets and other things like shifts and skirts which are bedazzlingly trapped with chains and leathers.

• If you bring this ad with you and say the password to one of our clerks, like Evan-Picone, or Jantzen or Lady Manhattan she will let you try on one of our nifty leather jumpers in sweet spring shades by Samuel Robert. Come see that the only place to outfit your Tiger hunting campaign is at Kaufman's Better Sportswear Department.

23 Named to Phi Beta Kappa

Twenty-one seniors and two juniors at Colorado College have been selected to Phi Beta Kappa, the national scholastic honor society.

The new Phi Beta Kappa candidates were announced by Professor Richard C. Bradley of the Colorado College physics department and president of the local chapter. They will be initiated into the honor society during a special dinner at the Broadmoor Hotel Feb. 20.

In addition the newly elected members, two seniors who first were elected last year, also are being honored. They are Marla Bullock of Denver and David L. Bitters of Leewood, Kan.

More than half of the group is from Colorado. The others represent eight states. Six are from Colorado Springs and three from Denver.

Six members of the group are majoring in mathematics. Psychology and political science tied for second with three representatives each. One member of the ASCC Executive Council who is a member of the Intramural Advisory Board, and a representative from each men's social organization.

Study Group Meeting

The Wednesday Evening Study Group sponsored by the Religious Affairs Committee, will hold the first of its meetings for the present semester at 8:30 p. m. on Wednesday, Feb. 5 in the lounge of Shove Chapel.

The study book for this series of discussions will be C. S. Lewis' "Mere Christianity," and this is now available at the Book Store.

THE BELL TELEPHONE COMPANIES SALUTE: HENRY McHALE

In just a short seven months, Henry McHale (M.B.A., 1962) has moved up in responsibility and status to his present position of office manager at Pacific Telephone.

According to Henry, "The company seemed willing to give me a chance to prove myself right away." Henry's intuitive business sense and initiative mark him as a man on the move. He started out as a supervisor, became business office manager of a residence section, and just recently was made public office manager of the Sacramento area.

Much of his success can be attributed to the many ideas he has recommended for improving the efficiency of operations. As a dynamic business, telephone communications requires an alertness to the needs of a constantly growing market. Henry has demonstrated this talent, admirably.

Henry McHale, like many young men, is impatient to make things happen for his company and himself. There are few places where such restlessness is more welcomed or rewarded than in the fast-growing telephone business.

Here's a Lot From Possum Trot

By S. Sabol

The stiff academic requirements of Colorado College occasionally pay off for Coach Red Eastlack when they attract someone like Bob Heiny, an engineering student who is—coincidentally—one of the best basketball players in the conference.

But more often than not, these rigid scholastic standards play havoc with Eastlack's plans. The latest academic bulletins from the Dean's office show Ed Loosli in, Carl Cabiness out.

The loss of Cabiness, CC's adroit backcourt man and most adept playmaker, was a crushing blow to Eastlack's hardwood strategy. Eastlack must now try to find another guard to team with Dave Herrington.

Bob Baker, a reliable veteran guard, has succumbed to a back ailment. As a result, he has come close to a basketball court only while sitting in the stands with his girl friend.

With Cabiness and Baker out, the guard chores must be handled by Willie Pelz or Steve Schilder.

Pelz, an antiquated, 26-year-old veteran, has quite possibly the best shooting eye on the team, but this mellow athlete has trouble withstanding the rigors of today's fast breaking game.

Steve Schilder, a wraithlike squirmier from Sheboygan, Wis., has the quickness to become a top-flight backcourt man, but his lack of experience could prove his demise.

Regardless of who starts at guard, CC's hoopsters must learn to rebound. Steve Sabom, a combination of the village blacksmith and the spreading chestnut tree, has not lived up to his potential. A 6-6, well-conditioned center, Sabom has averaged an embarrassing 4 rebounds per game.

Farrell Howell, another pre-season rebounding great, has been plagued with social problems and wanders around as if in the Twilight Zone. Heiny, who leads the team in rebounding as well as scoring, must receive help on the boards if CC hopes to win a game this year.

Another of Coach Eastlack's problems, though less serious, is Ed (Banan) Loosli. Loosli takes the sport so casually that no one would be surprised if he forgot to show up for a game.

Possessing excellent spring, Banan could easily be one of the top players in the conference if he so desired, but it seems he prefers uninspired mediocrity.

The Eastlack men meet Mines at Cossitt this Tuesday.

Orchid of the Week—to varsity goalie Mike Carter for his superior job in last Friday's victory over Duluth. Mike, filling in for disabled Art Warwick, handled the goal patrol like a dirty old troll and scared all the Duluthers away.

Ski Tales

The first official activity this year for CC's skiers was the Broadmoor Slalom Derby on Jan. 11. icy conditions and a difficult course spelled disaster for many racers, but some members of the CC team were able to overcome these difficulties.

In a day marred by many spills Lynda Spickard with a time of 1:44.05 was first in women's class B and Glenn Faust (1:29.8) was third in men's class B.

Jean Gillespie was third in women's class C and Kris Pochelon was first in women's novice. As a result of the race Kris Pochelon and Amy Barnes were promoted to novice to class C.

Ski Club lessons at the Broadmoor will begin Feb. 3 and will be every Tuesday and Thursday after that. If interested or if you want more information try to contact Jon Prouty. Ski reports will be posted in Rastall and Palmer as soon as they are received. Snow is forecast for the mountains so I'll see you on the slopes.

CC Rifle Team Fires Well In Recent Matches

Colorado College's Company D, Ninth Regiment, of Pershing Rifles fired a postal rifle meet against all other companies in the Ninth Regiment, and against all individuals of the National Society of Pershing Rifles on January 23 and 24.

A second meet was held Jan. 25 when CC hosted the visiting Colorado State College rifle team. The highest score possible was 1000; five men firing on targets (worth 20 points apiece) of prone, sitting, kneeling, standing, by 8 points (the highest score).

The individual scores of the five participants were: Lyman Hunter 192/200, Jim Blackmer 184/200, Bill Newcomb 178/200, Reeves Thompson 151/200, and Fred Whitlock 126/200.

Lyman Hunter's outstanding score of 192 will probably secure at least an award for Outstanding Marksmanship from the Ninth Regiment and possibly another marksmanship award from National Headquarters. Not only did Hunter secure, by 8 points (the team's highest score), but he also obtained a perfect 50/50 kneeling score which is almost totally unheard of, much less seen.

In the sitting position, which he had never practiced or fired before, he dropped only two to obtain the best sitting score of the match. His 49/50 prone score was a tie for high with two other PR shooters, and his 45/50 was second-high on the team.

At the second meet with Colorado State College, CC walked away with the short end of the meets: 1346-1377 and 1349-1377.

CC's co-captain Blackmer fired the two lowest scores he has fired in 11 months: 272 and 272. Bob Strieby also felt the humiliating title of disappointment with 264 and 272, as did Lyman Hunter with 267 and 270.

CC's improvements came with Captain Bill Johnson, who obtained high score in both matches 273 and 276, Dan Holmes with 262 and 266, and Ralph Dalla Beta with 250 and 253.

Lyman Hunter also deserves special mention for his two 100 prone scores, which were not only the only 100's fired by either team, but also the first 100's of CC's five meets this year. Even Blackmer, after 17 shoulder-shoulder meets, has never obtained a 100 prone score.

Best scores of the meet were: prone, Hunter and Strieby (100/XX), and Hunter (100/2X); kneeling: Johnson (93) and Johnson (86); standing: Blackmer (88) and Hunter (84).

Psoriat's Questionnaire

Stanford Hospital Center is anxious to have any one with psoriasis complete a questionnaire; forms are available at the infirmary.

PROGRESS COMES TO COLORADO COLLEGE — Peabody House makes way for the new health center.

Swimming Team Victorious

"We could be losing some of our meets by 20 points, but the guys just won't let it happen. It's a great team." This is how swimming coach Gerald Lear looked at his squad after their recent 56-39 victory over Western State College.

In spite of a 1-2 record, Coach Lear has good reason to be optimistic. With only five days of practice behind them, the Tigers took on Regis College, January 11, losing the meet by only nine points. Four days later they met CSC at Greeley and were again narrowly defeated by a margin of nine points.

Both the Regis and CSC squads have been practicing since November and theoretically most of the competitors are near or have already reached their peak performance. "But with only four weeks of practice, we aren't even close yet," said Lear, "and our times should improve greatly."

Tom Walker, a sophomore from Riverside, California, placed second at Regis in the 50 yard freestyle. At CSC he cut his time by a second to win with a 24.5 mark. Against CSC and Western, he took the 100 yard freestyle. Recently, in an informal meet with the Air Force Academy, he won the event in 56 seconds, two seconds faster than his earlier efforts. In the 200 yard individual medley, and the 500 yard freestyle, Jim Raily, a sophomore, has been the Tiger standout. He has lost the medley only at Regis, and has cut his time from 25.3 to 23.4.

Dick Coil, a freshman, has shown considerable promise in the 200 yard freestyle. His potential is evident in his best time: 2:19, a six second improvement over his 2:25 clocking at CSC.

Nevertheless, the Tigers have a long way to go before the Conference meet in Cumnison, Feb. 28 and 29. Most conference teams are already posting considerably lower individual times, and have had the needed past experience which most of the Tigers lack. "That's been a big problem, too," added Lear. "You've got to remember that this is the first year of college competition for nine-tenths of the squad."

Icers Split Weekend Matches with Duluth

The weekend of January 17th and 18th saw the Tiger hockey team display moments of greatness and moments of atrocity.

Saturday night CC took a highly touted Duluth team and treated them as if they were on double runners—but in the process had to sacrifice outstanding goalie Art Warwick to several weeks rest due to a torn hamstring muscle.

Saturday saw the return of veteran Wayne McAlpine to the ice after being in traction with an injured neck.

But with Wayne's return his long standing record of no penalties after two and one half years of play was broken when he put a bear hug on one of the Duluth players.

But even McAlpine's valiant display could not win the Tigers their one and when the final gong rang the score was Duluth 6, CC 3.

Trailing 2-1 after a fast first period, Duluth went on a 3 goal spree with only two and one half minutes left in the period. This assault was led by Freshman Keith Christiansen, who revealed his age by floating his hockey stick across the world arena and then received a ten minute maturing penalty which enabled him to return to the ice and skate by three CC defenders and set up a goal by Paul Stepien.

This tied the game up, but a minute later Duluth took a lead they were never to relinquish when Gell passed to Rogers at 18:00. One minute and forty seconds later the score was 4-2 when Pat Francisco scored on assists from Mike Tok and Bob Lund.

In the final period Duluth added one more goal when Tok took a pass from Christiansen (who has 26 points himself) to make it 5-2. At this point CC began its comeback big when Bill McGann of Duluth received a penalty for "intent to injure a player."

After clearing the ice of beer cans and coins of a typically highly partisan and spirited Tiger crowd, Bob Otto brought the Tigers to three on a long slap shot from thirty feet out.

That was the final tally for CC, however, with an unfortunate penalty killing most of the rest of the clock for the Tigers. Duluth's Dick Maertz bloomed one final goal between the legs of Mike Carter with fifty-six seconds left.

John Simus took over the scoring lead Saturday with twenty-five points when he scored the first period-tying goal for the Tigers in the first period.

Warren Fordyce scored his fourth goal in eleven games when he gave CC the lead in the first period.

That Friday's game, on the other hand, was one of the busiest ever played at the Broadmoor, was felt by many people. Duluth started out with the first goal, but the game was soon tied up when Bob Otto came down the ice and skated around the back of the cage to look for a receiver.

Not finding anyone open, he merely skated around the cage again and this time stuck the puck under a surprised Duluth goalie's skates.

Shortly after this CC took the lead that was kept for the rest of the night when Glen Elumet fed to Bob Magie at 14:03.

Then at 12:09 Steve Ebert, the North Dakota Bomber, made the score three to one. The score was finally stretched to four when Dave Peterson put his tally for the night.

After this, the game deteriorated a little with both teams drawing plenty of penalties in what seemed to be a race to see who could score the most in the least amount of time while getting the most penalties. CC won both races to take the game 6-5.

Tigers Tiredly Lose to Mines

The fans looked bored. The players looked bored, and even the ball, which spent most of its time in the hands of greedy Miners, was feeling a little bit sorry for itself.

The occasion: well, the austerity of the participants might have been suitable for the national pocket billiards championship, but lest anyone feel deceived, one might have recalled a cardboard placard, posted over Cosset, announcing, "Basketball, 8 P.M., CC vs. Mines."

The game was highlighted by such dubious achievements as: below foot per cent shooting efforts from the floor, on the part of both teams; one four minute period in which CC was not able to touch the ball, and in which Mines fared equally well in their refusal to shoot; and finally, a 47-36 victory for the Miners, a score which several pro football teams have bettered.

It was a close game, though. One which saw the score tied, or change hands seven times, which was about as often as the Tigers could get the ball.

SCENE FROM LAST WEEKEND'S triumph over tough Minnesota Duluth.

Swimming Pool Open; Ready for Recreation, Intramurals, Classes

CC's new Schlusman Pool was opened last night to the students, faculty, and staff in a general swim session lasting from 7:30 to 9:30.

This marked the opening of the full program at the pool, delayed until then by repair work on some of the deck tile.

Beginning yesterday, the pool will be open to students on Wednesday, Thursday, Friday and Saturday nights from 7:30 to 9:30, on Saturdays from 10:00 to 4:00, and on Sundays from 2:00 to 5:00. The pool will be closed during all home sports events.

Besides recreational swimming, activities at the pool will include co-educational senior life saving courses, a women's synchronized swimming program, men's and women's intramurals, and the swimming team's practices and meets. Also hoped for, by the spring of 1965, is an annual water show.

Lacrosse comes to CC

And it wasn't until late in the second half, when CC was forced to foul in their attempts to at least see what the ball looked like, that Mines was able to draw away on free throws.

The Tiger defense looked good, adjusting easily in the first half from a zone to a man to man defense to contain some strong Mines' shooting from the corner.

Again, Dave Herrington made an impressive showing, playing every position on the Tiger squad, with ten points.

But, all in all, it wasn't much of a game. Mines did not look strong, and some rebounding for the Tigers would have won the game. But the Tigers haven't had that, or much of anything else this season, except a consistent losing streak.

CC Rampart Rifles Open Membership

Rampart Rifles started the ball rolling this semester by announcing a three week membership drive.

This three week period will be used to acquaint interested persons in the aims and objectives of this social-military order.

The meeting time for Rampart Rifles has been changed from Monday 7 p.m. to Tuesday 7 p.m. at the ROTC Building. By this Tuesday night all members of the drill team will have received their black and silver shoulder cords, black helmets, white gloves, white scarves, and white rifle slings.

Through the sponsorship of Captain Jones, Rampart Rifles has planned an active semester including work with advanced weaponry at Fort Carson, trips to Camp Hale for ski maneuvers, and lessons in sky diving, with all equipment furnished.

The Rampart Rifles Drill Team will do work in precision marching this semester and also has a few parties planned. For any information concerning Rampart Rifles and the drill team come to the ROTC Building at 7 p.m. on Tuesday.

Rampart Rifles is the largest organization of its kind on campus and offers you the most advantages at the least assessment. JOIN NOW!

History Professor G. Drake Hired

Colorado College announced the appointment of George A. Drake as assistant professor of history and director of the college's Selected Student Program. Mr. Drake will assume his new duties at the college in September.

An authority on British history, the 29-year-old scholar will report to Colorado College with six earned degrees. He currently is writing his doctoral dissertation on, "Some Contemporary Puritan Histories of the Puritan Revolution."

Graduating first in his class when he earned his B.A. degree at Grinnell College in 1956, Mr. Drake holds B.A. and M.A. degrees from Oxford University, and E.D. and M.A. degrees from the University of Chicago. He will receive his Ph.D. from Chicago this summer.

Mr. Drake spent two years at Oxford on a Rhodes Scholarship, following a year at the University of Paris as a Fulbright Scholar. At Chicago he held a Rockefeller Research Fellowship. He is back at Oxford on a third-year Rhodes Scholarship.

The new Colorado College professor was elected to Phi Beta Kappa, the national scholastic honor society, as an undergraduate.

He is also a member of the American Society of Oxiolians and the American Society of Church History.

A native of Springfield, Mo., Mr. Drake spent the 1960-61 academic year teaching modern European and British history at Grinnell College.

Mr. George A. Drake, recently hired history professor.

NOTICE

A survey of attitudes of students on the Colorado College campus is underway. A random group of juniors have been selected to receive the Omnibus Personality Inventory, an attitude test which all entering freshmen take. These tests are scheduled for the next two weeks. Results of the test will be analyzed for (1) changes in attitudes between the freshman and junior students, and (2) differences between Colorado College students and students on several other campuses in the United States. Conclusions will be available in the late spring.

I Saw Some Parts of Dixie

CC African Student Tours South Over Vacation

By Abiodun Afonja

Many things must have contributed to the uneventfulness of our trip. It was still the season of "peace on earth, goodwill toward men," and this was probably coupled with the fact that our arrival at any place always changed the atmosphere there with disarming surprise and astonishment long enough for us to zoom away, leaving people with mouths agape.

And above all, we wanted to see the South without involving ourselves in any incident which could easily be blown up into international proportion. We were not crusaders for Civil Rights nor ambassadors for the CORE, but neither were we propagandists for the "Impeach Earl Warren" movement.

We were just two curious students, Jim Heckman and I, who wanted to see some parts of Dixie. We decided from Chicago that we would go as far as New Orleans, Louisiana.

Leaving Chicago early in the morning of Sunday, Dec. 29, we arrived at Lexington, Kentucky, in the evening. We looked for the cheapest accommodation we could get. We first went to the YMCA hotel, but we decided to try and find a cheaper place.

This lead us to one hotel. "Do you have any rooms free—a double room?" Jim asked the man at the desk. He nodded yes. "One for both of us?" Jim continued. With a dry, jejune smile that did little to conceal his emotional conflict, he replied that he had rented out his last double room!

We waited a while for him to do or say something. He still remained petrified and speechless. We looked at each other (Jim and I), thanked him, and went away. We finally went back to the YMCA.

That night we visited an old classmate of Jim's, who wished we would stay with him instead of at the YMCA but for the fact that we had taken out rooms there. A long period of discussion with his father and mother and a friend followed. Then we talked about our trip to the South to which their first persuasion was, "DON'T."

On discovering that we were bent on going, they gave us some very helpful pieces of advice. It was during this discussion that it

Administration Draws Up Plans for Dormitories

Ed. Note: Monday, the administration provided the Tiger with the following statement of objectives prepared by Upperclass Men's Residence Complex Committee and presented to the architect. This statement follows the Committee's rejection of the first set of preliminary plans, and the architects are currently working according to these objectives.

To provide accommodation for 300 more men by 1966, and to facilitate close personal contact among students and between students and faculty, we have initiated plans for a new residence complex for upperclass men.

When Colorado College becomes a fully residential college all male students, except those living at home, will live on campus. Slocum provides the essential services and facilities, including a basis for participation in intramurals and social life.

But our new complex should present its occupants with a new stimulus or incentive, a sense of achievement and growth. One means of achieving this sense of maturity through our new complex could be a structure which represents a deliberate compromise between the control of a Slocum Hall and freedom of living off-campus outside of college supervision.

Variety is the essence of our proposed new residential complex, as it is the essence of Colorado College as a liberal arts institution.

In the new complex the academic atmosphere, rather than the "collegiate Hilton" effect found on some larger campuses, is to be the hallmark.

The individual rooms should be looked upon as "studies" as much as sleeping rooms. Further, we strongly recommend the strategic location in the complex of attractive, appealing study-lounges.

As suggested above, a variety of accommodations should be provided. Some students will desire an opportunity to share common quarters with friends.

On the other hand not all students are the same, nor can they be isolated into statistics; some students need to be alone, cannot live with others—even one other student—in the limiting confines of a dormitory room.

For these reasons we request construction of a complex offering the following types of living accommodations: single and double rooms opening off single-loaded corridors with a central service core; suites to accommodate no more than five to six men, having both a private entrance (possibly off a gallery on the second floor or above) and a private bath; and finally the possibility of two "houses" for 20-30 men, suitable for use as either independent or honors houses or by social organizations.

If possible, within the main body of the complex, natural divisions into groups of 50-75 seem most desirable. Except for the "houses," a minimum of supervisory personnel is felt to be preferable, and we recommend construction of "messing" quarters—with private bath and study—in each quadrant or natural division.

All services—such as mailboxes, vending machines, pay telephones, bulletin boards, etc.—should be isolated or camouflaged, rather than being conspicuously located off the lobby or reception lounge.

Flexibility and adaptability, while desirable in some quarters, should not dictate the whole design. A "shakedown" period occurs each fall and students are housed temporarily pending accommodations that become available through "don't shows." Study-lounges might possibly be used for this purpose at the beginning of each academic year.

Finally, it must be emphasized that the warm, personal, home-like environment should be captured where possible. This should be done by design and accommodations, as well as by furnishing and materials.

Fraternities Above All-Men's Average For First Semester

Four of the five Colorado College fraternities exceeded the college's all-men's average for the first semester, according to the scholarship averages released by Mrs. Ruth Scroggin, registrar.

In addition, the all-fraternity average was above the all-men's average for the college.

Sigma Chi fraternity led the five Greek chapters with a 2.61 average, and Kappa Sigma was second with a 2.51.

Scholarship competition between the five fraternities on the Colorado College campus has been keen in past years, and the highest ranking fraternity on the campus at the end of each academic year is awarded the Scholarship Trophy.

In addition to the local awards, each national fraternity sponsors awards for excellence in scholarship at the local level.

An analysis of the fraternity membership lists show that only a small percentage of fraternity men are attending Colorado College on scholarships.

The analysis reveals further that the percentage of fraternity men on academic probation is well below the average for the college.

Scholarship averages indicate that fraternity men at Colorado College conform to the national pattern. Independent national studies on attrition show that the percentage of fraternity men that complete four years of college and receive their degree is significantly higher than the average for non-fraternity men.

The Freest Four Years?

For most students, their four years spent at Colorado College will be the freest four years they will ever live. These are times when opinions and ideas can and must remain in constant flux so that students can gain insight into themselves and their world. It is a period when students should overcome unreasoned traditions and unquestioned beliefs.

To develop such an atmosphere, we must be willing to give students an environment of near-perfect freedom, and a sense of mobility and individualism that will allow them to lead examined lives.

Any element of intellectual restriction lessens the freedom of our environment. The presence of formally constituted organizations, such as Phi Delta Theta, which overtly discriminate against members of minority groups, helps to destroy the atmosphere of freedom and undermine our commitment to our ideals.

We cannot remain silent on an issue of such importance. Discrimination is a world-wide problem, it is true, but it is fundamentally a personal issue which can be overcome only by an individual's introspection and evaluation of his principles. Only when he does this, can he begin to live his beliefs.

We should make such freedom possible, if only for four years, and should peaceably and rationally remove all the senseless bigotry that makes hate a way of life.

Other colleges, such as Colorado University and Swarthmore, have met this issue decisively by asking every social, professional, and recreational organization on campus to declare itself as a body which does not discriminate against individuals on the basis of race, religion, or color. Such an affirmation would be an important first step in our assertion that we are committed to human dignity. If we cannot declare this, then we cannot pretend to seek truth, and so we must drop our pretension of being a college dedicated to a human reason, and assume, openly, our status as a training school uncommitted to ideals, and unprepared to assert our text book truths. — (JH)

The New Greek News

In order to eliminate any misunderstanding of last week's notice concerning Greek News, we are announcing the following changes in TIGER policy:

- (1) Beginning in the Feb. 14 issue, Greek and social news will be incorporated into the regular news columns of the TIGER.
- (2) Coming events, for both the campus Greek organizations and for other social groups, will be placed in a social calendar.
- (3) Engagements, pinnings, and lavolierings will be placed in a separate column.

In order to carry out these changes, each fraternity or sorority is asked to submit news to the News Editor, Steve Fredrikson, or place it in the TIGER box not later than noon on Tuesday.

It should be emphasized that these changes are not designed to eliminate news of the Greeks, but only eliminate Greek News as a distinct and too often disparate section of this newspaper. These innovations are an attempt to raise the journalistic standards of the TIGER, an attempt to utilize news space more efficiently, and an attempt to make the TIGER a more effective vehicle for campuswide news.

LETTERS to the EDITORS

Dear Poor Richard: taking the same points you used against the Greek system last week, Rich, I would like to air my opinion as an active member in this Greek system.

First, it is true that groups like Phi Delta Theta cannot allow Negroes and Jews into their membership. I will say that such a condition is not a result of the local chapter here at CC, but is a national fraternity law. These laws are made from chapters in both the North and South. Discrimination is a national problem and this is a national fraternity, and in America, the majority rules.

Secondly, as to the preference of the Dean of Men, "who privately sanctions drinking in all the first houses" towards the Greek system, and from my experience in Kappa Sigma in particular, I must say you are wrong, Rich. Kappa Sigma has just gotten off social probation, a condition placed on us partly through the Dean of Men. One of the main reasons pointed up for this action was drinking in the fraternity house. Moreover, I have been told that the maids who clean up our rooms here at the K-Sig house are to immediately report any sign of drinking anywhere in the building. We can't even have empty beer can decorations in our room (a "privilege" allowed me at Slocum last year) for fear that we may be concealing full cans. This surely is not any "preferential treatment."

Next, you state how "we have seen 'Greek members' disappear from college wide social functions. Not only are the all-school social functions supported by the Greeks, but many are a direct result of Greek sponsorship. At such 'school events' as the Friday Afternoon Club and Homecoming Dance, Greeks not only attended in force, but supplied, in many cases, the entertainment also. The Sigma Chi Watermelon Bust and the Greek Weekend dance were social functions where even you, Rich, were invited at the expense of one house or the whole Greek system.

You went on to comment on something which is so true it even hurts. I must confess that I, a Greek, would be greatly tempted to lay down a book on the lofty ideas of Plato, to examine the latest edition of Playboy. This is not only a weakness of the Greeks, but of any normal college boy, and is a direct cause of our being here, Rich. However, the purpose of your statement, I feel, was to attack the lack of intellectual interest in the Greek system. Last semester, the all-fraternity average was 2.46, which has topped the all-men's average for the past few years. Somebody must study over here, Rich!

Finally, you surmised that "the proposed residential college will drive even more people into the Greeks." Do you think that the Greeks voted this planned residential college into effect? I'm not going to argue its pros and cons, but merely question the inclusion of this in your article as something against the Greek system. For a fact, the guys I associate with are against the proposition, just like you, and they are mostly Greeks!

In your conclusion, you made a plea for the Tiger to not be afraid to print "the truth and any all campus issues." I agree, wholeheartedly, for I believe the above letter to be only of the truth.

Experimental Theater To Present Volpone

"Good morning to the day, and next, my gold!—What should I do but cocker up my genius, and live free to all delights my fortune calls me to!" The philosophy reflected in these lines is not so far removed from the dolce far niente of many CC students (and faculty?) yet it begins Ben Jonson's seventeenth century play, Volpone, or, The Fox. We, members of the Experimental Theater, invite you to join us February 21 and 23 not only for your pleasure but also for your instruction as Jonson deals a very merry undoing to the mischievous.

Sunday Morning Worship Service

February 9, 1964 11:00 a.m.

Preacher: Dr. Douglas Fox

Sermon Title: "Guilt and Grace"
Practically everyone from St. Paul to Oden Nash has tried, at some time, to say something significant (or at least interesting) about sin. Whilst not intended as competition for the letter of these experts, the sermon this Sunday morning will make another onslaught upon this subject.

Sin is rather like poetry: it's easier to do than to define. Consequently there is a great deal of contemporary confusion about what the Church means (ought to mean) when it discusses the subject, and the result of this is that the Biblical doctrine of human sin is either falsely discredited, or made the cause of quite the wrong sort of anxiety. What is sin, and what does authentic Biblical Christianity propose to do about it?

they expect, so they have only a little time for social life.

From my own experience, when I first came to the U.S. I had a lack of confidence due to language inadequacy. I was very hesitant to force a friendship with the American student, who seems preoccupied with his own studies and social life, and who shies and unaccustomed to class participation.

On the CC campus I have learned that the foreign students have some similar problems. One of the big problems I found during my years at CC is that the foreign students don't know where to stay, where to go, or who they should ask for hospitality during the Christmas and New Year vacations. Most of the foreign students have very limited finances, so they have problems finding a place to stay.

Thanks to Dr. Carlton Gamet, our foreign student advisor, and the Foreign Student Committee which has been so helpful to us, Dr. Gamet has done a great deal for foreign students. Because of him we don't have those problems anymore. Every foreign student I have talked to said the same thing: "He IS FANTASTIC!"

— VA Choumramany

To the Editors:

In the past, as it will be in the future, it has been the custom of the Drama Department to hold open and fully publicized try-outs for any Colorado College Players production. This is done so that any CC student who has a desire to be in a production can have the opportunity to be seen and heard. This custom has, however, not been carried on for this spring's production of cuttings from Taming of the Shrew. Tryouts were unpublicized, open only to those students enrolled in speech classes.

It is my belief that Colorado College's offering to the Shakespearean Quarter-Centennial celebration should come from all the students. Since this is not the case, I feel that the production should be represented as a Speech Class project and not a Colorado College Players' production. — Joan Carter

Thoughts on the New Infirmary

Once there was a shoemaker who worked in a small and old shoeshop. Many people, who knew nothing about shoes or shoemaking, did not like the shoemaker and made up wild tales about him.

"He is old-fashioned," said the grand exarch of the community.

"He is unimaginative," said the vice-consul.

"Stubborn," said the chief communitarian.

"Idealistic,"

"Touchy,"

"Difficult,"

"Dated."

But the people and the shoes who knew the shoemaker had grown to admire him because he was friendly, honest, and always did his best.

For 18 years the shoemaker worked in the small and old shoeshop, watching people and shoes come and go. Then one day a stranger to the community happened by and gave the shoemaker a pair of shoes to remodel. The shoes were gaudy and impractical. They were also brand new but the stranger insisted that the shoemaker "add a buckle or two, or make the heels taller."

"I'm sorry," said the shoemaker, "I'm too busy. There's nothing wrong with those shoes."

"Think I'm fussy or something, huh?" said the stranger, "well, I don't have to put up with you."

So the stranger grabbed his shoes and stomped out.

"Well," said the shoemaker.

"Low," said the high-heels.

"Ugh!" said the loafers.

"Underhanded," said the sneakers.

"Imagine!" said the sandals.

"Preposterous," the pointed toes.

When the stranger spread his story around the community, everyone was shocked at the shoemaker's conduct.

"He's never been nasty before."

"Or mean."

"Or violent."

"Or grouchy."

"He must be getting old."

So the community buzzed with the shoemaker's supposed senility and declared it was a disgrace—an absolute disgrace—that their community should be burdened with the shoemaker.

The people had nowhere else to go when their shoes needed repair, but now when they visited the shoeshop they noticed the shoemaker's strange behavior, his stubborn mannerisms, his impatient eccentricity. "The shoemaker must go," said the people.

But they were too lazy to do anything but gossip, and so the shoemaker remained in his small and old shoeshop.

Then one day a rich foundation gave the community gobs of money to build a chemical plant.

The community was changing, growing, and after the chemical plant was finished, the community built a spanking new shoeshop, a swimming pool, and an ice-rink.

"We must have a new shoeshop," said the grand exarch.

"Our souls demand it," said the vice-consul.

"What will other communities think if we don't?" queried the chief communitarian.

So finally the community got another gob of money and were all set to build a new shoeshop.

The shoemaker was glad the community planned a new shoeshop, and eagerly did all he could to help make the new shoeshop a reality. But almost immediately the shoemaker ran into trouble. Many of the ideas for the new shoeshop were impractical. The middle of the new shoeshop would be four feet higher than the rest of the shop, surrounded by stairs. ("Like a sacrifice altar" said the shoemaker.) ("Like the majestic sweep of the creative surge," said the architect.) The walls separating the men's shoes from ladies' shoes would be movable, taking four men six hours to move them. ("Like an umbrella indoors," said the shoemaker.) ("It will sound lovely in the catalogue," said the architect.)

Soon the shoemaker and the planners had a meeting with the community officials.

"What's the matter with you?" thundered the grand exarch, "don't you know these planners have built a magnificent library?"

"And an award winning chemical plant," added the vice-consul.

"And a supermarket," said the chief communitarian.

"And a railroad station."

"And a trampoline center."

"And a mortuary."

"But, said the shoemaker," if they built such a magnificent library, why are they storing books in the cellar of my small and old shoeshop? Besides, this is not a chemical plant, a library, a supermarket, a railroad station, a trampoline center, or a mortuary. This is a shoeshop." (Continued on page six)

Dr. Wright Opens Lovelace Discussion Series

Last Sunday evening Lovelace House was host to several science-minded students and to Dr. Wilbur Wright of CC's physics department.

Given a free reign in selecting a topic, Dr. Wright fell upon the subject of physics, a specialty of his since, as he put it, "I get paid for being concerned with this sort of thing."

The problem of the day for physics, he began, is what he termed "scientific pedagogy," the attempts of large universities to relegate small college efforts in the area of physics to non-research programs by the manipulation of fund-granting foundations.

The long-standing contention that the small college cannot adequately prepare science students for graduate work is based, he said, primarily on tradition and unexamined prejudice.

Such views ignore the truth that the educational atmosphere of small colleges more closely approximates that of a large university's graduate school than does that university's own undergraduate program.

Dr. Wright's pleas fell on sympathetic and not totally importuned ears. The shared opinions of science students, he said, would do much to determine the future of science in a liberal arts context, such as Colorado College.

After leaving his initial topic, Dr. Wright found himself the center of an entertaining ball-session lasting another two and one-half hours.

He touched on a variety of subjects ranging from a proposed re-vamping of college curriculum to the problems of a humanities student studying physics—"Trying to learn physics on this campus is like trying to get a drink of water from a fire hose."

serving as full-time faculty members to complete programs of graduate study.

The award provides a calendar year of graduate study in a university of the candidate's choosing with reappointment offered on a competitive basis.

Professor Madrugá holds a bachelor's and master's degrees from Harvard University and has attended for one year the Institut de Phonétique in Paris.

At Harvard, he held a James Geddes Scholarship and a John Thornton Kirkland Fellowship. He was secretary of the Romance Graduate Conference in 1967 and 1968. As an undergraduate, he was president of the Circolo Italiano, and directed two plays presented by this group.

Prior to joining the faculty at Colorado College in 1958, Professor Madrugá taught at Harvard and at the Berlitz School of Languages.

The Danforth Foundation was established in 1927 by the late Mr. and Mrs. William H. Danforth to strengthen higher education through its own programs and through grants to colleges, universities, and other educational agencies.

We invite the entire campus to these informal talks Sunday evenings at 8:00 p.m. Lovelace House's guest for February 9 will be President Lloyd Worner.

Slocum Average Is 3.22

The academic achievement of each wing in Slocum is a major factor in the heavy interwing competition looking toward the award of the "Best Wing" Trophy.

The All-Slocum average emerged as 2.839, no wing having below a 2.035.

The average of the freshmen only in Slocum hit 3.24, topping the All-Freshmen Men average of 2.275 and beating the All-Sophomore Men average of 2.305.

The first five Slocum wings and their averages were:

First South	2.078
Second West	2.066
First West	2.439
Fourth West	2.403
First North	2.400

Southern Rhodesian Student Reviews Portrayal of South Africa Conditions

By Solomon Nkwaue
A rebellion in embryo was the subject of "Come Back Africa," a movie which portrays the almost unbelievable conditions of the African people in the Republic of South Africa.

The movie, which was made available under the auspices of the Religious Affairs Committee, is a documentary and has the reputation of having been taken secretly in 1959.

The following comments which I will make are based on my intimate knowledge of the South African situation. In particular, I feel qualified to make these comments because I spent several years in South Africa, both as a sportsman and as a High School student.

I also can speak and understand the four languages which were used in the movie: Zulu, English, Setswana and Afrikaans (South African Dutch).

With the exception of a few of the main characters such as Miriam Makeba and Lewis Nkosi, and perhaps, also excepting one or two scenes which were acted to illustrate some specific point or to make a connected whole of the feature, everything was genuine and authentic.

Generally, the movie showed the suffering to which Africans are subjected by the incredible pass system of South Africa, the horrible housing situation, crime caused by these deplorable living conditions and the attitude of the whites to the Africans.

The whole show is really an attack on the South African government's policy of Apartheid—on the misery it has caused among the unprivileged population of the country.

The statement I wish to make is that since 1959—when the movie was taken—the situation has grown much worse. The policy of Apartheid, based on a philosophy of racial separation, has not only deprived the black population of some basic freedoms, such as speech, movement, and choice, but has actively engaged in wholesale intimidation.

In South Africa an African is not a citizen—he can't vote (Africans are 12 million out of a population of 16 million and obviously can't share in the government of the country).

The South African government has used the complex pass system, police power, and innumerable suppressive laws to control and curb any form of protest. In short, South Africa is one of the worst police states in the world and yet still claims to be a democracy.

I am being very sincere that the Africans of South Africa would not be worse off in a Communist state than in South Africa; in fact, my guess is that they would be better off.

What happens next in South Africa is anybody's guess. But what ever it will be, it won't be good for South Africans. And yet, something not less than revolution is sure to come. It will cause much bloodshed.

The outside world can only help by taking steps to minimize the loss of lives which will surely come.

The Greek Week

Four sororities are holding initiation week for their new pledges. The Kappa Alpha Thetas held their "Flight and Fright Night" on Wednesday. Initiation is planned for Saturday.

The Gamma Phi Beta sorority started their activities on Monday night; their five pledges gathered knowledge of "practical everyday things." Initiation is planned for this weekend.

The Delta Gammas will vary their initiation week with both fun and serious nights. They plan to initiate on Sunday.

The Alpha Phis have been holding a nightly schedule of events planned to "inspire" their eight pledges. Sunday is the time set for initiation.

Saturday the Kappa Sigmas had an afternoon function with the Gamma Phi at the Iron Springs Chateau while the Phi Gammas were at Austin Bluffs with the D.G.s. Monday night the Delta Gamma House was serenaded by the Phi Deltas—Vicky Jacobson was pinned by Chuck White.

CU Extension Offers Lecture Series on Old West

"The Old West: Fact and Fantasy" is a four lecture series offered by the University of Colorado Extension Center in cooperation with the College. The series begins Thursday, February 13, from 8 to 9:30 p.m. at Olin Lecture Hall.

Dr. Fritz Kramer, Associate Professor of Geography and Director of the Colorado College Museum, will open the series with a lecture on "The Land of the West."

He will discuss the early interpretations and misunderstandings of the West's climate, drainage patterns and mountains as well as the accuracy of today's understanding of the West.

Dr. Ruth Underhill, Professor Emerita of Anthropology, University of Denver, will continue the series on February 20 with a discussion "Indians of the Rocky Mountain Empire." Dr. Underhill spent thirteen years with the Indian Service, has visited and lived with many of the tribes, and is the author of numerous governmental reports on various Indian tribes. She has published a series of Indian Life books, including six books on the Papago Indians.

"All Our Yesterdays," the varied influences of the white man, will be the topic on March 5 by Fred Mazzulla, Denver attorney and well known photographer. Mr. Mazzulla will illustrate his subject with slides from his extensive collection of photographs.

Mr. Mazzulla, a history "bug," has recorded more than 500 hours of tape interviews with oldtimers and historical figures in the Rocky Mountains. His photographs have been used in history books, national magazines and numerous special historical publications.

The series will close on March 12 with a discussion of the relationship of the myths and fantasies of the West to today's culture. Dr. George Mills, curator of the

Taylor Museum, Assistant Director of the Fine Arts Center and lecturer in General Education at the College, will explore the fantasies of the West as he develops his topic, "The Mythical West."

Tuition fee for the series is $5.00. Registration begins February 3 at the reception desk in Rastall Center and must be completed prior to the first lecture. $5.00. Registration begins Feb. 3 at the reception desk in Rastall and must be completed prior to the first lecture.

Students Plan Mexican Trip

Plans are being made for some 15 Colorado College students to spend the Easter holidays in Mexico with Miss Clayton, Spanish instructor at CC.

The group will drive to El Paso March 26 and fly from there to Mexico City. In the capital city they will attend a bull fight, visit the ancient pyramids of Teotihuacan, spend a morning at the floating gardens of Xochimilco, tour the National Palace, and attend the Mexican Folklore Festival in the Fine Arts Palace.

Following two days in Taxco and Cuernavaca, the group will fly to Oaxaca for visits to the ruins of Monte Alban, the Mitla ruins and the famed Indian market of Tlacolula.

Culture of Poverty Seen In Two Recent Books

The Other America by Michel Harrington
The Children of Sanchez by Oscar Lewis
By Dee Wilson

Michel Harrington's book The Other America is an attempt to document the fact of poverty in the United States, to say what this poverty is and what conditions it generates, to explain what it means to be poor in the "affluent society," and to shock and anger the reader.

Harrington writes about who are the poor and where they are. His discussion of where they are is one of the book's chief merits, as it is hard to believe in widespread poverty if, for whatever reason, one cannot see it.

Harrington has many other valuable points to make, all of a general nature. His discussion of the culture of poverty is illuminating. Harrington does not see poverty as only a lack of this or that commodity, but also as a "state of mind," a psychological condition imposed upon the poor. This "state of mind" is one of the book's most basic points; for it depends Harrington's discussion of why the poor behave as they do.

Harrington discusses the objective conditions of the poor, the problem of employment, the lack of education and the frequency of physical and mental illness.

This poverty is not seen as independent of the larger society. Harrington sees the condition of minority as opposed to majority. He sees poverty as an important factor in understanding the psychological condition of the poor, and also in understanding why it is hard to work against this widespread poverty.

Harrington fervently believes that poverty can be abolished by a political action within the context of the welfare state, though he regards the present welfare state as a sad failure, a failure summed up in Charles Abrams' description "socialism for the rich, free enterprise for the poor."

In short he has a wealth of fine insights of a general nature. When he attempts to explain what it means for an individual to be poor, the book suffers.

Harrington, as he admits, is no novelist. His range of expression is limited. More important to Harrington the poor are not individuals so much as they are a part of the poor, as involved in the culture of poverty. He has little sense of how the poor adjust their poverty to human constants.

More important than this failing and partly because of it the book does not succeed in producing the shock Harrington obviously desires.

This is attributable mostly to the method of documentation, a method which, as Mary McCarthy has noted, tends to make the abnormal, the horrible, seem ordinary.

A book which succeeds where Harrington's fails is Oscar Lewis' The Children of Sanchez.

It is exaggerating to say that this is Lewis' book. The Sanchez family, of a slum in Mexico City, provided the entire book on tape, which Mr. Lewis edited.

The family consists of two boys and two girls and one parent (the mother having died early in the children's lives.) The story is told by the members of the Sanchez family in turn, giving the advantage of varying points of view and allowing the pleasure of comparing the various accounts.

It is their story and though there is much that is superfluous it is, altogether, moving and impressive. The book tells what it is to live in the culture of poverty better than Harrington's, for its subject is four individuals and not general categories. The book embodies many of Harrington's points; as Lewis notes cultures of poverty are losing their rational character.

The "state of mind," the unsheltered childhood, the family structure, the violence, the sex, the frustration, the concentration on the present; it is all there. But the book is not simply an example of what it is to be poor.

Again because the book is about persons its significance is larger. How much larger other readers can decide for themselves, suffice to say and think it an important enough book to strongly recommend.

ASCC Notes

This week the ASCC showed that it has been moving along well since the new semester began. Apparently the initial beginning lags which were apparent last semester have now been overcome and more of the committees are proceeding as though they have real purpose and some direction. It is a pleasing thing to see.

The Election Committee announced that—although the final calendar for elections has not yet been drawn up, it will be in the future. Also this committee is working up a standardized petition form so that all of the rules and information pertinent will be available to the prospective school and class officers.

The Finance Committee has gone over the AWS funds and announced that the ASCC will not be expected to give an annual amount to this organization in the future. Also Paul Carson has found that it would be desirable to have a workshop for the treasurers of various campus organizations to insure that the officers are carried smoothly from one year to the next. This could be a big help in straightening out some of the financial problems which are faced annually. The Executive Council voted to approve $100 to the Debate Team to help finance their convention in Indianapolis next spring.

The Communications Committee has announced that they will start monthly sessions to air the campus gripes and will try to keep the students and faculty informed of various decisions which are directly applicable to the campus as a whole. The residential housing question is a case in point. Also, the exact copies of the ASCC minutes will be available at Rastall desk one week after the meeting or on the Monday of the next meeting.

The Constitution Committee initiated the passage of the amendments to the By-Laws presented in the TIGER last week. There is some question as to the last proposal, and discussion on that amendment has been tabled.

Ray Jones initiated a motion to institute a movement to remove all cigarette vending machines on the campus. After much discussion as to the possibility of putting up signs warning people, sending the proceeds to the Cancer or Heart Associations and whether or not a moral issue is really involved, discussion was tabled and Ray was asked to head up a committee to look into the question.

Respectfully submitted,
Karen McIlvaine

THE BELL TELEPHONE COMPANIES SALUTE: HERB SUTTON, JR.

Herb Sutton (B.S.E.E., 1961) got a good basic foundation in telephone communications. Outside plant work involving engineering and actual physical construction validates Herb's claim of starting from the ground up. But up he came, and fast!

Herb advanced from an assistant engineer in construction work to Chief Line Assigner where he is responsible for the maintenance and service of all outside telephone equipment in the San Bruno area of Pacific Telephone. His present assignment puts him at the hub of telephone operations, a pressure job that demands the very most of his telephone knowledge and his supervisory abilities.

Herb Sutton, like many young engineers, is impatient to make things happen for his company and himself. There are few places where such restlessness is more welcomed or rewarded than in the fast-growing telephone business.

TELEPHONE MAN-OF-THE-MONTH

The Village Idiot

After a somewhat extended pre-through-post-Symposium vacation, I have yielded to innumerable supplications to return to the journalistic realm. Meanwhile, however, I have not been entirely lazy.

Whilst being on the outside of this somewhat conglomerate publication, I have noticed that there are a few consistent trends therein—particularly the tendency to print factually unfounded articles. Of course, I realize that to do otherwise is often difficult when one considers the administration's reluctance to unveil certain issues while they are being questioned and before they are muddled.

The, the causes of the present unfriendly relationship between policy makers and press seem to me to be silence on the one hand, and impatience on the other. The effect is that both come out in a bad light, and nobody trusts either one.

I have noticed too, along this same line, that the Tiger has picked up one of the administration's tricks, that of abolishing something first and giving reasons later (if at all). There are many persons who feel that the Student Handbook was poorly done, and there are many persons who feel that Greek News was poorly done (oddly enough, there are very few persons who hold both these opinions), but I think we would admit that those in favor of continuing these publications should be given a chance to have their say before a final abolition. I wonder if this school has ever heard of a compromise, or even a conference? Maybe the results would be the same but at least this dishonest, do-things-behind-everybody's-backs atmosphere would disappear.

While I'm in an asking mood, I would like to make a formal request that the nightmare-inducing pictures in the library be removed. "World War II" is over.

Movies? Ah yes, movies—a real hodge-podge. "The Wheeler Dealers" will be at the Broadmoor through Tuesday night, with "Charade" starting Wednesday. The Ute has held "The V.I.P.s" over for another week. "Man's (Rock Hudson) Favorite Sport?" (Paula Prentiss) is at the Cooper.

"Narrow-minded outlook," said the grand-exarch.

"Stick-in-the-mud philosophy," said the vice-consul.

"Obstructionism," said the chief committeeman.

"Reactionary."

"Concomitant variable."

So the officials and the planners decided that the shoemaker must go.

"But how?" pondered the grand-exarch?

"Release him?" offered the vice-consul.

"Messy," responded the chief-committeeman

"How about if we, ah, send the shoemaker on a little excursion, like you know far away some-where, and give the trip a sophisticated sounding name, and all that and make a big deal of the whole deal and give him some money, too. I mean we got plenty of money, and isn't that how we deal with all our problems?" suggested somebody.

"Yeah, give him some money."

"And a gold watch."

"Buy him off."

So the officials notified the shoemaker they were giving him a free trip, free money, and a free gold watch. A sabbatical, they called it.

"You must go immediately," they said.

But the shoemaker just smiled, and went back to the small and old shoeshop. He gathered his tools, and walked down the road, and walked and walked and nobody ever saw him again.

P.S.: After reading Dean Reid's statement as contained in Paul Tatter's stimulating, thought-provoking article (he has such a faculty for writing) I wondered if this new (now-it-can-be-told) raison d'être of Colorado College is to be contained in the catalogue sent to prospective members of our student body. Dr. Gilbert Announces Summer Program for Study in England

Colorado College students will be studying history in England this summer, if enough interest is shown in research abroad.

Dr. Bentley B. Gilbert, associate professor of history, will supervise the research in the field of English political, social, and economic institutions at the University of Sheffield. Students will have the opportunity to work independently under conditions like those encountered by the mature scholar, using primary sources at the university and Sheffield city libraries.

"The Sheffield area is particularly rich in 18th century cultural and economic sources and in materials for the study of parliamentary constituency and local government politics of that time," explained Dr. Gilbert.

"Arrangements have been made to give our students access to the collections of letters of Edmund Burke and the Marquis of Rockingham in Sheffield and to the papers of the Dukes of Devonshire at the nearby county seat of Chatsworth."

Students will leave by air from New York as a group accompanied by Dr. Gilbert on June 23. They will spend eight days in London for sight-seeing and then proceed to Sheffield, where they will remain for six weeks, returning to this country August 18. Students will be expected to devote five days each week to study, but Professor Gilbert said that Sheffield is close enough to London for weekend travel.

The fee of $1,050 will cover Colorado College tuition, economy class airline transportation from New York to London and return, all accommodations and meals in London and Sheffield, incidental transportation in Great Britain, lecturers' fees and all other costs at the University of Sheffield. The fee does not include personal expenses.

Students will live at the University in approximately the situation of full-time residents with full access to university facilities.

Course work will consist mainly of the preparation of research papers on a topic selected by the student, supplemented by lectures of specialists from the university and by Dr. Gilbert. Those students who complete the course with an acceptable grade will receive six hours of credit at Colorado College.

Professor Gilbert noted that not more than 25 students will be accepted, all of whom must have completed their freshman year by June, 1964. Admission will be solely by consent of Dr. Gilbert. Deadline for applications is February 28.

Students with questions about the new research program should come to Dr. Gilbert's office in Jackson House.

PROF. MAX LANNER, left, and Ronald Hudson will present a concert at Perkins Hall, Sunday, February F at 4 p. m.

Broncos Bash Tigers Twice

Last Tuesday night, the CC cagers came alive, showing more talent than they had demonstrated in their last eight performances. At last someone started to shoot for the basket, and the scoreboard reacted.

The relationship between the two is, no doubt, abstruse, but as one fan stated, it was nonetheless reinforcing. The Tigers showed some awareness to the fact that it wasn't just the pros who could rebound, but people too.

In fact, in this area where CC has continually been bettered by double their own effort, they now had managed to hold Hastings to a majority of one.

Leading this great leap of faith were Dave Herrington and Steve Hildreth, whose home is usually found on the bench. Both scored sixteen points, and Hildreth, along with Bob Heiny, was responsible for the strong Tiger rebounding.

The Tigers lost, and the problem was Bob Crawford, who unfortunately had learned everything the Tigers had, but a lot sooner. His twenty-five points and eleven rebounds were the margin of victory.

As the game started, the fans were left stumped—not the Tigers for a change—as CC ripped into an eleven point lead, 16-5, and this against a team accustomed to scoring 80 points a game. The Broncos narrowed the gap for a while, but once more the Tigers drew a bead on the basket and were behind seven points when Hildreth pulled ahead to a 37-30 lead at the half.

The second half saw the Broncos regain control of the situation. The Tigers tied the score twice more, and managed to regain the lead once. Crawford was too good, however, and the gun sounded with the balance in favor of Hastings 67-65.

The Tigers forgot everything in their next game with Hastings. The game was never close, and the Tigers once more showed their marked inability to shoot, score, or rebound. The case of Ed Loosli is mystifying. At one point he hit seven in a row and connected on his two free-throws; he missed only one shot all evening. Nonetheless, one candle won't warm the auditorium.

The Broncos led 36-28 at the half, and won it with a 78-56 advantage. Bob Crawford was again the high man of the evening with 26 points.

The series did prove that the Tigers can play; it also proved that they perhaps get overconfident over a near-win. There is a team out there somewhere. Why won't it win?

Library Gets Book Grant

Colorado College has announced receipt of a memorial gift for the purchase of books for the Charles Leanning Tutt Library.

The gift, in the form of an endowment, is a memorial to Lloyd Harris Ellis, brother of Miss Amanda M. Ellis, professor of English and writer in residence at Colorado College.

The endowment was given the college by his widow, Mrs. Lanra Lon Wallace Ellis of Hastings, Neb., and his son, Lloyd Harris Ellis Jr., who currently is serving in Africa with the U.S. State Department.

Mr. Ellis was a graduate of Colorado College, 1931, with an M.A. degree from the University of Pittsburgh, 1933. Before World War II, he was director of publicity for the May Co. of Denver.

After serving with the Air Force for four years with the rank of major, he returned to Denver as sales promotion manager and director of publicity for the Neusteter Co.

He died September 15, 1961, in Washington, D.C., where he was serving a four-month assignment with the Department of State as a public member of the 1961 Foreign Service Selection Board.

Intramural Hockey Season Underway

The Colorado College intramural hockey program got off to an enthusiastic start last week with the pre-season favorite Phi Deltis playing to an overtime tie with the hard skating Kappa Sigas.

Many were surprised to watch the efficiency of a Kappa Sigma line, consisting of Hot Tempered Cy Dyer who scared most of the Phi Deltis to death with a flailing stick, Motor Whitney who talked the Phi Deltis to death, and Mad Daddy Hutchins who spoke softly but carried a big stick when not doubled up on the ground behind the boards.

Most surprising of all, however, was the Phi Cam-Zeta game, when the Phi Cams trounced a pro-ish Zeta team 4-2. Former Zeta Terry Brennan was upset that the people's leader, Ben Lyon, had done such a lousy job in recruiting. Lyon explained that his tenor voice had not had much appeal to his Saskatchewan friends this year.

But perhaps the failure of the Zetas to win was not a consequence of Lyon's recruiting, for the next night the Phi Cams also trounced the Phi Deltis 2-1.

The best show of all was the Sigma Chi-Beta performance. Political scientist John Lewis and artist Frank Boyden teamed with such former prep greats as Flash Dupuy, Rocket Hodges, and Gungbo Baxter to form what was a dissipated effort against the Sigma Chis, who had star goalie Fats Borm-master in the cage and Wurm Malkerson floating on the wing with 240 pound Rajah Williams playing defense.

When this fiasco ended, the score was 4-0. The next day the fabulous Betas showed what Dr. Frank Flood's isometric contractions will do for the bods and held the high powered Kappa Sigas to a 3-1 victory.

All of these hockey games attracted large crowds, and since there was an unusually large attendance of co-ed ladies, it is hoped that the administration might part with enough funds to provide seating in the new hockey area.

Director Frasca is trying to add new color to the intramural program and also pacify those females who venture to Zoomieland each Saturday night by having a game between the CC Inter-Fraternity All Stars and the Air Force Intramural All Stars.

The following games remain to be played:

FEB. 7, 5:30 P. M. — Phi Gam-Beta
FEB. 7, 4:30 P. M. — Kappa Sig-Sigma Chi
FEB. 11, 7:00 P. M. — Phi Delt-Sigma Chi
FEB. 11, 5:30 P. M. — Phi Gam-Kappa Sig
FEB. 11, 3:30 P. M. — Beta-Zeta
FEB. 17, 5:30 P. M. — Phi Delt-Beta
FEB. 20, 7:00 P. M. — Phi Gam-Sigma Chi
FEB. 23, 9:00 P. M. — Kappa Sig-Zeta

Judoka Beats YMCA Team

The CC Judoka defeated the local Colorado Springs YMCA team 2½ to 0 on January 30.

In his first Judoka match, Mike Dexheimer opened the contest with an early one point lead for CC by throwing his opponent with a hip throw.

The next two more experienced Judoka for CC, Ernest LeMelle and Dan Martin, were not as successful as Dexheimer and only drew with their opponents.

Gordon Aoyagi, CC's most experienced player, scored a half-point in his match.

John Parker lived up to college expectations by gaining a full point for the Club. Although Parker did not succeed in throwing his opponent, he gained the decisive advantage by forcing his opponent to surrender through the use of a choke hold.

In the coming weeks, CC Judoka Club will be competing against other clubs from the Air Force Academy, Colorado University, Colorado State University, and Western State College.

Casting Opportunity

First auditions for spring play. We'll do a version of "The Taming of the Shrew" modern style, as a staged TV show with pop music, etc. Cast open to anyone. If you are interested at all call or see Chief Tryee now. There is a chance the show may be radio-taped for television since this is the 400th year of Shakespeare.

Here's a Lot From Possum Trot

By S. Sabol

Up to date facilities, an enthusiastic, energetic coach, and high squad morale are the necessary constituents of a successful athletic team.

The Colorado College swimming team possesses all of these ingredients. A far cry from comical old Cossitt Hall, where they still have to shoot the pigeons out of the rafters before each basketball game, is CC's recently erected swimming complex.

Modern, sanitary, and adequately lighted, CC's new quarter is the finest in the area. To accompany these wonderful facilities is equally wonderful Coach Jerry Lear.

A fresh addition to the college athletic department, Coach Lear appears more like a Boy Scout Troop leader than a demanding swimming coach.

A friendly, sincere person, he has the knack of getting the most out of the boys he coaches. And get the most he must.

Having no scholarship tankmen, Lear has had to create a team from virtually nothing.

At the opening of practice last December, he was greeted by a motley collection of some aged, bacon-bellied, intramural competitors and a smattering of callow freshmen. But through rugged 6 day a week, 2½ hour practices, Lear has transformed this bizarre collection of inmates into a spirited, enthusiastic tank team.

Evidence of this could be seen last weekend as CC hung with conference champions Colorado State until the last few events and then finally succumbed 56-33.

Sam Walker, who looks like he'd be a likely candidate for the Blue Cross Boy-of-the-Month, was CC's high point man with victories in the 50 yard and 100 yard freestyle events. Walker, who eats dog biscuits because he claims they help his endurance, was clocked in 24.2 in the fifty and 55.6 in the hundred.

If improvement continues and nobody drowns, CC will be a strong contender at the conference meet later this month.

HOCKEY — Michigan University blasted Coach Bob Johnson's pucksters 7-0 and 12-4 to put CC's league slate at 1-5. Cribbage-faced captain Johnnie Simus was our lone bright spot as he sagged the nets twice for two goals.

BASKETBALL — The East-lackmen were dealt their 9th and 10th consecutive defeats by Hastings College. Bashful, onion-breathed Ed Loosli went 8 for 8 from the field and poured in 18 points. Jumping like he had yellow jackets in his drawers, Loosli snared 7 rebounds and was a defensive stand-out.

The rest of the team, however, was as effective as a brass magnet, and the Hastings Broncos trampled the terrified Tigers 82-69.

BOWLING — CC's pinsters rolled over the AFA, 503, in Rastall Center's bowlingroom.

ORCHID OF THE WEEK — To

Michigan Wolverines Defeat Tigers Twice

The first place Michigan Wolverines of the WCHA twice decisively defeated the Colorado College Tigers January 31 and February 1 by scores of 7-0 and 12-4 at Ann Arbor.

The only bright spot in the Friday night shutout for the Tigers was senior net minding wizard Art Warwick who had made a fabulous recovery from an injury that some people felt would put him out of commission for the rest of the season.

Warwick was not to return to any sweethearts den, however, when he was battered for two goals in the first and last periods and one in the middle. Warwick was called upon to make 44 saves in what was a miserable CC defensive effort.

Saturday night, the story was little changed except that CC did manage to score. Michigan at the same time managed to increase its margin of victory by one goal in making the final tally 12-4.

Warwick was again the big standout for CC when he set up a goal by John Simus by sending the pack down the ice to Warren Fordyce who also got an assist. Simus was to get another goal Saturday to put him back in the middle of the scoring race in the WCHA.

Tom Polignac, Michigan defenseman, got the show rolling for Michigan with six assists, but then finding this pastime too boring, he was charged with slashing on a delayed penalty but before the whistle was blown, he was also charged with spearing.

Then, being in a state of extreme traumatization, Polignac went through a wild tantrum only quieting down when he was told he would not be allowed to play in next week's game against Michigan State.

This victory put Michigan on top of the league with a 5-1 record and left CC at the bottom with a 1-5 record.

Ski Activities Part of Winter Carnival

Activities for both the beginning and the experienced skier will be featured at the 1964 Winter Carnival, February 20-22.

The weekend's opening event on Thursday evening will be a ski program planned especially to attract and interest beginning skiers, as well as those who are more experienced. The program will begin with a ski fashion show and will include two ski films and speeches by skiing experts.

On Saturday afternoon, everyone will have a chance to ski themselves, as Winter Carnival moves to the Broadmoor for individual skiing and ski races. Reduced rates on tow tickets should make this a popular Winter Carnival event!

This is also the time for all non-skiers to take to the slopes, because reduced rates for group lessons including equipment, are being arranged at the Broadmoor as a special part of Winter Carnival.

The lessons will be held in the late morning and early afternoon before the Winter Carnival ski races get underway. Transportation to the lessons will not be able to be provided for groups.

Any person or persons interested in taking advantage of this opportunity should fill out the coupon and return it to the Rastall Center Desk ski lesson box. No deposit is necessary as the entire fee will be collected at the Broadmoor. Deadline for signing up for these lessons will be Saturday, February 15.

Any person wanting further information regarding these ski lessons or those people needing transportation to the Ski-Broadmoor should contact Bill Mracek, X-175.

Seminary Creates Fellowship for CC

During the past year Chicago Theological Seminary made a study of its alumni to find out which colleges and universities provided the most students and what these students contributed to the church and theological education.

It was found that Colorado College had contributed many men and women in this way. Therefore, the Seminary created a special Colorado College Prize Entrance Fellowship specially for a Colorado College graduate. This is one among six awarded to similar liberal arts colleges throughout the country.

The Entrance Fellowship will pay up to $2,000 depending upon need. Awards will be made on the basis of Christian commitment and high scholarly achievement. President Worner has formed a small faculty committee to review any interested candidates who may apply.

Their nominations will be forwarded for the approval of the Seminary. Any interested students are asked to contact Professor Kenneth Burton for further details.

RCB Notice

Is the Juice Box in the Hub worthwhile? Rastall Center Board is in a quandary. However, the juke box will be filled to the brim with dimes and quarters this afternoon, February 7, from four to six.

The Friday Afternoon Club will be in session—plenty of room to dance and have fun and all. Bring your whole group along, and relieve some of the big study pressures.

P.S. New tunes have been installed.

CC African Student Tours South Over Vacation

versa. After a fruitless search for an integrated motel, we finally went to the Negro YMCA and somehow talked them into allowing both of us to share a room.

They reluctantly agreed to this. We talked with a young Negro boy about the situation in Birmingham and discovered that there was an atmosphere of explosive quietness in it.

We left Birmingham on the morning of Dec. 31st, but soon ran into heavy snow in Southern Mississippi. We stopped for coffee in one rural village at a sort of grocery-store-cafe combination. I pretended to sit at a counter but was told that that section was for whites only.

Actually the place itself was so wretched that I would not have felt comfortable with anything served there. I was taken to the back room meant for Negroes. It had an old, long, rickety table and a bench. The Negro woman asked for what I would drink. I asked for tea.

I watched her wipe a dirty, repulsive glass with her fingers and I said in a raised voice that I wanted hot tea. She helplessly dropped her hands, and with a pitiable, doom-day expression in her face, offered to "fix some" for me. "Never mind," I said, as I walked out into the shop.

Another Negro woman who was doing the dishes there murmured to her partner, "Where did you expect to get hot tea for him?" From the white woman at the counter I asked for a six-pack of Pepsi. "You wouldn't mind my money anyway, would you?" I grinned, and to this she gave a shame-faced shrug of her shoulders.

My reply to an old man that I was from Africa caused a little stir in the shop as the information was passed from mouth to mouth, but I quickly bade them good-bye and joined Jim in the car. Heavy snow forced us to spend the night in Hattiesburg, Mississippi.

Hattiesburg is a small town of probably about 10,000 people. It is totally segregated. Jim went into the police station (while I remained in the car) to tell the officers of our situation and get some information about accommodation. Mobile Street, he was told, was the place where I could find accommodation, but he would have to sleep in a white hotel.

The Negro woman (on Mobile Street) who kept a traveler's lodge was motherly and really kind. She would willingly have accommodated Jim, she said, but she had specific instructions from the police department not to take white customers.

She was a law-abiding citizen, she said, but she would co-operate with the "tradition" while doing her best to fight it by legal means. A part of her house was being used for the voter registration drive.

She told us of the harassments suffered by Yale students who were helping with voter registration from the hands of the police officers. In Hattiesburg, Negroes could not eat in white restaurants, nor could whites in Negro restaurants, we were told.

Our next stop was New Orleans on New Year's day. It was there I realized what a great potential I had to scare people. My presence in an all-white entertainment area caused quite a stir.

I stalked through the streets and confronted individuals, who gazed at me in surprise, with a stern, but cheerful "Hi!" before they could make up their minds. And each time I had my "Hi!" returned.

A man walked up to me and said that he knew I was a foreigner but that I should leave that area in my own interest because the crowd was from Alabama and Mississippi — Cotton Bowl fans. I thanked him.

A little later, a policeman beckoned to me from his car and asked me where I worked and what I was doing. My reply so infuriated him that he drove away in anger.

And what was my reply? Simply that I was a student from Colorado! I could sense some tension building up as people were getting seriously inebriated. I could see people smashing bottles on the ground, stamping their feet and fulminating ribald Anglo-Saxon expletives.

Confidence oozed out of me fast, and while expecting the next bottle to smash on my head, my major concern was to melt away from there as quickly as possible. The next day we were out of Dixie.

The whole trip was quite a marvelous experience. First of all, we knew what we were up against before we went and so there were not many surprises. But it was quite meaningful to experience segregation in its cold, inhuman, stark-naked form.

In many places the Negro has no human worth — he is tolerated as long as he can be, in submissive servitude, a tool for acquiring and multiplying the dollar.

I realized in a more vivid way that the idea that there are certain "Human Rights" that are "inalienable" is big talk, as meaningless as most TV and newspaper ads. Even among church people (and by Jove! there are many churches in the South) the statement that man was created in the image of God, is at best, a statement without meaning, and no matter what statements they make in the open, it is they who elect civil officers and officials.

You picture the "savage" as the simple, harmless African who holds a club or a spear and runs after animals; but the bombing of churches and homes, the ruthless lynchings of defenseless men and women, the burning of crosses in gestures of open treachery, the perversion and denial of justice to people because of their color, the brutal suppression of people's aspiration to be but men, the destruction of right by use of power; these, and many such things are the marks of the civilized man.

Surely civilization must be a wonderful thing, and especially when in its name man's inhumanity to man is perpetrated with impunity.

Hudson, Gamer Give Recitals of Sonatas

By Anne Perry, '65

On Feb. 9 in a well-filled Perkins Hall, Ronald Hudson, violin, and Max Lanner, piano presented a recital of sonatas by Handel, Gamera and Brahms. In general the program was well done and provided a pleasing introduction to the newest member of the music department, Mr. Hudson.

Two things characterize Hudson's playing—a beautiful tonal quality and very adequate technique. For the most part Mr. Hudson plays very well indeed, Mr. Lanner with sensitivity and precision, love and care, once again proves himself to be a very impressive musician.

The program was well chosen for variety of style and mood. The Handel Sonata in D was the least impressive, but very pleasant, the slow movements were done with charm.

Gamer's Sonata is a delightful work tightly constructed out of two themes stated in the first movement. The composer's few remarks of introduction were helpful and were undoubtedly quite a revelation to much of the audience. The performance itself lacked vitality in a few sections but was otherwise a fine one.

The Brahms Sonata in A is a lovely work, rich and satisfying; the piano part is full of melodies and nuances which move the listener into his own private and wonderful world. While the work did not bring the program to a climax it did bring it to a very beautiful close.

Moral for American Society In Jonson's Satire Volpone

By Dr. Ross

If Ben Jonson were writing today, he would probably attack modern American society in much the same way as he attacked the society of James I in Volpone. The old Fox idolized Mammon just as we make idols of the split-level, the Cadillac, and the shares of AT&T.

Shakespeare, Jonson's contemporary, does not make much use of topical satire in his comedies, but it was the stock-in-trade of Jonson. O rare Ben also used a convenient literary device, which Shakespeare employs but rarely; the "humor" character.

Such a personage is obsessed by a particular idiosyncrasy, often (but not always) to be identified with one of the Renaissance "humors," or physiological-psychological types. (Hamlet, for example, is to a degree a representative of the melancholy humor, caused by an excess of black bile in the body, but he is not named Melancholiet.)

Varied Opportunities for CC Independent Study

Perhaps unknown to many members of the freshman and sophomore classes is the fact that there are substantial opportunities for independent study in the upper classes. There are 11 departments at Colorado College, according to a recent survey, which offer various courses in independent study. While most of this independent work involves some reading, there are some exceptions. Art students can do a large amount of their studio work on an independent basis, and in the natural sciences, it is possible to do independent research and laboratory work.

Some departments offer as many as four courses in independent study: the romance languages, sociology, anthropology, and economics departments. It is possible for students to do independent study outside their major fields if they are qualified. In most departments independent study is not required, excepting the business administration and economics wishes to do. The topics investigated can be much more specific than those in regular course work. It is possible to study in areas which might not be thoroughly covered in regular courses.

In the history department, at the present time a student is doing independent study on Germany from 1848-1866. The remarkable aspect of this work is that many of the books being read are written in German. By this process the student is learning about this particular area of history and at the same time he is acquiring a scholarly familiarity with the German language. Another independent study project being offered by the history department is Professor Gilbert's summer expedition to the University of Sheffield.

CC Film Society to Feature Keaton, Chaplin, W. C. Fields

Attention cinematic amorists: The Colorado College Film Society is proud to announce its existence. Membership is only $5.50 and includes the viewing of ten film greats. Tickets will probably not be sold for each individual night.

Since two of the showings will be held in the WES room, membership will be limited to approximately 100 people. The others will be held in Perkins.

Tickets will go on sale Monday, February 17, 1964, at Rastall desk, at which time a final schedule will be available. The following is a tentative time schedule depending on rental confirmations. Further historical and critical comment will appear in the Tiger before each showing. For general information, contact John Giannas at 633-8486.

March 7, The General, a silent film of the 1920's in which the director—Civil War general Buster Keaton is pursued by a mad locomotive.

March 14, Modern Times (1936). Director and star, Charlie Chaplin satirized the dehumanization of the pre-war factory worker and got his film banned by the Fascists.

On the same bill will be a short, The Barber Shop (1933), storied and starred by W. C. Fields, a small-town barber with a pregnant bass-fiddle and a large, vegetarian wife.

March 25, Duck Soup (1933). The Marx Brothers go to war in their nightshirts.

Also, another short will run with this, one of Robert Benchley's famous lectures, The Sex Life of the Polyp.

April 15, Foolish Wives (1922). Written, directed and acted by Erich von Stroheim, this is the only non-comedy of the ten. Its theme is the right of a woman to be loved even after marriage, and if not by her husband, then by someone else. The censors didn't appreciate it.

April 18, Private's Progress (1956) is an English comedy dedicated to "all those who got away with it" during World War II, men like Ian Carmichael, Terry-Thomas, Richard Attenborough and Dennis Price. The New York Herald Tribune called it the "funniest movie of the year."

April 26, The Rules of the Game (1939). This is another satire on pre-war society and has been called the greatest work by its director, Jean Renoir.

May 2, The Big Deal on Madonna Street (1960). An Italian take-off on the Rififi style of melodrama, starring Marcello Mastroianni, Vittorio Gassman, and Toto.

May 8, A Nous la Liberté (1931). René Clair directs Henri Marchand, the lover, through an Alice-in-Wonderland world of fantasy and reality of prison and factory life, and is the source of Chaplin's Modern Times. Critics are unanimous concerning the greatness of this film, and Bosley Crowther (of The New York Times) thinks "it's never been surpassed" in the field of movie satire.

Madame Raja Nehru, who will speak at CC on Feb. 27. Mme. Nehru is the cousin of the Prime Minister and considered to be one of the major political figures in India today.

Radio KRSH On the Air

An effort is being made to increase the enjoyment of Slocum Hall radio listeners. Radio KRSH, Radio Slocum Hall, is presently operating between 7 p.m. and 11 p.m. at 660 on the AM radio dial. It features re-broadcasts of good music from local FM stations. The best reception is obtained with a set which operates from a wall plug, as the station makes use of the building wiring as an antenna. However, a battery powered set will work if placed near a wall plug.

In addition to the FM re-broadcasts mentioned above, KRSH broadcast their first locally produced program on February 6. This program featured the British pop-music trio, The Beatles, and a live disc-jockey for a half hour. This program was intended to measure the listening audience through listener response to a suggestion that similar programs be aired each week featuring any records listeners would care to loan.

The program schedule is very flexible and suggestions from listeners are welcome. Among possible additions to the program are: improved FM equipment allowing re-broadcast of Denver FM stations, extended broadcast hours, and live programs featuring local news and talent.

Present equipment includes a modified amateur radio transmitter used to broadcast the signal, a microphone, an FM receiver, an amplifier, and a tape recorder. Tom House and Bob Phelps have donated both time and equipment to make this venture a success.

Let either Tom or Bob hear your suggestions. You can contact Tom in room 320, at extension 297, or box 26. Bob can be reached in room 424, at extension 347, or box 41.

CC ROTC In Review

By Don Adecock

What distinguishes R.O.T.C. at Colorado College?

First, it is unpopular. President Worner admitted earlier this school year in the Tiger that "most freshmen hate it," and the same could be said of sophomores.

Second, its educational value is extremely low. The curriculum is shallow, oversimplified, and sketchy. In fact, unless one is a movie, the R.O.T.C. instructor usually has so little to say that class is dismissed fifteen or twenty minutes early.

There is even an attempt to demonstrate the program by demonstrating that R.O.T.C. students after two years have learned anything. Maybe because it could not be done.

Hard feelings and no knowledge—these are the "advantages" of the R.O.T.C. program for over 80% of every sophomore class. Any defense of the program, therefore, must be explained in terms of the other 20% who continue all four years.

Sitting aside the question of whether such a small group justifies a compulsory program, it is still not evident that the 20% gain anything.

The main reason for continuing R.O.T.C. is an off-putting one: it is better to serve as an officer than as a private. Here it must be made clear that it is only fair to compare Army volunteers with R.O.T.C. officers because both are voluntary decisions concerning one's military obligations.

AWS Deserves Praise

The recent changes in dormitory policies by Judicial Board deserve a full measure of praise. With a relaxation of unduly strict rules, and an abolition of such outdated policies as rooming, the Associated Women Students goes on record as an organization favoring maturity in form and spirit.

J.B. members have attempted to redefine the rules as reminders rather than as senseless punishments. The best aspect of this revision was that it was entirely student initiated. This shows that effective student government is possible at CC, if student leaders commit themselves to their responsibility, and continue to examine the previously unexamined.

Smoking Banned on Main Campus

The following editorial appeared in the October 13, 1925 TIGER and was written by Editor Frank Barnett.

A recent announcement of the Traditions Committee calls attention to the fact that the students in general are forgetting the old Colorado College tradition that forbids smoking on the main campus and in the vicinity of the girls' dormitories. The Committee stated that the example of the upper-class men was necessary in order to teach the lower classmen the desirability of adhering to this old custom.

This same question came before the Committee last year and the Men's Disciplinary Council co-operated in trying to effect an abolition of the practice. They were successful for a time but soon apparently lost interest in the matter.

It is a deplorable fact that so many men of the College forget this little courtesy in the course of their lives on the campus. A great number may not be fully informed on the College traditions but, for the most part, the offenders are ones who purposefully ignore the rule, being unable to refrain from smoking even though they have only a very short distance to walk to unrestricted territory. The latter circumstance should be frowned on by the whole student body.

One of the best methods of putting a stop to this neglect is to create a decided student opinion against it. Such a sentiment makes the persons who are guilty of this misconduct feel out of harmony with their fellows and creates a desire in the minds of offenders to appear respectable in their sight. The example of upperclassmen would be the greatest help in creating this student feeling.

The Tradition Committee made a progressive step in its announcement last week in which it made known its purpose of stopping the present laxity. The male students and faculty should take the hint, and, without further urging remedy the evil. If that is not done the Committee will proceed further with the question and take drastic action against smoking on the campus.

Negro-Produced Film on Feb. 18

Tuesday, February 18, at 11:00 a.m. in Perkins, the Forum Committee will present two films illustrating types of social commentary.

One is a silent Charles Chaplin film called, "The Immigrant," which is the story of two immigrants arriving in "the land of the free."

The second movie, "The Cry of Jazz," was made by a group of young Negro intellectuals in Chicago, and is about the death of jazz at the hands of the Whites and the suffering of American Negroes.

Kenneth Tynan said this is "the first film in which the Negro has issued a direct challenge to the White, claiming not merely equality, but superiority; claiming not merely that the Negro is already the conscience of America, but that his next task is to bring to birth the first true Americanism."

LETTERS to the EDITORS

Dear Editors,

This is a letter to clarify what I think you are trying to accomplish with the present tone of the articles published in the Tiger. Many of the opinions expressed by yourselves and your "reporters" have been misconstrued to be more complaining or negativism.

Perhaps we as students and as human beings do not like to be criticized. We think that the situation is "all right" as it stands, and do not take the time or effort to examine our immediate environment.

What I am generally speaking of is the law of inertia associated with any group activities. Most large groups are opposed to change—because it is simply easier to "keep things as they are." It usually takes a critical person to propel a group from its static position.

Although your criticisms may appear somewhat destructive at times, I think what you are trying to do is to force us, as students, to analyze and/or improve the situation on CC's campus, which we tend to passively accept as facts of life.

Positive action is indeed possible at CC—for example, the revisions in late penalties as recently enacted by J.B. We as individual or collective students can do something to improve the immediate environment if we are only aroused from our pleasant lethargy. Your critical comments at least help some of the sleeping individuals on this campus to blink their eyes.

Sincerely,
No Doze

Dear Editors,

We might begin by saying Governor Love is not a liar, contrary to what one may read in the Tiger. He had no intentions of deceiving the Colorado voters at the last election and still has none.

His recent public proposal for increasing tuition at the state colleges and universities exemplifies not only his public honesty but his concern for the continued quality of education in Colorado. I emphasize the phrase "public honesty" because under the preceding Democratic administration tuition was raised seven times in the eight years they were in office but never made the public aware of it as has Governor Love.

John Love won a smashing victory on a political philosophy which opposed the "tax and spend" ideals of Steve McNichols. The victorious philosophy believes that those who profit most by government service should pay for it. This means no utopia or free ride as many people want. These means that an Illinois student at CU should not be supported by the taxes of a farmer at Holyoke. This is being done. If CU would stop giving half of the $1.3 million scholarship fund to out of state students maybe more Colorado students could receive help toward their college education.

In all of the confusion surrounding the tuition increase, few people bother to look at actual facts. A resident student now pays only 18% or $208 of the $1,113 needed to educate him at CU, the most expensive state school. The governor's proposal of 25% would raise the tuition to only $283, a $75 increase. The student who has sufficient mental ability, maturity, and desire for education can surely raise another $75, get a loan or scholarship, cut down unnecessary expenditures or transfer to a cheaper state school. The state owes the student an opportunity for education, but not a free ride, for the state has obligations to other parts of a growing economy as well.

The ironic turn of these events is that Governor Love has actually no say in raising tuition. He can only recommend it to the Board of Regents. In his budget he gave the colleges and universities more than they had last year but they rely for more. The problem being that CU has a non-resident population of 40% (20% is the usual number for most state schools) which it has to find room and board for. If this number were at CU it wouldn't need all of this extra money. All Governor Love says is that if you want this high number of non-residents raise your tuition.

The Tiger is wrong again when it says that Governor Love wants to merely maintain state services. This year's budget is the largest in history and is also the most economical due to the consolidation of state agencies and elimination in duplication of state services. This is increased budget coupled with the elimination of wasteful spending can only lead a better developed state government, that is not merely maintained.

Governor Love is not living a lie, may be the Democrats are hoping so, but Governor Love is being unfairly attacked partly because of misinformation of certain individuals, but mainly for merely having the courage to inform the public, and carrying on the platform he won a smashing victory on in 1962.

ASCC Notes

Bev Carrington gave the tentative calendar for the forthcoming All School election of the officers of the ASCC. The first election will be held to fill the positions of ASCC president, vice president, secretary and treasurer. Later elections will be held to fill the positions of the class commissioners.

Petitions for the All School officers may be picked up at the Rastall desk before February 25. At 5:00 p.m. on that date they must be returned to Bev Carrington with the names of fifty persons who will support the petitioning candidate. On February 27, a meeting will be held in Rastall to inform the members of the rules and of various commitments which they will have to carry out in the running of their campaigns. Names and platforms of the candidates will appear in the Tiger on February 28.

If a primary is necessary it will be held on March 12 and the final election will be held on March 17.

In connection with the forthcoming elections, the ASCC has once more found some unwelcome parts in the Constitution and has once more suggested that the by-laws be changed. These changes will also appear in the Tiger and will be voted on in the next meeting of the Executive Council. Anyone who is interested in any position on the ASCC is encouraged to speak to the present members and to attend any of the coming meetings of the Executive Council. Also Constitutions are available, which explain the positions and duties completely. These may be obtained by speaking to Karen McVaine, Diane Cox or Bev Carrington.

At the most recent CCA (Colorado Collegiate Association) it was decided to try having an exchange with undergraduates and graduate schools. This would mean that the student interested in attending graduate school within this state could make arrangements with that school and could spend a day or a weekend at that school taking in the scenery. Anyone interested in this may contact Bill Mrachek at X375. The faculty lecture exchange series will be initiated by CCA next fall which will mean that all of the schools in the Association may have the benefit of exchanging lectures with the other member schools.

The positions of Parents' Weekend Chairman and Songfest Chairman will soon be open and those people interested should contact Bill Pez or wait for following announcements. The ASCC is also looking into the possibility of having an All School Picnic in the spring. Anyone with any ideas on this may contact Paul Carson.

Respectfully submitted,
Karen McVaine
ASCC Secretary

Traffic Committee Clarifies Rules

From the Traffic Committee:
In order that those students who own and drive cars on the campus will have an opportunity to contest any traffic tickets received from one of the campus policemen, the Traffic Committee will have hearings approximately twice a month.

If the driver wishes to pay the ticket within twenty-four hours after received, one dollar is taken from the fine; otherwise, the fine must be contested before the Committee or paid in the treasurer's office before the close of the semester.

Failure to pay the ticket will result in the holding of grades and transcripts until the fine is paid. Each person who receives a ticket will also receive a letter from the Traffic Committee informing that person of the fact that he has received a ticket and may contest it at the next hearing.

The traffic regulations are as follows:

1. No student parking on Cutler Drive between 8 a.m. and 5 p.m.
2. Physical Plant Area and R.O.T.C. Area—No student parking. This area is to be left free for deliveries to Taylor and service vehicles or physical plant.
3. Bemis Quadrangle:
 - a. One way traffic around Bemis Circle Drive (right to left)
 - b. No parking on left side of quadrangle (inside lane)
 - c. Ten minute loading zone from McGee Hall to the main door of Bemis (on the right side of drive)
 - d. Loomis—Montgomery Drive
 - e. One way (entering from Cascade)
 - f. No parking on this drive except at designated areas.
4. Loomis girls must use designated parking area in back of Loomis (Wood Avenue entrance) and quadrangle parking.
5. The first two parking spaces in the parking area immediately in front of Montgomery (north end) shall be reserved for non-student visitors from 7 a.m. to 9 p.m. seven days a week. The remaining spaces shall be reserved for visitors to the girls' dorms.

6. Rastall:
 - a. One way traffic entering from north end at Cascade. One way exit south by Rastall.
 - b. No student parking on Cutler Drive or R.O.T.C. Lane from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m.
 - c. No parking on right side of Cutler Drive at anytime.
 - d. Rastall
 - e. No parking in front of Rastall.
 - f. No student parking on left hand side in front of Rastall from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m.
 - g. Sleum Hall:
 - a. No parking on east side of east entrance in Sleum parking lot.
 - b. No parking on west side of west entrance in Sleum parking lot (next to Perkins).
 - c. No parking on the driveway which is parallel to the west wing of Sleum

- h. One way traffic around Bemis Circle Drive (right to left)
 - i. No parking on left side of quadrangle (inside lane)
 - j. Ten minute loading zone from McGee Hall to the main door of Bemis (on the right side of drive)
 - k. Loomis—Montgomery Drive
 - l. One way (entering from Cascade)
 - m. No parking on this drive except at designated areas.
- Summary: It can be seen that all traffic enters from the north of the campus and exits south. The plan is designed to keep traffic moving and to provide the means whereby a clear way is possible in case of fire or sickness.

Excavation Discoveries Subject of Lecture

"Prehistoric Pueblos on the Plains" will be the subject of Tuesday's lecture by Galen R. Baker, director of anthropology, Trinidad State Junior College. Using illustrations, Baker will report on his excavations along the Purgatoire River, where he has uncovered Pueblo remains in a portion of the country ordinarily thought to be on the plains.

The lecture, free and open to the public, is sponsored by the El Paso County Historical Association in conjunction with Colorado College.

Galen Baker is a candidate for the Ph.D. in anthropology at the University of Arizona.

AWS Announces '64 Sadie Hawkins Day Costume Dance

Sadie Hawkins Day is Feb. 20. Ladies, this is your day! The Associated Women Students have planned to accommodate you with a costume dance to "Dog-patch." The dance will be from 9:30 p. m. to 1:00 a. m. at the Cliff House in Manitou Springs.

We are fortunate to have the rockin' music of Dick Ross' Combo. Tickets are on sale now. You can purchase them from any member of AWS Activities Board or at Rastall Desk.

All right now that you have the details, girls, we must remind you that 1964 is Leap Year, and it's your privilege to take the initiative and propose a date. For a dollar a couple, you can't go wrong!

To contrast the draftee, who may end up serving anywhere with the R.O.T.C. officer is both unfair and illogical.

First, the volunteer has his choice of over 75 vocational fields. Among these are Army Security and Counter-intelligence, two common choices of college graduates. Here their duties are challenging and compatible with their activities and desires.

Of course, life is not particularly easy, but it is certainly no harder than that of most R.O.T.C. officers. R.O.T.C. was designed by the Army in order to provide a source of professional officers capable of leading troops. Therefore, most R.O.T.C. officers are assigned to motor pool, mess, or supply so that they can understand the operation of Army elements.

In other words, their first several years are a time of preparation for further service. Besides these disadvantages of serving just two years as an R.O.T.C. officer, one's in danger of being recalled during any buildup.

This happened many men during the Korean War when their established civilian lives were abruptly interrupted by a second period of service in the armed forces.

The conclusion? R.O.T.C. is a good idea for those interested in making a career of the Army, but for those interested only in fulfilling their obligation, enlistment and voluntary choice of a specialized vocational area is preferable.

And this is exactly what a friend and I were told last week by the local Army recruiter when we asked him about the advantages of R.O.T.C. For these reasons R.O.T.C. presents no clear advantages to the 20% who continue and therefore should be eliminated immediately.

Of course, there may remain individuals who wish to make a career of the Army or possibly there remain a number of individuals who would still rather serve as officers. Eliminating R.O.T.C. at this school would not mean frustration for these individuals.

The Officer Candidate School Option (publication 1963-O-685-562) states: "No R.O.T.C. NEED-ED. If you are a qualified college graduate . . . and if you meet the physical and mental qualifications of this program, the Army guarantees your enrollment in Officer Candidate School."

This program has the added advantage of allowing the student to decide upon his military plans in his senior rather than his sophomore year. Comparable programs are offered by the other services.

At the present moment the administration has refused to make any definite statement concerning the future of R.O.T.C. Instead they promise the discontinuation of compulsory R.O.T.C. when and if Congress endorses a new two year program.

This bill was defeated last session due to a dispute over an integration rider. Unless this dispute can be solved, any chance of future passage is very slim.

Therefore, there is no justification for assuming that such passage will be automatic. In answer to a routed Representative Donald Brutzman (R-Colo.) has written, "No action is scheduled at this time and it is difficult to predict the future of any legislation (on this matter) during this period."

Compulsory R.O.T.C. should be abolished and the administration should do it now, regardless of the fate of the proposed two year program. The arguments that justify this position are not new ones.

They have already been accepted in most institutions. Only 7% of the colleges in this country have compulsory Army R.O.T.C. and only two in this state. Next year there should only be one—Colorado School of Mines.

GREEK WEEK

By Larry Fast

As this column appears, the Kappas will be almost through with their week of initiation activities. These activities have been occasioned by the tentative initiation of Peggy Hoover and Kathy Pitzer who will begin wearing the golden key of Kappa on Saturday.

Last week, five new activities appeared in the Theta House: Sheila Bachar, Marge Galluzzo, Marcia McInnis, Ellen Meis, and Nancy Seaman. They also installed their new officers for the coming year: President, Sue Moore; pledge trainer, Kay Burton; efficiency chairman, Susie Bauer; treasurer, Linnea Erikson; editor, Jean Becker; recording secretary, Audrey Snyder; corresponding secretary, Carolyn Vooreis; and chaplain, Maxine Gaddis.

• Varied Opportunities

The English department also offers a program in independent study. There is a reading list in English majors, which enables students who have been studied in a particular area in English to catch up, and obtain a better grasp of their major. There are opportunities to do various projects for credit in English; such programs are usually available only to seniors and graduate students.

Other factors that have to be considered before one does independent work are the student's desire and capabilities. Also, there must be an instructor who is able to assist the student.

The program for independent study has existed at Colorado College for many years, but in 1959 it was decided to broaden the opportunities for independent study. This policy has improved the academic program. More flexibility is offered and the program does not have to be the same for all students. Not being tied to conventional organization has enabled the faculty to plug some of the gaps in the academic program. A topic which was formerly considered important but not included in the conventional course program can now be studied in an independent manner.

Independent study puts more responsibility on the students themselves. This shift emphasizes the fact that a classroom course is not essential in order to learn about a topic.

Following from, on Friday last, pledges Beth Fincke, Carroll Herndon, Andy Miller, Kris Pochelon, and Mary Gray Sharp were formally initiated at the Alpha Phi Lodge, culminating a week's activities of fun and inspiration. Susan Kania was elected to serve as Alpha Phi president for the oncoming year. Some of the members of the cabinet include: first vice, Kris Conrad; second vice, Jeann Whyte; secretaries, Nancy Stauffer and Carol Roark; activities, Cathay Grant; treasurer, Anne Holmes; and Susie Halton for the honorary senior office of guard.

Initiative week for the five fall Gamma Phi pledges began last Monday night.

Last Friday night the Phi Deltis initiated their second semester of social activity with their annual pledge formal wherein the antics and phikeias "dig" the cool sounds of the new Ray Charles Five Minus one.

Plans are also in the making for a Phi Delt Ski-just weekend—an event which promises to see the Phi olympic ski squad working out on the slopes under the supervision of brothers Faust and Hamilton.

Let it be known that three Kappa Sigs have been forever lost in love. Joe Caldwell, Mike Durfee, and Ransom Reynolds have relinquished their pins to their sweeties.

This weekend, the famed St. Valentines Day Massacre Party will be staged. The Kappa Sigs will provide a bus for all those who would care to watch from the sidelines.

The Beta House is now displaying the noted Tarbox-Baxter Stone Memorial. It presided at the recent Greg Wingate-Tam Peterson pinning ceremony.

Saturday night, the Gamma Phis will have their "Ski Bunny" party, featuring the antics of Miss Davis and her "indoor slalom." Concurrently, the Alpha Phi will have their spring costume dance in the cabana home at Timberline Apartments.

On a different plane, last Sunday, the Kappas had their tri-annual scholarship dinner, with Dr. Seay as the main attraction. He spoke on the possibility of using women's minds for creative thinking.

Due to technical difficulties, the review of the discussion of World War III will be published next week.

Applications can now be obtained at the Rastall desk for the positions of Parents' Weekend Chairman and Songfest chairman. Interested persons are asked to complete the forms before February 21. Submit the applications to the Social Coordinating Committee box in Rastall — c/o Bill Pelz. Qualified individuals will then be notified — via carrier pigeons.

Ski Lessons Set For Beginners

Take notice beginning and non-skiers! Have you ever wanted to take to the slopes and learn how to ski but just have not had the opportunity? or are you a beginning skier and would like to take a ski lesson to improve your skiing?

If you fit in either of these two categories now is your chance to take advantage of the Broadmoor Winter Carnival ski lessons. On Saturday, February 22, Ski-Broadmoor will conduct beginning group classes of fifteen people for a one hour lesson. The cost of this lesson for people who have their own ski equipment will be $1.50 and for those people without any equipment the fee will be $3.25.

Opportunities for

At this point in the school year, the question which is probably beginning to cause the average college student some discomfort, is the question of what to do this summer.

Study? Work? Travel? One method of solving this question is to write to one or more of the numerous agencies, international, intergovernmental, or UN sponsored, for information on the various programs offered for student placement overseas.

Such programs provide a broad range of opportunities ranging from summer study at leading European universities to placement in unskilled labor categories (restaurants, hotels) in the Common Market nations.

For example, UNESCO, a branch of the United Nations, puts out an annual bulletin which lists the opportunities in foreign studies as well as the scholarships presently available.

Additional information covers fields of study, costs, social and economic background of the nations involved and other similar relevant material.

Another agency which provides a program for those students wishing to work overseas is the ISTC. (International Student Travel Center). This agency operates from New York City and sends its student participants to nations from Mexico to Uganda.

It issues an annual brochure, the "Student Passport," which outlines the job openings available. Work opportunities include landscaping, medical research, child care and fruit-picking.

Although this program initially operated on a summer-only basis, it is now a year-round program, thus providing those students who are interested in spending more time in a given country additional sources in which to investigate when applying for jobs overseas. A final illustration of a combined program of study and travel is to be found in an intergovernmental agency such as the International College in Copenhagen, Denmark.

It offers a coeducational program which combines excursions and social opportunities as well as the customary academic itinerary. The brochure issued by this particular agency includes a fairly accurate estimate of the costs of the program.

For more explicit information on these and other programs and the agencies which sponsor them, call or visit the Tiger Office, Rastall Center, X313.

Here's a Lot From Possum Trot

Coach Eastlack's lumberheeled guards, Dave Herrington and Steve Schilder, broke out of their 11 game scoring drought and rained in a total of 68 points between them in CC's two game series with Western State.

Herrington, who must have consumed a windmill cockle before the game, poured in 24 points, mostly on 20-foot jumpers, and led the Tigers to their initial cage victory of 1964. Red hot at the irons in both games, Dave checked the hoop for 25 clinkers in Saturday night's contest.

Slithery Steve Schilder, Herrington's back court playmate, threaded the nets for 12 points Saturday; but the guards could not halt the Mountaineers by themselves and the Tigers received a 76-66 massage and plunged deeper into the R.M.C. cellar with a 1-8 mark.

Hockey

CC's pucksters suffered their second shutout in four games as league-leading Minnesota strapped the Tiger's 3-0 and 4-2. Twine housekeeper Art Warwick worked like a one-armed paper hanger with a broken suspender button but the Johnsonite brigade could not penetrate the gophers ironclad defense and Colorado College descended into the WCHA basement with a 1-7 league count.

Swimming

Coach Lear's fanny dunkers were invited to an evening dip at Golden where they were jettisoned by Colorado School of Mines 56-38. Whyte, Wollmann, and Bailey were our only winners. Trailing by a meager 4 points with 2 events remaining, CC watched the Oregonians sweep the 200 yard breaststroke and annex the 400 yard freestyle relay to pick up 14 points and a victory.

Orchid of the Week —to Steve Wollmann who, while still convalescing from an attack of bucket fever, churned to a surprise victory in the 200 yard freestyle in CC's swimfest with Mines. Wollmann's clocking of 2:09 is one of the finest efforts turned in by a CC aquaman this winter.

Minnesota Gophers Cool CC Icers

The Colorado College Tigers journeyed to Minneapolis, to take on the Minnesota Gophers February 8th and 9th only to continue the scoring drought they had been going through by getting but four goals in their last four games.

Saturday's game featured the fine goal tending of Gopher goalie John Lothrop who turned back 27 shots for a shutout. Warwick came up with the same number of stops for the losers but when the final buzzer sounded the score was 8-0.

The game was a defensive battle from start to finish that featured hard skating and only two penalties during the game which had a CC man and a Gopher in the box at the same time.

Sunday a pair of goals by Lorbe Grosso and Roy Nystrom gave the Gophers team a 2-0 lead at the end of the first period. Craig Faulkman got a third goal in the second period before Tiger Jeff Sauer beat John Lothrop out of a second shutout at 4:23.

Doug Woug put the game on ice for the Gophers although Bob Otto managed one more for the Tigers.

The loss put the Tigers in the league cellar with a 1-7-0 record

Games Area

Defeat Western State, 74-72 Roundballers Take First Win,

It finally happened, the Tigers won a basketball game—dramatically two others in last week's competition.

Against a slightly more active Mines squad than has been seen before, the Tigers were able to keep the game close until the second half, when Mines, leading scantily 43-39, scored nine on the shooting of Gunter, Johnson, and Vandenberg.

Don Vandenberg, the Oredigger's top gun, with 16 points, threw in seven of the Miner's first points, but the Tigers started right. With three minutes left in the first half, Bob Heiny elicited the Tigers moved ahead 19-18, their only lead of the evening. At half-time, Mines led 24-23.

The Tigers managed to tie the score at 22 all early in the final minute, but Mines surged ahead and the Tigers under control for the rest of the game, which ended in a 74-52 victory for the Miners. Top men for CC were Bob Heiny with 13 and Ed Loosli and Steve Scheidler with 10 a piece.

A Friday night contest against Western State College proved a repeat of last year's performance. Last season the Tigers defeated this same team 77-56 to break a game losing streak. It was only this year, but the win was a welcome and deserved one. The Tigers led for almost the entire game of play, and proved themselves in every department in which they normally falter. Dave Herrington, usually good, played the best game seen on the home court all year. Of his 24 points, 22 were from the field, and most of those from way out. The surprise of the game was crazy Pete Susemihl who's been spending most of his time on the bench. As a starter, he hit some crucial baskets in the second half, once pulling the Tigers ahead 35-33, and again to tie the score at 37-all, at a time when it looked as if the Mountaineers might draw ahead.

In fact everyone got into the show—though Steve Sabom almost didn't. Luckily his only field goal regained the lead for the Tigers 22-21 with six minutes left in the half. Bob Heiny with 12 points for the evening put the Tigers ahead late in the second half 41-37. Again the score swayed to the Mountaineers but Farrell Howell tipped in Steve Scheidler's miss to give the Tigers a 67-66 advantage. A jumper by Howell made it 69-66. The Mountaineers closed but couldn't make it as the gun sounded a 74-72 victory for the Tigers.

The next evening saw some more hot shooting by Dave Herrington and Pete Susemihl. Herrington tossed in 25, and Crazy, 18. They both played like demons, but save for Pike Scheidler, who seems to be coming into his own, the rest of the team might as well have stayed at home. Team work was gone, rebounding, which had played an important part in the previous night's victory, was nonexistent. If certain members of Coach Red Eastlack's squad are going to get overconfident at a 1-12 record, there are plenty of people on the bench who would like to play—people like Pete Susemihl, and Steve Hildreth who played so well against Nebraska. Why not use them?

Spanish Club Planned, Open for Membership

In order to provide a locus for persons in the Colorado Springs area who are interested in Spanish speaking culture, we invite all such people to join us in forming a group which will meet periodically to enjoy its mutual interest in Spanish speaking culture.

The range of activities of the group will include activity which promotes interest in or furthers the knowledge of Hispanic culture. All members of the college community as well as the residents of the surrounding community are welcome to share in the exchange of fellowship and knowledge.

Friday, February 28, at 8:00 p.m. we will gather in the W.E.S. Room for a Hootenanny Spanish Style. Refreshments will be offered.

Thursday, March 19, at 8:00 p.m. we will gather to hear either a discussion of South American archeology or a more general discussion of Paraguay.

Sunday, April 26, at 8:00 p.m. we will have the Fiesta Primavera. El Circulo welcomes suggestions and information concerning events which would be of interest to its members.

For more information contact Dan Martin 685-0742.

A SCRAMBLE BREAKS OUT during a recent game with Western State

CC Awarded Science Grant

The National Science Foundation has awarded Colorado College a grant of $91,900 to conduct its ninth annual Summer Institute in Science and Mathematics.

The eight-week summer institute, open to 70 high school science and mathematics teachers, will get under way June 14, said Professor Richard G. Beidleman, director.

Applications on regular NSF forms, must be postmarked not later than February 15, and those applying should have at least five years' teaching experience at the high school level.

The teachers selected for the program will be able to earn 10 semester hours of credit during the summer, and can earn a master's degree in three summers.

The 70 teachers who took part in the institute last year were selected from more than 800 applications.

High school teachers taking part in the program will work alongside research scientists at Colorado College. Programs will be offered in biology, chemistry, earth sciences, mathematics and physics.

The Summer Institute in Science and Mathematics is one of three summer institutes offered at the college under NSF sponsorship. The other two include a field biology institute at Aspen and an eight-week institute for high ability high school students.

All students interested in working as hashers, busboys, or as subs, please leave your name with the cashier at the end of the cafeteria line or with Dave Hartman or Brad Sharf.

Lenten Vesper Services

During the season of Lent, beginning Ash Wednesday February 12th, there will be a Daily Vesper Service at 9:30 p.m. in the Pilgrim Chapel on the southeast side of Shove Chapel. This will be led by several students and faculty. Generally, the Evening Office of the Book of Common Prayer, or a form of Compline for use in Shove Chapel will be used. Occasionally, a more Free Church type of order will be used at the discretion of the particular worship leader. All members of the college community are welcome to attend this daily Lenten devotion.

Foreign Students Speak

The Student Education Association will hold its February meeting on Wednesday, February 19th, at 4:15 in Rastall Center. Some foreign students will speak to the group concerning education systems in their countries, and teacher preparation in their countries.

This will be your last chance to pay your dues which are three dollars. A nominating committee for next year's officers will also be appointed at this time. All interested students are invited to attend.

Enrollment Changes

Colorado College today reported a total second semester registration of 1,996 students. The semester got underway Jan. 10.

Full-time undergraduate enrollment for the semester is 1,164. Of these, 628 are men and 536 are women.

Enrolled by undergraduate classification are 352 freshmen, 516 sophomores, 212 juniors and 284 seniors.

Mrs. E. M. Serongin, registrar, said 16 men and five women are enrolled as graduate students this semester.

Volunteers, the college has 115 special students and five visitors. Among the student students are 24 nurses from Penrose Hospital and 17 from Memorial Hospital.

Jonson does give his characters names which identify their particular humor. This makes it easy for the spectator to predict action and responses, but the delightful achievement of Jonson is that, though he works in this dramatic tradition and acknowledges all its artifice, he manages to devise ingenious surprises within this conventional framework.

Vulpone (John Fenkel) is indeed foxy, though not foxy enough, it turns out. Mosca (Joe Mattys) rather like a gad-fly, but much cleverer. He is a Leporello raised to the tenth power.

Voltore (Keith Fox), Corbaccio (Milt Higgins), and Corvino (Don Cowles) are culturers, rascals and crows; but they surpass these traditional cartoon-ers in voraciousness and unprincipled venality. Then there's Lady Politic Wouldbe (Frances Audier)—well, I advise you to go to the Experimental Theater and see what is made of her.

Bonario (Mike Von Helms) of hard virtue, the blessed Celia (Peggy Rose), a semi-detached chorus (Romey Philpott) and two Mammalized Advocates (Bert Sommers and Henry English) round out the cast in allegorical figures.

As a rather distressing footnote: Vulpone may indeed be too much up-to-date. I recently read that a Broadway company is about to put on a musical based on the play and entitled Foxy.

Perhaps I'm wrong, but I'm afraid that a great deal of the sophisticated, often scandalous, satire which is in the original may be lost among the lines of chorus girls and the cunning lyrics.

I really prefer Jonson without rhymes like funny-money-bunny, with the inevitable, arch reference to Playboy, which the new musical will hardly be able to resist.

But this is a personal, perverse prejudice, I admit. Go to the Experimental Theater, see the original Vulpone, and judge for yourselves.

There will be two performances. Tickets for the matinee Saturday, February 22, 2:30 p.m. and the Sunday evening, February 23, 7:30 p.m. performances may be purchased at Rastall Center desk from today through next Saturday. Although admission will be sold at the Box Office before each performance, it is advised to purchase your tickets in advance to avoid disappointment. The prices are fifty cents with an activity card and a dollar from the general public.

Intramural Hockey Play Boasts Close Contests

Much to the amazement of everyone, hockey competition in both the fraternity and Slocum leagues is still close.

Perhaps the style of play has a while to go before it reaches WHL caliber, but the fans don't seem to mind, and whoever thought there would be fans.

Our last check shows Mike the Menace Malachowski running slightly ahead of Golden Boy Mithrin on the applause meter.

Last week's play established the authority of the faculty Hackers, and the Rangers. The Hackers defeated the Arthur House wings 8-7 in sudden death, as Tony Frasca poured in seven goals. Arthur House's poor showing can be attributed however to their concern with their recently planned winter trip to Juarez, Mexico.

The Rangers defeated the Blades 4-0. Both the Hackers and the Rangers boast 2-0 records. The Wings and Bruins are tied for second with 1-1 records, and the Hackers and the Blades now rest peacefully in the cellar, both teams having lost two.

The Fraternity league is also extremely close, with the Phi Gams in front with a perfect three wins to their credit. Tudor Marks and Roscoe, the boy wonder, lead this hard checking group. However, they must reckon with the Kappa Sigs who are 2-0-1.

Led by Wind Tunnel Hutchins who claims to have played hockey in Prep School, and Cy Bud Bay Dyer, the Kapp Sigs have improved greatly since their tie with the Phi Deltas and should beat the Phi Gams for the title.

Third place is firmly secured by the Sigma Chis who can boast the dirtiest team in the league.

In fourth lie the Phi Deltas with 1-1-1 record. Pre season favorites, they seem to be more intent on personal appearance now, and merit only the term, cute.

In last place, tied are the Zetas and the Betas. No comment here, save to ask the administration that they slip up their Amadium expatriation program.

CC Bowlers Split Both Matches

On February 1 and 8 the CC Bowlers met DU and Colorado School of Mines, respectively splitting both matches. Against DU, the Tigers grabbed two points by winning two games.

CC also captured high series and high game honors, with Bill Shice collecting 536 points on the three game series, while Bill Pelz's 212 was tops in the singles department.

Against Mines, the Tigers also captured two points by winning one game and amassing a greater number of total pins than did the Orediggers.

Bill Pelz bowled the high game of 212, and his 601 series took honor in that department.

Mme Rajan Nehru to Speak On Changing Face of India

A vivid example of the new woman of India comes to Colorado College on Thursday, February 27th, when Madame Rajan Nehru speaks on "The Changing Face of India" at 8 p.m. in Perkins Hall.

Madame Nehru is the wife of Ratan K. Nehru, the Secretary General of the Ministry of External Affairs. While her husband is only distantly related to India's Prime Minister Nehru, Mme. Rajan Nehru herself is a cousin of the Indian leader.

Her paternal grandfather and Jawaharlal Nehru's father were brothers. Mme Nehru's father was Sir Kailas Haksar, Prime Minister of the old Gwalior State of pre-independence India.

Madame Nehru joined the Indian National Congress Party in 1930 and held many organizational positions in provincial Congress Committees before India won its independence in 1947.

Since 1953 she has been actively associated with the All-India Women's Conference and has served as editor of "Roshni," its official journal.

Madame Nehru has long been playing an indefatigable role in the welfare, educational and cultural activities of India. She is a founder member of the Indian Conference of Child Welfare, is president of the Delhi Youth Welfare, of the National Indian Federation of the United Nations and of the Delhi Red Cross.

She held the chairmanship of the Indian National Theatre and is vice-chairman of Bharatiya Kala Kendra, leading cultural organization teaching Indian dance and music.

In 1948 Madame Nehru came to America when her husband was appointed Minister and Charge of Affairs in Washington, D. C. She traveled widely in the United States, lecturing at universities and taking part in seminars and discussions on radio and television. She was awarded a prize by the Press Club of New York for speaking on "India, the New Democracy."

When her husband was transferred to Scandinavia, Madame Nehru soon found herself organizing cultural activities, establishing the Swedish Indian Society and lecturing widely in Sweden.

For eighteen months she taught at Peking State University and lectured in many educational centers of China. Subsequently, she left for the United Arab Republic, Lebanon and Syria, where her husband served as Indian Ambassador and she lectured extensively to education groups throughout the Arab world.

At home in Delhi, Madame Nehru has contributed articles in Hindi and English to newspapers and journals. Her knowledge of languages includes, in addition to perfectly spoken and understood English, Sanskrit, Urdu "a little Chinese and a little French and Arabic."

AWS Sponsors Sadie Hawkins Day Festivities

Sadie Hawkins Day is Feb. 29! The Associated Women Students have planned a social event which cannot be duplicated for four years.

The Sadie Hawkins Dance will be from 9:30 p. m. to 1:00 a. m. at the Cliff House in Manitou Springs. We are fortunate to have the rockin' music of Dick Ross' Combo.

• Yes, it is a costume dance! If you can track down a copy of Little Abner, it may help you create the winning costume. For you see, there will be a prize for the couple with the most authentic costumes.

Activities This Winter

Winter Carnival Will Feature Games, Dance

The coronation of the 1964 Winter Carnival King and Queen, the hockey and broomball finals, plus the Colorado College All-Stars vs Air Force Academy All-Stars hockey game highlight today's activities as the Winter Carnival swings into full action.

The Greeks and Independents continue to battle it out for the top spot this afternoon in the semifinal games with the deciding tournament contests to be played tonight starting at 6:45 p.m.

Following these games the best fraternity and independent hockey players will take on the Air Force Academy hockey squad in a battle which should prove to test the talents of both teams.

Al Adam's "Viscounts" travel to the CC campus from Denver to play for this year's informal dance starting at 9:30 tonight in Rastall for $1.25 a couple. The "Viscounts" were signed by the Astronauts as a replacement at the Denver Club Baja and are well-known throughout the Denver area.

Entertainment will include a free-skating exhibition and the crowning of this year's King and Queen. Tickets will still be available Friday.

Saturday draws the 1964 Winter Carnival to a close but not before the fraternity, faculty, and independent skiers have had their

Worner Honored By Alma Mater

Colorado College President Lloyd E. Worner was cited by the Missouri Military Academy Saturday for "having brought honor" to his alma mater.

He is among six former cadets to be so honored at the academy's diamond jubilee convocation in Mexico, Mo., for service within their professions.

A cadet company commander and president of the MMA letterman's club, Dr. Worner was graduated from the 75-year-old academy in 1936.

ASCC NOTES

The ASCC this week voted and approved two amendments to the by-laws which apply to the elections.

The first new revision read: "There will be one assembly held for the candidates for ASCC elections."

The second, "In an election where no candidate receives the majority of the votes, the two candidates with the highest number of votes will be placed in a runoff election." These revisions will be in effect for the forthcoming election.

The Publications Board announced that they had decided to publish a student handbook because there exists a need for a student publication. This can be financed out of ASCC funds and will have as its goal to present in a positive manner all organizations and groups on the campus.

The editors of the handbook will be directly under the control of the Publications Board.

Because of the seemingly widespread dissatisfaction with the TIGER, the Publications Board held a closed meeting in order to evaluate it.

From this discussion, the Board feels that the TIGER is aware of the main criticisms made about it and hopes that the editors will make the necessary changes to eliminate these criticisms.

Next week there will be an evaluation of the Black and Gold and any interested students are asked to attend.

Also, Ray Jones will present his findings on the cigarette machines—to be or not to be is the question which will be voted upon.

Law Scholarship Open for Seniors

A Colorado College National Honor Scholarship for the University of Chicago Law School will be awarded upon recommendation of Colorado College to a student graduating in 1964 for the study of law at the University of Chicago Law School for 1964-65.

The applicant must meet the requirements for admission to the University of Chicago Law School and should have better than a 3.0 average at CC.

The scholarship will provide full tuition for one year and will be renewable for the second and third years. Application should be made in writing to Professor J. Douglass Mertz before March 1, 1964.

OPINION

By Connie Cooper

"The Weakly Bitch" is an anonymous statement of the views held by one or a few people on campus, no more and no less. It is antagonistic and not infrequently bitter. Its authors do not try to be objective, nor do they propose any possible solutions to the problems which they discuss. For these reasons I would say that the Weakly Bitch is a failure.

In reply to the argument that the Weakly Bitch makes people aware that problems exist: Hogwash. You cannot convince me that at the time of the Weakly Bitch's attack on the Greeks in mid-December the campus was not aware that the Greeks are and have been under fire and of the reasons for this.

The attack upon the administration did nothing to clarify the existing situation between students and the administration which had been brought about by a lack of communication between the students and administration, not by a lack of communication between the authors of the Weakly Bitch and the rest of the student body.

As a third and final example consider the attack made on R.O.T.C. this month. To say the least it was superfluous. Mr. Winograd's article on R.O.T.C. in the TIGER the week before not only brought the question before the entire campus, but showed what another school did to get rid of R.O.T.C.

The problem of the Weakly Bitch is that by being so completely negative in its approach, it manages only to drive wedges the more deeply between factions of the school when we should be trying to achieve understanding and cooperation so that realistic solutions to the problems can and will be found.

ASCC: College Conscience?

The suggestion has been made that the ASCC Executive Council insist on the removal of cigarette vending machines from the campus. Such a suggestion is at best somewhat ludicrous and is at worst an affront to the students of this college.

The proposal rests on the extremely questionable assumption that it is the proper role of an enlightened ASCC Council to protect students from their own inclinations, or at least to make it as difficult as possible for them to follow inclinations which are deemed by ASCC members to be harmful to student health. The assumption seems to be that CC students are not capable of reading the surgeon-general's report on smoking and determining for themselves their smoking habits.

With this assumption is coupled the idea that it is morally wrong for AWS, the MRHA, and Rastall Center Board to reap profit from students victimized by these diabolical devices. This, again, should not be a matter for ASCC to determine. It is for each student to decide whether he wishes to smoke, and it is for each student to decide whether he wishes to favor a particular organization with a portion of the money he is willing to spend to indulge in this hateful habit. It is then in turn the prerogative of each organization concerned to determine whether it will maintain a cigarette machine and the use to which it will put the profits. If the burden of guilt should become unbearable, then perhaps the ill-gained booty might, as ASCC Treasurer Paul Carson suggested, be turned over to charity.

Instead of attempting to act as the college conscience, the ASCC Executive Council should work under the assumption that students at this college are sufficiently mature to determine for themselves the alarm which they should feel at the U.S. Public Health Service report. AWS President Jean Torcom's suggestion that a copy of the report be placed near each cigarette machine would assure that all students are given an opportunity to inform themselves of the dangers of smoking and should serve to relieve the Executive Council's composite conscience. —(Bonavich)

The Issue That Never Was

In recent weeks there has been a growing feeling that a Greek-non-Greek controversy has been fostered by the TIGER. The time has come for the editorial staff to declare its position on this "issue."

The simple fact is that there is no issue, as such, and there never should be. When we have so many topics such as the residential college, compulsory ROTC and racial discrimination, a senseless and potentially harmful split among students is not needed, and should not be encouraged by Greeks or non-affiliates, as has been the recent case.

Our generation has been characterized as a hypersensitive group which reacts too quickly before reflecting. This attitude has typified recent discussions. There has been too much eagerness to find innuendoes, and to "discover" insults and threats. The anti-Greek element is as small as the rabidly pro-Greek element. We earnestly hope that neither faction will seek to interject its viewpoint into any discussion of campus issues or campus leadership, for to do so would be to create lasting, unnecessary and divisive bitterness that is not needed at Colorado College. —(Heckman)

To the Editors:

It appears to me that if you are going to print editorials labeled "Heckman" which criticize the ASCC for not doing anything that you also are bound by the goals which you yourselves set up to print the ASCC news when it is available and when it does state that the ASCC has done something. It seems that this would be especially important when you thought the subject matter to be important enough to devote most of one paper to it. Throughout this issue, you never stated that many of your facts came from the ASCC and that the ASCC had taken measures on these topics. Because I believe that one of the main problems with the TIGER this year is that it does not present the positive viewpoint to any issue, I wish to include in this letter those points upon which the ASCC has acted and which the secretary was unable to get printed in the correct manner.

Firstly, at the Jan. 20 ASCC meeting of this year, the Council decided to further its efforts in order to prove the editorial criticism of the TIGER to be short-sighted. This Council felt that it was certainly too early to make valid criticisms of its actions for the entire year as the editorial implied. However, the Council did need a prod and the TIGER has managed to provide us with that. I am happy to report that at this time the majority of the committees are functioning.

Two topics of major interest to the student body have never been discussed in the TIGER as to the actions which the ASCC has taken on them. The first is the question of residential housing. Dean Reid has stated that there has been no change in policy but that residential housing is an ideal of CC which has never been realized. Because of this there is apparently very little which students can do. However, there are some questions which are directly concerned with the residential housing question which the ASCC feels the students should have some say about. Those issues include (1) liquor in the dorms and thus on campus, (2) women visitors in the men's rooms or adequate facilities to take the place of the entertainment area provided in most apartments or the fraternity house basement, (3) the possibility of keeping board jobs for those who need them might well be explored by the student body and are in fact now in a committee of the ASCC.

The second issue was that of the Student Handbook. Apparently, this student publication has fallen into a state of disfavor and is now in danger of being replaced by an administrative bulletin—as of this meeting (Jan. 20) preparation for this new media has proceeded thus far without any contact with Publications Board which is trying to solve the problems with the old pamphlet. Publications Board has decided to issue a handbook on its own incorporating all of the organizations and groups on the campus and issued separately from the dean's manual.

Although we of the Executive Council have made light of it, Gordon Aoyagi has taken concrete steps toward obtaining trashcans for the campus—these not in a manage to put the Council in a good mood but also will greatly improve the campus and the facilities of the campus.

From this, I do hope that some of the students are aware that Monday afternoons at 4:00 are not only a general gossip session but a series of bridge games but rather that the ASCC is interested in the campus and is trying to accomplish some things which will make Colorado College a more bearable place for the students of the future. Speaking of the future, it is my desire that the TIGER in the future concentrate on the positive rather than upon the negative or, if this is impossible, at least allow the positive a chance to speak for itself. —Karen McVaine

From the Chair

Editor's Note—Freshman Class President Ray Jones gives an opinion as a member of an ASCC sub-committee which is investigating the cigarette vending machines on campus.

By Ray Jones

How many people normally and knowingly would wish to be a party to and furthermore wish to profit from health hazards? Very few knowingly would. And yet, that condition exists on our campus right now in the sale of and profit from cigarettes.

This sets the stage for the action which I would like to see the Associated Students of Colorado College Executive Council take—that of eliminating cigarette vending machines from this campus.

There can be no doubt in anyone's mind as to the dangers of cigarettes, in light of the recent U.S. Public Health Service report which linked smoking and lung cancer. What compels us to continue to profit in this manner?

The elimination of cigarette vending machines is not an infringement upon the rights of anyone. The right is to smoke or not to smoke. Obviously the absence of vending machines does not affect that right or freedom in any way for cigarettes could still be purchased at the various establishments near the campus.

The number of cigarette vending machines on this campus totals five—one in Slocum, two in Rastall Center, one in Bemis and one in Loomis Hall. The profits from these machines is not so great that the organizations and we the students who receive this profit, would miss it, were it eliminated; and furthermore, with the removal of these machines we at Colorado College would be assured that we were no longer a part of this bad enterprise.

The future of the cigarette vending machines on our campus will be discussed in the Executive Council Meeting of ASCC Monday, February 24, 1964, at 4:00 p. m. in the ASCC Room in Rastall Center.

At this time, the Council will dissolve into a committee-of-the-whole in order to discuss and I hope take positive action on the measure. I hope that many students will attend that meeting and come forward, speaking out against the unnecessary evil which we find on the campus.

Shour Chapel

Shove Chapel Sunday Morning Worship Service 11:00 a.m. February 23, 1964.

Preacher: Professor Kenneth Burton

Worship Leader: Ray Jones
Sermon Title: "The First Temptation"

Traditionally during the season of Lent it has been the custom of the Christian Churches to try to expound and understand the temptations of Jesus.

Accordingly the preacher this coming Sunday morning will examine the first temptation in the wilderness, shedding light on the traditional problem of Christian thought and life on the relationship between the material and the spiritual.

In the first temptation Jesus, who seems to be so concerned in the Hebrew tradition with material things, refuses to turn stones into bread. Why does He act in this manner. These and other questions will be examined.

Discussion Retreat
The Discussion Retreat at LaForet Camp in the Black Forest originally scheduled for the end of February has had to be changed to the weekend of Saturday and Sunday, March 7 and 8. The theme of this retreat will be "Death." There will be much opportunity for discussion after initial presentations of "The Greek View of Immortality" by Dr. Douglas Fox; "The Christian View of the Resurrection of the Body" by Professor Burton; and "The Existentialist View of Death" by Professor Gray. The cost will be $6.00 for overnight stay and three meals. For those who need it, financial aid can be arranged by contacting Professor Kenneth Burton. Transport will be leaving Rastall Center at 11:30 a.m. Saturday, March 7th. Permission for this has been given by Dean Curran.

LETTERS to the EDITORS

To the Editors:

Phi Delta Theta has been condemned recently because of its membership stipulations. In order to clarify the situation and possibly to pacify our critics, we would like to present the following factual material, and then, if critics remain, let them base their arguments upon the whole of this letter and the material presented herein.

The section in the Constitution of Phi Delta Theta which relates to membership is as follows:

Article VII

28. Qualifications. "Each chapter shall select its members from among the male students who are in regular attendance at the college or university at which it is established."

"Those chosen by the chapter must be men of proven scholastic ability and possessed of social attributes that will make them acceptable to all other chapters of the Fraternity."

This membership section was early interpreted to exclude Negroes from the fraternity, which was justified considering the prevailing attitude of the period (1848). Thus, it is the interpretation of the section which became the unbreakable law of the fraternity. Phi Delta Theta is very strong nationally, with particularly strong southern representation, a section of the country which obviously still largely retains this attitude of the late Nineteenth Century.

A further point of consideration is that our fraternity was founded by six men; three of whom were Christian ministers. They based the existence of the fraternity upon Christian precepts and principles. Just as you could not join a Jewish organization without professing beliefs in the tenets of the Jewish faith, so you cannot join a Christian fraternity without professing the ideals of the Christian tradition. Thus, the interpretation of the clause which has excluded members of the Jewish faith is not based upon prejudice, as has been implied, but is based solely upon our Christian founding. Those of Jewish origin but not of Jewish faith are entirely eligible to become members of Phi Delta Theta.

Two years ago at the national convention of Phi Delta Theta the membership clause was brought up for consideration. Each chapter was asked to come to the convention prepared to take a stand. The Colorado College chapter of Phi Delta Theta chose to vote for the abolition of the clause. Due to the strong southern delegations and southern sympathizers, the clause was not abolished. But a concession was made, namely an individual chapter could apply to the National Fraternity for a waiver on the membership stipulations, which would give them complete local autonomy in determining eligibility for membership.

A constitutional change in Phi Delta Theta by-laws cannot be passed until two years after the motion was initiated. Thus, the convention this summer will presumably establish the waiver right. Also at this summer's convention there will be another vote on the abolition of the entire clause.

Thank you very much for allowing us to present the facts, the lack of which has caused many people to foster gross misconceptions. —Stevens D. Frink, Pres., Colo. Beta Chapter, Phi Delta Theta

Father John Jepson Speaks Of Love and Birth Control

By Ann Threlkeld

"What is love?" With this question Father John Jepson began his talk last Sunday afternoon on "The Roman Catholic Doctrine of Marriage and the Question of Birth Control."

He said that no church can tell two people how to love. They just do. If we try to put a value on love, all we can say is that it is permanent, consistent, and grows. This is the nature of love.

In the marriage vows it is the couple who says, "For better or worse . . . till death do us part," not the church. Marriage should be regarded as permanent, since this is the nature of love.

If people wish to limit their marriage, Father Jepson continued, they should say so in their marriage vows, saying, "Only for better . . . only in health," etc.

Father Jepson described two manners of regarding authority: 1) Whatever the lawgiver says is law (Machiavelli), and 2) Law is found in the nature of things (St. Thomas Aquinas). The point of view of the church is similar to that of Aquinas.

Love does not constitute a value because the church has valued it, but because it has a value of itself. In Aquinas's system reality is above authority.

The church merely points out the reality of the value of love, does not categorically define it.

Father Jepson continued this idea in the discussion of birth con-

J. W. Pickle is New Professor

The Rev. Joseph W. Pickle Jr., of Denver has been named assistant professor of religion at Colorado College.

Currently a post-graduate student at Tuebingen University in Germany, he will join the faculty in September.

Professor Pickle earned a bachelor's degree in philosophy at Carleton College in 1957 and a bachelor of divinity degree at the Chicago Theological Seminary in 1961.

He earned a master's degree and has completed course work for a Ph.D. in theology at the University of Chicago and now is writing his doctoral dissertation. Christianity and 19th century theology is Professor Pickle's special area of study.

An ordained minister in the Baptist Church, he was assistant minister at Judson Memorial Church in New York City from 1959 to 1960.

Professor Pickle is a member of the Society for Religion in Higher Education. He is married and the father of one.

Radio Slocum to Broadcast KFML

Last week's exposition on KRSH Radio Slocum stated the possibility of more sophisticated FM equipment to receive the Denver stations.

We rejoice in the fact that the above has now been realized, and Fine Arts station KFML has kindly granted us permission to rebroadcast their exceptional programs to a "captive audience" in Slocum.

These programs consist of the very best in classical, folk and jazz music and will, barring blown fuses, explosions, and the like, be on the air 7 p.m. to 12 midnight daily.

Incidentally non-residents of Slocum eager to be captured may also partake of KFML through the music system in Slocum's lounge.

The Village Idiot

By Caroline Croyke

The Eighth-Street Drive Inn appears to be presenting a week-end Out West with Glenn Ford. He stars in both their weekend features, "The Cowboy" and "The Sheepman." Yes sir, that's what I like, real variety. Things will be looking up Wednesday, when Bart Lancaster in "No Kentuckian" and Debbie Reynolds in "Hazy Had a Little" take over.

The Cooper will, as of today, also play host to Lancaster (along with his quasi-twins, Kirk Douglas and Fredric March), with "Seven Days in May."

The Chief is featuring Tommy Kirk and Annette (Why? Because we like you) in "The Misadventures of Merlin Jones." "The Victors" has come to the Peak, and "Mail Order Bride" (Buddy Ebsen, Lois Nettleton, and Kier Dullea) will play at the Ute for a week.

If you missed either (both) "The Thrill of It All" or "Take Her She's Mine" fear not, The Broadmoor is bringing them both back. "Thrill" will play through Tuesday, with "Take Her" starting Wednesday.

Colorado College play type directors seem to have an uncanny knack for picking the worst weekend on which to present their productions.

"Arms and the Man" was giving during Homecoming, and now the Experimental Theatre Players wish us a happy Winter Carnival with their interpretation of Ben Jonson's "Volpone." However, it should merit your cutting out of a few books and broomball games in order to see it.

rol, saying that the church must look at the reality of the situation and the relationship between man and wife.

Reality is different in different circumstances and in different ages. Fifty years ago large families were common and even wanted, but today our society is so complex that large families are undesirable for economic reasons.

The Catholic Church says to do nothing contrary to natural law and the nature of love. At the present time the existing contraceptives and pills are unsatisfactory. Their use tends to undermine the love between husband and wife, reducing the dignity of their relationship.

There are two alternatives: to use contraceptives and risk the love relationship, and not to use contraceptives and have too many children to support.

The Council of Trent defined the purpose of marriage as: 1) Mutual love, and 2) Procreation of children. Therefore the church takes the position of protecting the love relationship.

This does not mean that the church is opposed to birth control, for the rhythm method of controlling the size of a family is considered to be one which does not endanger the love relationship.

Pinnings

In the D.G. House, Nina Dunbar recently announced her engagement to CC alum Ed Kinty. The wedding is planned for February 20. Sandy Wood's engagement to Bob Batson was also announced, as was Lynda Rood's pinning to Air Force Second Lieutenant Al Adams.

Two candles were passed in the Alpha Phi House. Andy Miller announced her pinning to Cadet Norman Baker, 284 squadron, and Lynn Miller announced her engagement to Eric Kleinstiber of C.S.U.

The Beta House was also quite active in the affairs of the heart. Bud Wilson became engaged to Bobbie Childers, K.K.G., at C.S.U., and pledgee Dave Agner loved Kristin Jones, a tri-Delt at C.U.

New officers were installed last week in the Alpha Phi Lodge. Sue Kania is their new president.

The Sigma Chis held their initiation ceremonies last Sunday. The following men were activated:

Cast Announced for 'Taming of the Shrew'

As this is the 400th year of his birth (1564-1616) Shakespeare's comedy, "The Taming of the Shrew," has been selected. It will be shown March 19, 20, and 21, at Perkins Hall.

Cast: Baptista, Garrett Bouton; Petruchio, Henry Poole; music master, Geoffrey Gregor; Kate, Jody Komor; Brannin, Molly King; Hortensio, Fred Abless, Lucentio, William Thompson; Biondello, Stephen Dooley; Grumio, Carl Clay; widow, Susan Halton; Pedro, Tim Mather; minstrel, Leslie Smith; Curtis, Judith Lockwood; Nathaniel, William Thrall; Gabriel, Keith Nichols; Gregory, George Moore; tailor, Emile Dugster; Vincentio, John Shearer; director, Woodson Tyree; technical director, David Hand.

Reshevsky Ties One, Defeats 36 Others

A Fort Carson private drew the only draw from International grand Master Sammy Reshevsky as 36 other hopefuls went down to simultaneous defeat Monday, Feb. 17, in the Rastall dining hall.

Reshevsky, five times U.S. champion, took on all comers in the match, sponsored by the Colorado Springs and Colorado College Chess Clubs. Reshevsky was only recently deposed by current U.S. champion Bobby Fisher.

A native Pole, Reshevsky came to the United States as a boy, living in White Plains, N.Y. He was one of the youngest Grand Masters and national champions of all time.

Britton White Jr., Scott Calhoun, Frank Bond, Dave Palm, Robert Werking, and Robert R. Ward.

The D.G.'s did the same, and welcomed Lyn Boyce, Kathleen Clarke, Jane Humphrey, Judy Lockwood, Barb Murray, and Sandy Wood into the house. In addition, their pledge class held elections. The results were: Jan Akolt, president; Vicki Jacobson, vice-president; Lise Hazen, secretary; Nan Giebink, treasurer; Sharon Smith, parliamentarian, and Barb Keener, Junior Pan-Hell representative.

Monday night in the Kappa House, the new officers made their vows and were duly installed. Outgoing president Sinky Arentz was presented with a gift of appreciation for a job done well.

The Phi Gams proudly announced their pledging of Bob Justice, a freshman transfer from Washburn University. They also elected Roscoe Welch as social chairman and Bob Otto as the new historian.

Incidentally, both the Phi Gams and the Thetas congratulate Bob Otto, who was elected "Theta Man for 1964" at the Theta Man Dance held last Saturday night at the Hackney House.

Mrs. Mathews, the Theta District President, will be a guest of the CC Thetas during the coming week. The Alpha Phi District Governor, Mrs. Winfrey, will also be a guest on campus during this week.

Social

The Kappa Sigs formally celebrated their annual St. Valentine's Day Massacre Party last Friday night at the Hackney House. Kappa Sigs Hubert Bell stayed home; but Karl graciously allowed him to crawl back on Saturday.

On Tuesday last, the Kappas held a short but o'envyvre party for their members.

The Phi Deltas are currently training their ski squad for the massive assault on the winter carnival racing records. Saturday night after the game, the Phi's will hold a victory party in the house with Steve Sabom, his band, and his dog Fang (tenor of the pledges) in attendance.

On Saturday the Betas are planning to use the Robinson-Davis-Boyd Jurex booze bounty for a pre-game cocktail party in honor of the fourth Saturday of the month.

On Monday night, the Gamma Phi's began planning their Spring Fashion Show to be held at the Young Creations Shop. The Gamma Phi's are also planning strong support of their Heart Fund Drive this coming Sunday.

Something is wrong with the Western Collegiate Hockey Association. And, unfortunately, the evils are not lying on the surface of the picture which makes their detection difficult, and their eradication almost impossible. Plunge Colorado College and its present athletic policy into this context, and you have a problem that might lead to homicidal tendencies in any athletic director confronted with the situation.

A look at various hockey programs of league participants serves as a good starting point. Out of 23 listed members, the Denver University squad carries only two Americans.

Minnesota on the other hand carries all but one American on their roster. This disparity exists not only within these two teams, however.

Other "Canadian" colleges are: North Dakota, Michigan Tech, and The University of Michigan. The American colleges are, along with Minnesota, Michigan State University and ourselves. However, both North Dakota and Michigan University have large freshman rosters composed of American boys.

The competitive disparity between Canadian and American hockey players must now be obvious. In the past two years, CC has lost all but one of 11 games played against DU, and ND. And last year, the Tiger freshmen were defeated four times by DU, the difference averaging out to about seven goals.

So, amend the NCAA rules and make Canadians ineligible.

This suggestion, however, is too naive for conditions at present, and perhaps the most malicious way of dealing with this particular problem. In the first place, these colleges located in Michigan and North Dakota are near Canada and provide an immediate location for a Canadian to undertake his college study. In fact, Michigan Tech, one of the more highly ranked engineering institutions in this country, is no more than 90 miles from the Canadian border.

In many cases, a hockey scholarship enables a Canadian near one of these colleges to undertake an education that would have been otherwise denied him. To deny such a person a college education would be a harsh move, to say the least.

Colorado College's position in this situation is not a hostile or holy one. The school has stated numerous times that its various athletic programs are designed for students of the college, not disinterested semi-professional athletes.

To this end, scholarships are presented to athletes, in this case hockey players, not because of their athletic ability, but because of need, and only if it is believed that they can make normal progress towards their degree.

In fact, since the formal cessation of athletic scholarships, those people engaged in athletics at CC maintain scholastic averages equal to the rest of the college. The college, however, does not take offense at those colleges who do give athletic scholarships. NCAA rules permit this practice, and the college realizes that the issues are so complex that no-one has the right to judge the present situation.

What can be done, then? We are now the only team in the league that competes with every other team. And we are losing badly.

In fact, as such, the league seems to be serving no other purpose than to create controversy, and one-sided games with a few notable exceptions, namely, when those teams using either Canadians or Americans compete amongst themselves.

If the current problem, centering around Canadian versus American hockey is not solved at the March meeting of the WCHA representatives, this editor believes that Colorado College would be in a sound position to withdraw from the league.

Minnesota has expressed a willingness to schedule CC, as long as we are willing. The Big Ten is in the process of getting a hockey program underway. Both the University of Wisconsin and Ohio State have initiated hockey programs.

Illinois has a rink and was once engaged in intercollegiate hockey competition. The Air Force Academy has submitted an application to Congress for funds to initiate hockey.

Those colleges listed above are, however, located quite far from the college. But the college in its refusal to subsidize athletics has been willing to subsidize the schedule, so to speak, and outlay funds for various road trips.

Both President Werner and WCHA representative Ray Werner have expressed their willingness to see Colorado College include various eastern colleges in their schedule.

This would seem to indicate that the college is willing to provide the necessary funds to schedule eastern and Big Ten teams where we withdraw from the conference, (a move which to my knowledge has been contemplated only by the editors of The Tiger).

CC Golfers to Host NCAA Tournament

All students who are interested in trying out for the CC golf team are asked to meet in the Rastall Center Lounge at 11:00 a. m. on Tuesday, Feb. 25. Plans for the 1964 golf season will be outlined at this meeting.

The 17th Annual Pikes Peak Intercollegiate Golf Tournament will be played on May 8 and 9 at the Eisenhower Golf Course (Air Force Academy) and at the Broadmoor Golf Club.

This tournament is co-sponsored by Colorado College and the United States Air Force Academy. Last year it attracted 21 entries and Oklahoma State University, the NCAA Champions, was the team winner.

The NCAA Championships will be held at the Broadmoor Golf Club 15-20 with Colorado College acting as 'host. This will be the fourth time in the last 11 years that Colorado College has been host to the NCAA tournament.

The Tigers hope to field a strong team this year with six lettermen returning and a number of promising freshmen on hand.

TIGERS SCORE AGAINST MINNESOTA Gophers in a game at the Broadmoor World Arena last Saturday.

Phi Deltas in Lead

Frat Hockey League Games Wild, Bloody

Intramural hockey scores in the Fraternity League at the end of the week showed the Phi Deltas defeating the Zetas 2-1, the Phi Gams beating Beta's 2-1, Kappa Sigs beating the Sigma Chis 3-1, the Sigma Chis beating the Phi Deltas 4-3, and the Phi Gams beating the Kappa Sigs 3-2 with the last two scores being decided in overtime.

The most impressive action of all, however, was the 4-1 victory the Zetas scored over the Betas to decide the cellar position. The game was a wild one because John Lewis took an old grudge out on Ron Reeves, who had destroyed one of John's art masterpieces.

John threw a wild body check and went flying into the Zeta bench knocking it over and causing Whiton to tear his pants. Hodges was the only other Beta to achieve valor by scoring their lonely goal.

Callaway decided that his trouble was that he looked too good, so he went to the salvation army and purchased a pair of butcher's pants and grew a beard which apparently improved his play, as he scored the opening goal.

Other than that Steve Sprag, who left his motor cycle off the ice but kept the appropriate jacket on, set Colon Pease up in what must be termed the prettiest play of the intramural season.

The other game of importance was the Phi Gam-Kappa Sig game which the Phi Gams won on some fine skating much to the surprise of everyone, especially the Kappa Sigs Vince Greco, who returned to CC for some post graduate action, was so elated with the victory that he gave Tom Bonnie a Kruschewski kiss despite a two foot height difference.

But when the Phi Gams and the non-partisan spectators got through it was unanimous that Tom Altohouse had been responsible for the vast improvement in Phi Gam hockey and that it was a shame that he was not on the all-star squad.

The All-star squad, which not only will play the zomies, but will also take on an all-star squad from Boulder, is listed with Chris Wadsworth as goalie and Roscoe Welch sided by Ralph Hibler as one defenseman, with Sherm Malckerson and Rajah Williams as the other.

Lines will consist of Ray Meunth, Mac Callaway, and Tom Simonson, Cy Dyer, Doug Whitney, Bill Hodges, Augie Meyer, Tudor Marx, and John Sheldon. As far as bowling is concerned, the Zetas wound up as winner of this event with the Sigma Chis and Kappa Sigs following in order. The Zetas have also been dominating the basketball although the Kappa Sigs have been challenging closely.

Social Director Frasca would like it to be made known that intramural wrestling starts soon and that the Frat-Rats should start losing weight for their prospective weight classes as soon as possible.

CC Rifle Team Back in Stride

The CC rifle team has gotten back into stride with a pair of postal matches with Tuskegee (in New York) and with Ohio Wesleyan. The Tuskegee match was the low score this year: 1817, but the sleeping shooters bounced back to fire the second highest score of the year against Ohio: 1878.

Captain Bill Johnson suddenly came to life with vengeance. No bulseye was safe as he blasted a beautiful 287 (which ties CC's all time high individual score).

Against Ohio, he fired a fine 283, raising his shooting average another notch.

Against Ohio Lyman Hunter fired 277 (a tie with his high score of the year). He started slowly with a rather poor 277 (prone), but quickly he accelerated to good kneeling (95) and standing (85) scores for a fine over-all score.

Co-captain Blackmer recuperated slowly from his two 277's against CSC by shooting 272 against Tuskegee. Then, against Ohio, he harassed Bulseye on three targets to get his second 287 of the year.

Although the 1817 against Tuskegee will probably result in a loss, the 1878 could be a win.

These are the scores of the top five against Tuskegee: Johnson, 287; Blackmer, 277; Striney, 272; Holmes, 241; and Dalla Betta, 240.

W. J. HOTZIN CO., LOS ANGELES, CALIFORNIA

The Colorado College Tigers refused to die in their bid for a WCHA playoff berth and came back after a dismal show in Minneapolis last week to defeat the Gophers twice, 6-4 and 7-6. The Saturday night contest was an attempt on the part of Minnesota to separate the men from the boys. However, this strategy backfired when 14 penalties were meted out by the referees with the Gophers receiving eight of them.

Coach John Marincei's Mafia-like tactics led to what was probably their own demise when the Bengals scored 4 goals with Minnesota being a man short.

CC took an early lead when goal-crazy senior John Sinus got a ten footer on a power play. Gopher Doug Woog had several seconds of his penalty to serve when the R.O.T.C. cadet general got his goal.

A few minutes later big, strong Tom Brindley, who played some tough defense last weekend, joined his frat brother Sinus in a much more exclusive scoring club on a long shot from his blue line position.

Minnesota finally got in the game when Dick Haish deflected Frank Zyweic's shot past Warwick with the Tigers a man short.

Steve Ebert, the man who scoots down the ice faster than most of us dream of skating, then took the law into his own hands and got two scores, one a twelve footer on a pass from McAlpine and the other on a shot from the blue line area of Gopher ice.

College Grants

The Shell grant is in three parts: one is for unrestricted use, the second is to be used by the dean of the college for the "professional development of individual faculty members," and the third part is for use in physics, mathematics, and chemistry.

The purchase of books is the object of a $350 grant from the Association of College and Research Libraries, especially books related to the January, 1965, symposium. Gulf Oil Corporation contributed a grant of $1,381 for unrestricted use. This is the largest grant CC has ever had from Gulf.

With Ebert installing a 3 goal lead Minnesota pushed the comeback button and made the score 4-3 at the end of the middle frame. Woog got a goal, followed quickly by Craig Faulkner who was the outstanding Gopher of this series with 3 goals over the weekend.

McAlpine then scored on assists by Ebert and Sauer, only to start an escalation effect with Woog scoring for the Gophers followed by Peterson for CC and the winning goal scored by Fordyce.

Furlong and Lavson scored for the Gophers to make the game 7-6 and very tense, when Marincei added a forward to his mafia by removing defensive sieve John Lothrop. CC then received a penalty which gave the Gophers both a man advantage and Lothrop back in the nets though to no avail as the Tigers held out.

Friday's game was a much more one sided contest on the part of the home team. John Sinus and Wayne McAlpine both scored hat tricks. The score was 6-1 early in the second period and after that CC was never really called upon to have to score although the Tigers did pick up 2 more on the way to victory.

Jeff Sater and Bob Magie were the other two to score in this one sided affair. Both came in the second period, the former at 1:44 and the latter at 3:20.

This game could have been a scoring fiasco if it had not been for the goal tending of Art Warwick and John Lothrop. Warwick made 40 stops while Lothrop was called upon to make 45.

Hustling junior Glenn Blumer was forced to leave the ice and report to the hospital for x-rays but returned as a noticeable addition Saturday and seemed to be in fine shape.

The only other casualties of the game were two spectators, one a middle aged man who was keeping the bad boys of the ice company in the penalty box and the other an elderly lady who was sitting in a seat above the glass protection scheme.

Both these people needed medical attention for facial cuts but at last report were in good condition.

Minnesota's two losses moved the Gophers out of first place which is now held solely by Michigan. In second place comes Denver who takes on CC next Saturday night, followed by the woe-begone Gophers in third. CC leads only Michigan State by winning 3 league games to Michigan State's one.

Here's a Lot From Possum Trot

Randolph Ware, who looks more like a Sunday afternoon Hub bridgeplayer than a prize fighter, proved to be very much the latter last Saturday night as he won the Novice 175 lb. division at the annual News-Elks Boxing Tourney.

A funnel-chested, rattle-boned swing-and-sack artist from Southern Cal, Stick, bewildered all three of his opponents in his drive to the championship.

Except for a lone knockdown in the second round, Stick's championship fight was a study in still life. He fought a discreet and cautious bout, scoring consistently with his jab and hook. With 30 seconds to go, however, in the second round, Stick steam-hammered his foe with a succession of quick rights and lefts and dropped him and the contest's only knockdown. Ware was awarded a unanimous decision and accompanying it—the novice championship.

John Barker, CC's other pugilist, was less fortunate as he was TKO'd in the third round of the novice middleweight semi-finals. Barker threw a leather blanket on his opponent in the first round and won it decidedly.

But displaying his new Western defense (wide open spaces), Barker lost much of his exuberance in the second stanza as his adversary played the washboard blues across John's midriff. Obviously exhausted from his first round acrobatics, Barker received a hard crack in the pan, squealed like a fish-tongued trumpet and expired with 1:28 left in the third and final round.

HOCKEY — Coach Johnson's hockey team made league-leading Minnesota look like a bunch of pork and beaners as they blasted the Gophers 8-4 and 7-6 on successive evenings. Wayne McAlpine and Captain Sinus had 6 goals between them in Friday's triumph and Warren Fordyce's 25-foot shot was the winning margin in the 7-6 conquest. These two stunning victories hoisted the Tigers out of the WCHA cellar and will give them a chance at the playoffs. Watch for a strong finish here.

SWIMMING — The tankmen also turned in their finest performance to date as they tied conference-leading Colorado School of Mines and defeated Regis in a triangular meet last Saturday night. CC, 56, Mines, 56; and Regis, 55 was the final scoreboard reading.

BASKETBALL — The CC basketball team continued at a snail's gallop as they dropped their 10th and 11th conference games to Western State.

Bob Heiny, who appears as coordinated as a box-animated hound on roller skates, rang up 24 points but the Eastlackmen hit only 20% from the field and succumbed to a slow suicide as the Mountaineers strafed them 80-53 in Friday's fiasco.

Saturday night was no better as the Tigers curled up their toes and died to the dirge of 66-43. Dave Herrington, the Pikes Peak region's answer to Cootie Williams, was high man with 17.

CC Debate Squad Wins Second Place At Arizona Meet

The Colorado College Debate Team won its most important victory in recent years in sweeping to a second place finish in the Desert Invitational Tournament at Tucson, Ariz., February 20-21-22.

Barbara Keener, freshman, and Susan Caudill, junior, fought their way through the preliminary rounds and through two final rounds before losing to the University of California at Santa Barbara by a 3-2 decision in the last round of the three day tournament.

Competing against 150 teams from 40 colleges and universities, Colorado College placed two teams in the quarter final bracket after the six preliminary rounds were completed.

In addition to Caudill and Keener, freshmen Linda Marshall and Judy Sundquist made the top eight teams and a chance for the top spot in the tournament.

Ironically Sundquist and Marshall dropped their quarterfinal round to Santa Barbara, the same team which later knocked out CC's second team.

Caudill and Keener defeated Linfield College of McMinnville, Oregon, 3-0 in the quarterfinals and defeated in the tourney favorite UCLA 2-1 in the semi-finals.

Five judges were used in the session filled final round and the initial announcement was that Colorado College had won 3-2. A few seconds later came the disappointing word that one ballot was in error and Santa Barbara was victorious in the split decision.

Earlier in the individual events, Susan Caudill won the first place trophy in extemporaneous speaking. Miss Caudill was the defending champion from her last visit to Tucson.

Colorado College's third team of David Helms and Bob Knight dropped decisions to San Diego State and Lon Beach State and barely missed the quarterfinal rounds.

The University of Arizona tournament is annually one of the finest speech meets in the country and attracts the best teams from the Western United States.

Other Colorado schools entered included the Air Force Academy, Western State College, University of Denver, Colorado Woman's College, and Adams State College.

Phi Beta Kappa Initiates 23 at Broadmoor Dinner

By Amanda Ellis

The Phi Beta Kappa chapter of Colorado College held its initiation and dinner at the Ball Room of the Broadmoor Hotel on Thursday, February 20. About a hundred were in attendance. Professor Richard C. Bradley, president, Miss Lorena Berger, secretary, and David L. Bitters, elected to membership last year, in his junior year, were in charge of the initiation. Following dinner, Miss Maria Bullock and Arthur Warwick spoke. Professor Amanda M. Ellis was in charge of arrangements and publicity. Assisting her were Mrs. Sam Vickerman and Mrs. Richard Bradley.

Miss Bullock and Mr. Warwick traced the development of Phi Beta Kappa. Founded at William Mary College in 1776, just as this country was about to embark on the Revolutionary War, the fraternity at first had weekly meetings and an occasional one at the historical Raleigh Inn.

Fellowship and interest in current affairs were manifest in their debates, where such topics as "The Justice of African Slavery," were hotly contested.

Later, minutes at Harvard, Yale, and Dartmouth found members debating such projects as "Is Political Ambition Consistent with Moral Integrity?" "Is Conversation with the Fair Sex Advantageous to a Student?" and "Whether the Wearing of Low Bosoms in

Thousands Struggle for Places in Class of '68

By Onica Friend

The Admissions Office, directed by Richard E. Wood, whose base of operation is in the basement of Ticknor, is in its annual turmoil. Over a thousand variably eager young graduates from high schools and prep schools all over the country must be sifted, sorted and shuffled to come up with the 400 Chosen Ones who will descend on the campus next September as the Class of 1968.

How does the Admissions Office do it? They just do. There is no rigid Admission Policy, no Scientific Procedure. They take into consideration everything in the applicant's file and, as best they can, from the given data, for man over all picture of the individual in an attempt to determine whether he will be a successful Colorado College student.

Most important is the applicant's high school record, but a high class rank is weighted against the number and type of courses taken and the general rating of the school itself (graduation from a prep school does not guarantee admission).

Extra-curricular activities are noted in the over-all portrait but are not major determinates; the same applies to teacher and counselor evaluations, as very few counselors fail to recommend their students.

As for College Board scores, the terror of every high school senior and college hopeful, they are important but not absolute. According to Mr. Wood, there were students admitted last year whose Boards were in the 300's. This was done because, contrary to popular belief, there is not a very high correlation between College Board Scores and success in college; they are useful only as part of the applicant's profile.

Volpone Performance Rated As Success

By Mr. Manch

Last week's production of Ben Jonson's Volpone by the Experimental Theatre at Colorado College achieved several kinds of success. Given richer dimensions by colorful, festive costumes and scenery exceeding what most people expect to find on an experimental stage, the performances provided a happy and rarely flagging evening's entertainment.

Even more encouraging, since this is an experimental group, the production revealed that Director James Fox and his associates could work out, skillfully and gracefully, fresh interpretations of traditional materials.

Fox showed himself capable of original direction and theatrical wisdom in such things as his handling of Bonario and Celia, the play's only innocents, whom Jonson treats with sincere feeling and in all seriousness.

Recognizing how dangerously close these figures approach the ridiculous, Fox transformed them into parodies of themselves and in so doing exploited a vein of humor otherwise undiscovered. Bonario (Michael von Helms), gasping incredulously at the viciousness in men's hearts, pompously self-righteous at the final scene of reward and retribution; Celia (Peggy Rose), hands clasped in the gesture of plaintive prayer, awaiting a fate worse than death, generally beleaguered, distraught, and delightfully dippy. Another way might have been disaster.

Sparkling performances marked the two leading roles. John Frenkel's Volpone gave us a vivid portrayal of the chief villain's avarice and depravity as well as his delight in mischievousness. In delivering his lines, Frenkel was flexible, expressive, and convincing. Always in control of his material, his handling of the epilogue was one of the brief but memorable moments of the play.

Joseph Mattys as Mosca, saw to it that things stayed spirited and lively by darting nimbly back and forth across the stage, plotting conspiracies and eviscerating knives. In a play where, partly because of Jonson's subtle and demanding prose, a number of lines got lost, Mattys distinguished himself by a felicitous blend of crisp, resonant delivery and agile movement, never more winning than in his gay meditation on the excellence of consummate parasites.

Keith Fox, Milton Higgins, and Doug Cowles each established a memorable individuality in his role, and the three consequently provided a pleasing variety of villainy.

Fox was blunt and humorless as the lawyer, but a little limited in range of interpretation.

Higgins gestured, shook, tottered, and cackled as aged Corbaccio, all blasted with antiquity and vice. Cowles gave promise of being the most versatile of the three, but occasionally failed to perk his lines with enough force or intellectual range. Lady World Be Politic, Frances Audier, left over from a sub-plot Fox sensibly checked, managed to endear herself briefly to the audience in her single scene. The two advocates (Bart Somers and Henry English) seemed to fare better in the first trial than in the second.

The production owed much to the comic, indeed, often farcical (continued on page five)

Professor Trissel

Trissel New Art Professor at CC

James N. Trissel, assistant professor at the University of California at Los Angeles, has been named assistant professor of art at Colorado College.

Mr. Trissel, 33, assumed his new duties here in January.

For the past three and a half years Mr. Trissel has been a member of the faculty at UCLA where he is art coordinator of University Extension.

He previously was acting director of the Wright Art Center at Beloit College in Wisconsin where he began his teaching career as an instructor.

The new Colorado College art professor has exhibited widely in both regional and local exhibitions in the Middle West and in 1960 won the Purchase Prize at the Wisconsin Art Salon.

A graduate of Iowa State University, he holds a master of arts degree in art from Colorado State College and a master of fine arts degree from Iowa State.

At UCLA, he has been the recipient of a faculty research grant and a summer faculty fellowship. He is a member of the American Association of University Professors.

ASCC NOTES

The ASSC took up the question of the cigarette vending machines at the last meeting. Ray Jones asked if the students wished to be a party to and profit from a proven health hazard. He went on to say that he was not advocating that the right of individual student to smoke should be removed, but that it was the concern of the student body not to profit from their smoking.

He cited an article about Will Rogers who refused to advertise cigarettes. He also read an article about a small college that has already removed their cigarette machines.

Ray then moved: Whereas a recent U. S. health report has linked lung cancer and other diseases with smoking, making smoking a health hazard; and, whereas, we the ASSC of Colorado College, realizing that individuals have the choice to smoke, and wishing to cease to be a party to and profit from the enterprise—a proven health hazard; do therefore resolve: that all cigarette vending machines be eliminated from the Colorado College campus.

Ray then cited the figures representing the amounts made from the machines in the residence halls. Shuman receives about $9.00 per month and Loomis and Bemis about $7.00 each per month. The question of the fraternities was raised and the conclusion was that they were included in the motion.

Mike Durfee asked about having a referendum in which each student would vote.

Open Dorm Doctrine Proposed by President

By Harris Sherman, President of ASSC

By this time there has been a great deal of discussion for and against the idea of a totally residential college. I shall not dwell here about the merits and counter-arguments which have been expressed, but rather comment on one of the most basic questions in such an idea—namely, what kind of social regulations will accompany a residential college.

It is impossible to separate a consideration of social policy from the idea of a residential college. When off-campus living ends with the establishment of a new men's residence hall, there will be a substantial change in the social life of the student body. It is no secret that off-campus apartments have provided a place for students to take dates, have parties, and by-pass campus social rules. The basic question that arises is how the new residence hall, or the older residence halls, will compensate for this change? It is becoming increasingly clear that if Colorado College fulfills its goal of becoming a residential college, then the College will have to begin a major change of traditional on-campus social regulations.

It is also clear that before any new dormitory can be planned, an extensive appraisal of the basic social necessities of the student body will first be required. From an examination of the proposed upperclassmen's dormitory, the most notable weakness is a failure to combine or even include necessary social facilities with the outstanding educational and sleeping facilities that have already been planned. This is partly the fault of the student body, which must make its needs known so that the administration will have a clear idea of what new social regulations and facilities might be included within the dormitory systems.

Certainly a primary consideration is privacy. The foremost liability of a residential college is the intensity of living 24 hours a day in a small community environment. A student has the right to be alone with a date or to entertain a small group of friends. Because Colorado College is a coed, liberal arts school is no reason to sacrifice this important right. There are a number of colleges of outstanding stature and excellence that have recognized this right and have made substantial changes in dormitory policy to acknowledge it. Among these colleges would be Harvard, Radcliffe, Brandeis, Oberlin, Pomona, Columbia, Swarthmore, Brown, and Reed. These colleges, which are residential and non-residential, coed and non-coed, have opened their dormitories for visiting hours. The rules vary in each case, but most permit men students to receive women guests in their rooms during specified hours.

Other colleges have initiated small lounge rooms where students may entertain friends. These lounges have an element of smallness and privacy, the ideal arrangement calling for one lounge per eight students.

The success of these programs has varied widely from criticism of Harvard's plan to satisfaction with the Brandeis arrangement. In any case, most colleges that have established such programs have maintained them and have given the students the responsibility to act as discreet, mature adults. And most important, it has given students an element of privacy which, I maintain, must be an essential part of a successful residential college.

The ideas and questions raised in this article are the work of an ASSC subcommittee which is presently considering a series of proposals to be submitted to the student body through the endorsement of various campus organizations (i.e., ASSC, AWS, MRHA, IFC). It is hoped that students will contribute to these proposals by submitting suggestions to this ASSC subcommittee before the final resolutions are completed. By actively considering the problem in this way, we will be able to give the administration a clear and concise view of what students wish to see in a residential college.

American Apartheid Exists in Sunny Hattiesburg, Mississippi

By Mike Pleasant

There are 7,406 Negroes of voting age in Forrest County, Mississippi. Twelve are registered voters. In 13 Mississippi counties no Negro is on a registration roll. In 42 counties only 10% of the voting age Negroes may cast a ballot.

In January of 1961 a Civil Rights Commission issued a report on voting in the South which contained these facts. In March, 1962, after months of legal battling with officials and courts for authority to examine county voting records, the federal government presented damning evidence against Forrest County, Miss.

It showed that (1) its registrar, Theron C. Lynd, had never registered a Negro to vote, (2) that prior to January, 1961, no Negro had ever been permitted even to apply, and (3) that after July, 1961, obviously qualified Negroes had been rejected outright.

A temporary injunction against these discriminatory practices was issued by the government. The district court refused to act. The 5th Circuit Court, however, finally granted the injunction, which ordered Lynd to register Negroes on the same basis as whites.

Lynd had used several methods of disqualifying Negroes: he had them interpret obscure or extremely difficult provision of the Mississippi Constitution which he had not required any white to explain; he denied registration to Negroes who made errors or omissions on their application forms even if they met fully all the specified qualifications; he refused to indicate to these applicants afterward what their deficiencies were.

Finally Lynd denied federal investigating commissions access to his corrupt records.

Social Work Available with American Friends Service Committee

A Denver Weekend Work Camp schedule for winter and spring months has just been announced by the American Friends Service Committee Office in the United States Federal Center at 1375 Delaware in Denver. Dates for the Weekend Work Camps this winter and spring are February 14-16, March 6-8, April 17-19, May 8-10. Five Weekend Work Camps were held in Denver last year, the first to be organized in this area by the AFSC.

The AFSC pioneered the Work Camp Program in the United States thirty years ago as an opportunity for students to give their summers in constructive service in problem and tension areas. Recognizing that students also wanted to express a similar concern for helping and learning during the regular school year, a program of Weekend Work Camps has been developed in a number of cities. Work campers live for the weekend in an inner-city church or neighborhood center. Projects vary from work on children's playgrounds or giving a "face lifting" to a community recreational facility to scrubbing, cleaning, plastering, painting, or repair work in individual family homes.

The American Friends Service Committee, a Quaker organization, has been engaged for nearly a half century in attempts to relieve human suffering and in a search for non-violent solutions to conflicts—personal, national, and international. Its work is carried on without regard to race, creed, or politics.

One of its other programs in the Colorado area is the Weekend Institutional Service Unit at Colorado State Hospital in Pueblo, where nine weekends for college students were arranged last year. Dates for weekend work camps are as follows: March 13-15, April 10-12, and May 1-3. Cost includes transportation plus $1 registration fee. The hospital pays all local expenses.

The number of campers accepted from each school or campus is limited in order to secure as wide a representation as possible of schools and racial and minority groups. This means that early applications are advisable.

Apply on this campus to Paul Kutsche, Palmer 33, ext 371.

Man has a persistent tendency to make his own gods. Sometimes he makes them in his own very human image (though suitably enlarged, of course). Sometimes he makes them out of the raw materials of his hopes or his fears—in which case they generally turn out to be uniquely stupid or uniquely vicious. The God of the Bible is disturbingly different unyielding where we would make Him soft, and strongly gentle where we would make Him merely hard.

Disappearance of Indian Tribe Discussed by Baker

By Jonathan Hetzel

"My favorite activity is digging up dead Indians," confessed Galen Baker in Perkins Hall, Feb. 18. His speech, which dealt with his excavation of ancient Indian ruins along the Purgatoire River, was geared to the public, but none the less, interesting.

The Purgatoire River runs from the Spanish Peaks to the Arkansas River. Although ruins are found in numerous places throughout southern Colorado, those near Trinidad are being thoroughly explored. A new dam will soon inundate and destroy the sites. But more important the Purgatoire Indians have a peculiar history.

First of all, they show a combination of cultures. These Indians were probably originally from the Upper Republic group (primitive Plains Indians), were influenced by the Eastern woodlands culture, and finally came in close contact with the Southern Pueblo Indians who from 1150 A.D. on, traded along the Sangre de Cristo Range.

Secondly, the oldest sites are older than any of the Southwest. The earliest date for Mesa Verde dwellers is 1200 A.D., the earliest date for the Purgatoire Indians may be 400 A.D. Finally, the corded pottery shards found in the sites undeniably demonstrate a strong cultural influence from the Eastern Woodland Indian culture, 1,500 miles to the east. The corded pottery suggests an interesting history. Agriculture, the basis of the Pueblo life, was developed in the valleys of Mexico 3,000 to 4,000 years ago (Old World agriculture is 7,000 years old). The germ of agricultural society spread most rapidly along the Gulf coast, up the Mississippi River valley, and along the Tennessee and Ohio into the expansive woodlands of the East.

Probably a group looking for better land left the East for the West. Following the Arkansas they came to the Purgatoire. Finally they settled near the Rockies, mingled with the Flathead Indians and lived peacefully until 1250 A.D. Around 1250 A.D., the Apache, Ute and Comanche entered the area. Many sites from 1250 to 1500 A.D. show signs of raids. One ruin had had the skeleton of an infant whose skull had been smashed and whose body had been hastily buried.

Around 1400 A.D. the Purgatoire Indians vanished. Were they totally destroyed? Or did they move on, and if so, to where? The mystery is still unsolved.

Teaching Positions Available in Africa

The Afro-Anglo-American program is a joint university effort to prepare teachers for educational service in Africa. Full time study during the academic year 1964-65 is offered by Teachers College, Columbia University and the University of London Institute of Education.

Special opportunities are available for: (1) experienced elementary school teachers and administrators to qualify for assignments in African teacher training colleges, preparing primary school teachers; and (2) secondary school teachers, and outstanding liberal arts graduates with depth of background in a teaching subject, who will be prepared for secondary school assignments in Central, East, and West Africa.

Major features of the program include: academic credit, special seminars and tutorials, student teaching in English schools, and a comparative education tour in Europe. Fellowships are available to qualified applicants.

For application forms and information, address: Dr. Karl W. Bigelow, Executive Officer, Afro-Anglo-American Program, Teachers College, Columbia University, New York, New York 10027.

THE SLOW RUSH

Illustrated below is the membership pin of a brand-new national fraternity called Signa Phi Nothing. To join Signa Phi Nothing and get this hideous membership pin absolutely free, simply take a pair of scissors, cut out the illustration, and paste it on your chest.

Let me hasten to state that I do not recommend your joining Signa Phi Nothing. The only thing I recommend in this column is Marlboro Cigarettes, as any honest man would who likes good tobacco and a good filter, whose heart is quickened by a choice of soft pack or Flip-Top Box, and who gets paid every week for writing this column.

I am frankly hard put to think of any reason why you should join Signa Phi Nothing. Some people, of course, are joiners by nature, if you are one such, I am bound to tell you there are any number of better organizations for you to join—the Cosa Nostra, for example, or the Society for the Placing of Water Troughs in Front of Equestrian Statues.

cut it out and paste it on your chest

But if you insist on joining Signa Phi Nothing, let me give you several warnings. First off, it is the only fraternity which admits girls. Second, there is no pledge period, each new member immediately goes active. Perhaps "inactive" is a more accurate word, there are no meetings, no drives, no campaigns, no sports, no games, no dues, no grip, and no house.

The only thing Signa Phi Nothing has in common with other fraternities is a fraternity hymn. In fact, two hymns were submitted to a recent meeting of the national board of directors (none of whom attended). The first hymn goes:

*Signa Phi Nothing, Shining star,
How we wonder If you are.*

The second hymn, rather more poetic in content, is to be sung to the tune of Also Sprach Zarathustra:

*A Guernsey's a cow,
A road is a lane,
When you're out on chow,
Remember the pain.*

Pending the next meeting of the national board of directors (which will never be held) members are authorized to sing either hymn. Or, for that matter, Freddie.

Perhaps you are wondering why there should be such a fraternity as Signa Phi Nothing. I can give you an answer—an answer with which you cannot possibly disagree: Signa Phi Nothing fills a well-needed gap.

Are you suffering from mental health? Is logic distorting your thinking? Is ambition encroaching on your native sloth? Is your long-cherished misinformation retreating before a sea of facts? In short, has education caught up with you?

If so, congratulations. But spring is upon us and the sap is rising, and the mind looks back with poignant longing to the days when it was a puddle of unreason.

If—just for a moment—you want to recapture those care-free vaporings, that warm, squishy confusion, then join Signa Phi Nothing and renew your acquaintance with fecklessness. We promise nothing, and, by George, we deliver it!

© 1964 Max Shulman

We, the makers of Marlboro Cigarettes, promise smoking enjoyment, and we think you'll think we deliver it—in all fifty states of this Union. Marlboro Country is where you are.

Concept of Design of Winchester Cathedral Is Seen in Shove Chapel

In 1929 Colorado College received a gift of $50,000 from Mr. Eugene Percy Shove for the purpose of erecting a chapel on campus to be known as Shove Memorial Chapel.

An open competition was held to select a design for the proposed chapel with the condition that it conform to the existing architecture then employed on campus, namely, the Romanesque style of the late nineteenth century, popularized by H. H. Richardson of Boston.

The final design was, in fact, that of Edward Gray, a student of Richardson.

Mr. Gray's design derived its general concepts of mass and proportion from Winchester Cathedral, and even the mass and proportion were re-ordered in such instances as the relationship of Winchester's low tower to nave.

But while the form has been altered somewhat, the design still retained the general conception of mass and proportion as embodied in Winchester Cathedral.

The original intention of the architect utilized red sandstone with rough pointed surface in the design, but excessive cost of materials and the lack of modern cutting facilities in Colorado led to the adoption of Indiana limestone, a choice with which the donor was in complete agreement.

Of his design Mr. Gray has stated:

"Externally no effort has been made to impress the beholder by lavish use of moulding or ornament. The structural lines are emphasized in a quiet and unassuming manner."

This, Mr. Gray stated, was done in accord with the original intent of the medieval architect.

"The common approach to the art of church building in America has been to concentrate both funds and effort on a highly ornate exterior usually, though not always, at the expense of the interior."

"This was not the approach of the medieval cathedral builders. They devoted their efforts to the creation of a temple of worship."

"The function of walls and roof was to enclose this temple and while much ingenuity was applied to the creation of a stately and dignified exterior, this was never at the expense of the interior."

Among the more interesting and unusual facets of the construction of Shove was the use of stones from the ancient parish churches of Gattos, Surrey, King's College, the Cathedral at Winchester, all of which were associated with the family of Mr. Shove.

Ground was broken for the chapel on June 10, 1930, and the corner stone was laid on Oct. 17, 1930. Within the cornerstone is a sealed copper box containing a number of obscure documents.

Perhaps a more important document was embedded in the top-most stone of the tower, a roster of all who worked on the building.

Completed and dedicated in 1931, Dr. Bernard Iddings Bell, professor of religion at Columbia University, stated the purpose of the money:

"This house is erected by a wise and generous benefactor that through it something more of religion may be contributed to the lives of those scholars who are of this particular college. It stands here adjacent to the halls of learn-

Thousands Struggle for Spot in Class of '68

However, as a general indication of the caliber of this year's applicants, the mean verbal SAT score for women is running around 600; for men, 570. The means are reversed for the math scores. In addition, the writing samples are good indications of how well the student thinks under pressure.

The application itself, filled out by the prospective student, has considerable weight. Answers to the questions of why a liberal arts education and why Colorado College, coupled with the applicant's own self-recommendation, give a fairly good idea of why the student wants to come here and just how interested and sincere he is.

In this category, it is important to note that some degree of originality is appreciated by those who have to read about hundreds of liberal minded students who want a general background to enable them to face the world, and think the Rocky mountains would be a stimulating intellectual climate. It is not very difficult to separate the bull from the sincere, and honest statements are starred by the application readers.

There are some interesting sexual differences between applicants too. Female applicants tend to be what outsiders would term the "ideal college applicant"—A's and B's, upper 20% of their class, lots of extra-curricular activities and responsible, mature students who would profit by four years of study at Colorado College. Also, there are more women applicants and fewer chosen, so that the selection of a female student is even more difficult than that of a male.

And what makes it almost impossible is the fact that every female applicant is practically the duplicate of the next, even down to the handwriting. It seems there are a fantastic number of babysitters who take summer trips with their parents and very few who run lawn mower concessions or who even do scientific research in the garage.

It seems that the original female is a rare sight in the Admissions Office.

The male applicant, on the other hand, is less "ideal," has lower grades and scores, but on the whole turns out to be more interested in an education and thus is more likely to succeed.

It's an amazing job the Admissions Committee does, screening so many applications, discussing them individually and finally ending up with a new class of Colorado College freshmen, and it gets harder every year.

Not only are the "war babies" coming on the scene, as evidenced by the 10% increase in applicants over last year, but the applicants are increasingly qualified.

It may sound as if it is the Admissions Office which determines the character of the freshman class, but this is not entirely true. Obviously, only those who "knock on the door" are considered, and a major determinant of who knocks is the student enrolled now. To quote Mr. Wood, "The student body is the greatest perpetrator of the future student body."

Asian Studies Program to Start in Fall Semester

Colorado College today announced the establishment of an Asian Studies Program. It will get under way in September. The program, which will provide up to 25 semester credit hours of work in the area, is unusual for a small liberal arts college. It was regarded as distinctive in the Rocky Mountains.

Acting Dean Kenneth Curran made it clear, however, that while students could take all the Asian Studies courses offered, the program would not constitute a major.

The program was established by the faculty of the college when it approved by the addition of four new courses to the curriculum.

Courses included in the program are two on the history of the Far East, a cultural history of East Asia, European imperialism, which deals with interaction of Asian and European cultures, Asian literature in translation, studies in modern Japanese culture, Oriental philosophy, and religions of the world. Religions of the world deals with Hinduism, Buddhism, Taoism, Confucianism, and Shinto.

History Prof. William Hechman, who was instrumental in establishing the program, noted that four of the courses are in the Social Science Division, two are in the Humanities Division and two are general studies courses.

"It should be possible for students majoring in almost any field in the college to undertake some or all of the Asian Studies offerings along with their major work," Professor Hechman said.

He noted that the college was able to establish the program without the addition of new faculty members.

"We are fortunate," he said, "that we already have on the faculty professors who are extremely well qualified to teach these courses."

Responsible for the history courses is Prof. Frank H. Tucker, an authority on the Far East. Prior to joining the Colorado College faculty in September, Dr. Tucker had been employed by the Navy. In addition to certain classified work, he directed the Navy's Asian Studies Program for a number of years. He is the author of numerous articles and books on the area and is fluent in several Far Eastern languages.

Teaching courses in Asian literature and modern Japanese culture will be Prof. Carlton Gamer, who lived last year in a Buddhist temple in Kyoto, Japan. He has studied Oriental philosophy, history, and music at the University of California at Berkeley.

Oriental philosophy will be taught by Prof. Jane Cauvel, who studied the philosophy of the East at the University of Hawaii and at Bryn Mawr where she earned her Ph.D.

Teaching the course dealing with Oriental religions will be Prof. Douglas Fox of Australia, who earned his doctorate at the Pacific School of religion.

NOTICE

Woodson Tyree's production of The Taming of the Shrew scheduled for March 19-21 is currently in rehearsal. Students from the play production classes under technical director, David Hand, will make up the production crew. Business managers are Mike Carter and Tony Placzek. Joe Mattys, Carol Parsons, and Cammy Riggs are in charge of publicity, and Gayle Heckel and Diane Wieden are house managers.

ation. Among these were: "No Indian pays taxes; Indians do not work for a living and live solely on hand-outs from the government; and Indians are kept away from, and do not mix with the rest of society." These are not true. Indians do pay taxes, the same as any other U.S. citizen. Indians do work for a living and they are an integral part of the whole society of New Mexico.

Several of the members and the coordinator also talked at length about the living conditions of the Indians, which in many cases are actually quite bad, and about the reforms which they felt were needed. When pressed to explain the means by which they would have carried out these reforms, it turned out that they would use this very same governmental structure and bureaucracy which they so disliked. This was a complete reversal from their previous position advocating the removal of any governmental control over the individual.

This was but one of the times that these men showed themselves as being incapable of presenting and carrying out a rational, logical and consistent argument.

The first part of the film presentation was a speech made by one of the founders of the Society, Robert Welch. The speech was his description of the "communist conspiracy" to take over the world. In it, he managed to say, by misstatement, misrepresentation of fact, twisting of meaning, or false implication, that all of Asia, Asia Minor, Northern Africa, and Europe, with the exception of a few of the western European nations, were now completely controlled by the communists. Throughout the speech, he spoke only in broad generalities.

It seems a shame to me not that such an organization can, but that it does exist in the United States.

GREEK WEEK

WINTER CARNIVAL—First, a quick rundown on the results of Winter Carnival. The royalty consisted of Shermie Malkerson (Sigma Chi) as king, Suzie White (Kappa Kappa Gamma) as queen. The hockey tournament was captured by Phi Delta Theta as was the ski tournament. Kappa Alpha Theta swept the opposition to take broomhall honors.

Saturday, the Alpha Phi House was the scene of a heart fund benefit sponsored by the Colorado Springs alumnae. Andy Miller, Sue Davis, and Carroll Herndon turned heads and drew the crowd of 160 the newest in-between fashions. On Sunday, the Alpha Phi House walked the streets of Colorado Springs collecting for the Heart Fund, Cardiac Aid being their national philanthropy.

In honor of the visit of Mrs. Wheeler, the Gamma Phi Beta Province Collegiate Director, the local Gamma Phis held a Monday night dessert.

Monday night was rather varied in the Kappa Kappa Gamma House. It began with social chairman, Suzie Hall, giving an educational lecture on contemporary social graciousness, and ended with a pinning ceremony—dessert with the Sigma Chis. The ceremonies were in honor of the pinning of Shelly Alderfer and Wally Schultz. The two houses also made plans for a beer bust this coming Sat.

The Sigma Chis continued their elections Monday night. Bob Ward was chosen as social chairman and Scott Calhoun was tapped as rush chairman.

SOCIAL—Sally Blair of Gamma Phi Delta announced her engagement to Tom Evans of Dunsmuir, Penn. The candle was also stepped in the Alpha Phi House as Stephanie Frost announced her engagement to Terry Rosen.

The Kappa Sigs celebrated the pinning of Ransom Reynolds and Marion Hunker (Kappa Alpha Theta) with a serenade.

The Phi Deltis held their previously announced winter carnival victory celebration last Saturday night. The question of whether John Schiffer, Bill Laughlin, or Merle Ricklefs emerged victorious is yet to be decided.

The Beta House rang with cheers last week as two of their old alums, Mark Steuli and Geoff Rivers, returned to the scenes of their crimes. On Sunday night, the D.G.'s entertained the Betas for dinner in the D.G. House.

The Thetas will have a swimming party with the D.G.'s next Sunday, and a dessert with the Phi Deltis on Monday.

Incidentally, the time and place of the famed Phi Delt Ski Weekend has been set. Winter Park is the lucky place, and it will be invaded on the sixth and seventh of March.

6,000 Books Added

Tutt Receives New Volumes

More than 6,000 books have been purchased during the past year for Colorado College's Charles Leaming Tutt Library. Miss Joan Shinew, acting librarian, said this brings total holdings at the library to 187,633 volumes.

She said most of the books purchased are those ordered by professors to provide students a wide selection of reading in courses offered.

Acquisitions also include reference works. Miss Shinew said less than one book in 15 is fiction.

Reading among students and faculty is high, she said. More than 3,000 books are checked out of the library at any one time. Less than 200 are fiction.

Gordon Named to CC English Dept.

Joseph T. Gordon has been named assistant professor of English at Colorado College.

Mr. Gordon, currently teaching English at Pennsylvania State University, will join the faculty here in September.

He holds a bachelor's degree from DePaul University in Chicago and a master's degree from the University of Colorado. He now is a Ph.D. candidate at Pennsylvania State.

The author of numerous articles in scholarly journals, he has been teaching at Pennsylvania State for the past three years. American literature is his field.

Mr. Gordon is a member of the Modern Languages Association and the Modern Humanities Research Association.

CC to Conduct Summer Institute with Science Grant

Colorado College has received a grant of 44,500 dollars from the National Science Foundation to conduct an eight-week Summer Institute in field biology at Aspen, Colo.

This is the second grant the college has received this winter from NSF for the operation of summer science institutes. The college recently received $91,900 for its ninth annual Summer Institute in Science and Mathematics.

Dr. Richard G. Beidleman, associate professor of zoology and director of the NSF programs at Colorado College, said 32 high school biology teachers could take part in the institute.

He noted that applications would have to be postmarked no later than Feb. 15. Teachers selected will receive a stipend of $75 a week, a $15 a week dependence allowance, and travel expenses to Aspen.

Biology teachers enrolled in the institute will work alongside visiting scientists from leading colleges and universities in the West, the Colorado College zoologist said.

"The basic underlying intent of the course will be to encourage teachers to incorporate field biology into their own teaching and give them background, enthusiasm and direction to do so," he explained.

Conformity with Custom and Fashion, Be Any Impachment of a Lady's Modesty."

The debate on whether women should share in civil government was decided negatively as was one on whether a national debt was advisable.

The annual meetings were almost always elegant affairs, though in 1880 one young man felt that $5.70 was too much to pay for the elaborate dinner, even though a good "theatrical" orchestra played except while speeches were made.

Phi Beta Kappa, which elects each year the top students in ranking colleges and universities, has three chapters in Colorado: at Colorado College, the University of Colorado, and Denver University.

In other fields too, Phi Beta Kappa has included our leading lights. In letters, "they range from Irving, Emerson, Longfellow, Mark Twain, and Whittier, to Carl Sandburg, Robert Frost, T. S. Eliot, Pearl Buck, Dorothy Thompson and Samuel M. Ellis. In science are Amanda Morse, Eli Whitney, Alexander Graham Bell, Alex. C. Carrel, Robert Milliken, Dr. Florence Sabin, and Ernest Larsen. In business are men like John D. Rockefeller Jr. and Mark Hopkins. In education, such men and women as John Dewey, Horace Mann, Alfred Whitehead, Booker T. Washington, Marjorie Nicholson, Louise Pound, Dr. Kenneth Curran of Colorado College and James Conant. Others include Walter Lippman, Jane Adams, Helen Keller, and Harry Emerson Fosdick.

Miss Bullock quoted from Emerson's Phi Beta address in 1831 when he said that in the right state the scholar "IS MAN THINKING; in the degenerate state ... he tends to become the mere thinker, or worse still the parrot of other men's thoughts."

As of February, 1964, now more than three years since the beginning of the inquiry into Mississippi voting practices, Lynd has not yet complied with the original injunction, which specifically condemns the illegal and unconstitutional procedures of Forrest County.

None of the qualified Negroes who had been unjustly rejected has been put on the voting rolls. Court delays have been endless, and legal maneuverings carefully calculated to avoid any effective action, which would increase Negro voting strength.

There is much reason to suspect that such political legal tactics have been and are common procedure in many other areas not only of Mississippi but the entire South, and that this will increase in frequency and strength as national elections approach in November.

Two organizations, The Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee and the Council of Federated Organizations, have been actively engaged in a drive to press for speedy resolution of the Lynd Case and to register Negro voters.

Both groups have run up against powerful, entrenched, and highly organized opposition from the white power structure of Hattiesburg, Miss., the county seat of Forrest County. The lines of battle are closing rapidly.

Hattiesburg, as one of our African students discovered this January, is a city whose white population endorses and practices apartheid. Segregation is not merely an attitude; it is the law. The city is partitioned into Negro and white ghettos, where hotels, restaurants, stores of some kinds, and public entertainment must, by law, cater only to members of one race, depending on the color of the proprietor.

There is a YMCA for Negroes and a YMCA for whites. A Negro boarding house owner must turn away the white friend of her son because she fears the police, who have laws to back them up.

Ever since SNCC and COFO began their peaceful demonstrations in Hattiesburg protesting against these segregationist policies, the police have used harassment and intimidation ruthlessly.

Student demonstrators are jailed and held incommunicado on charges of failure to carry Selective Service cards (reminiscent of South African "pass" inspections), parking too far from the curb, "ridiculing" an officer (smiling at him on them).

One high school student who had marched in a picket line was threatened with arrest if he ever again wore tennis shoes with writing on them.

The president of the Mississippi NAACP is arrested regularly (for "speeding") when on tours in the state because the police know his car.

Once under arrest, the bond fees are liable to be raised to great amounts (to discourage demonstration—and both SNCC and COFO are broke as of early February) and Negroes, especially female, are subjected to countless crude indignities at the hands of the police, who cover their badge numbers with tape so that their insults cannot be traced back to more of the rights we hold so basic?

Already intolerable conditions exist. Both of the two possible outcomes of enforcement of this injunction—violence or unchallenged government intimidation of a minority—are totally incompatible with our beliefs in the rightness of orderly legislative change and fair representation and treatment under the law.

A situation has been created in Hattiesburg out of which only injustice and hatred can come.

In effect, Hattiesburg officials are attempting to silence all overt, active expression of opposition by making the very effective means of that expression, meetings, demonstrations, picketings, sit-ins, etc., illegal.

If the court of Forrest County, Mississippi, can go this far in the abrogation of American citizens' rights to vote and to freedom of speech, how much further might it go along the way to denying still

Peace Corps Demand On College Volunteers

(Information for the following article was taken from the Peace Corps Handbook for 1964)

The introductory handbook for Volunteers abounds with sentences designed to hammer home the need for flexibility through stability in a volunteer. For example: "At the most discouraging moments, your survival as an effective volunteer . . . will depend on your ability to remember why you volunteered, your ability to keep going the things you believe in."

Selection of the Peace Corps Trainees is based upon intelligence, physical stamina, and mental stability, friendliness and patience, etc. You must fill out a questionnaire, take a test, and (if you attend college) send your transcript.

References are contacted; a very careful check is made of your background and past. You must also have a thorough medical examination.

Background is checked only after you have accepted the invitation to training by the Civil Service Commission. Data is collected by investigators and reviewed by top officers of the Peace Corps.

The most important part of the training is eight to twelve 60-hour weeks spent by the trainee at a US university. All trainees attend the same classes and live together. Languages, study of the host country, the Peace Corps' philosophy and purposes, knowledge of the USA, world affairs, community theory and tactics, technical or academic skills, and health hazards and medicine are all covered in the training program.

The handbook stresses that conditions overseas may be entirely different than expected. The volunteer may learn to speak one African dialect, only to find upon arrival that there is an entirely different one used there.

The job assigned may be entirely different. Volunteers may have romantic ideals of "roughing it" and be assigned to a city swarming with tourists. "The romance of the Peace Corps may be the romance of sustaining one's interest and enthusiasm in the midst of the tedium."

Your should not "just do your job"; you must have complete involvement with the community. You must also (and this is stressed) have an attitude of learning and willingness to learn.

Self-righteousness or an attitude of an enlightened Messiah are detrimental, only to find upon arrival that there is an entirely different one used there.

The salary of $75 per month, which accumulates service and is paid (after deductions) at the end of your service amounts to approximately $1,500.

In addition, you may receive travel, clothing, and living allowances; life insurance and a leave allowance of $750 per year.

After leaving the Peace Corps, volunteers return to colleges and universities, jobs they left, etc. Others travel, continue their service in a salaried job in the host country or in an overseas organization, or with federal employment.

What Rastall Center Board Has Done This Year

The Board strives to provide activities and services for the benefit of the college community. It tries to fulfill the duty of any college union—to provide a center for educational, social, cultural and recreational activities for all members of the college community.

This year the Board, under direction of chairman Walt Hecox, has sponsored various activities catering to the individuals on campus. Under Cultural Affairs Committee came the Sunday Night Movies: Caine Mutiny, The Mouse That Roared, High Noon, Hand in Hand, and others. Another of the Cultural Affairs Committee's jobs is to plan and display art exhibits in the Rastall Lounge. The "Cuss and Discuss" coffee hours are under this committee also, some of them having been: "Freshman Orientation," "Anthropology and How It Applies to Racial Equality Today," and "President Kennedy's Administration."

The chairman also keeps Rastall's record and magazine supply up to date.

Sports and Outing Committee is responsible for the Games Area Tournaments in the Spring and Fall and the bicycle races during Parent's Weekend.

This year the committee set up ouples bowling and special bowling rates for girls, trying to lure the girls to the Games Area.

Another annual event sponsored by the "S and O" Committee is the "Rally for the Keg."

Special Events Committee is the other committee that sponsors all-school functions.

The Round-Up, the Astronauts, and the Christmas Skate-Dance party were put on by this committee, as well as the Hootenanny that was in Loomis Lounge.

The FAC's along with the TGIF's are sponsored by Special Events Committee; and as for some inside information, look for more TGIF's in the future. The annual Spring Street Dance is also being sponsored this year by Rastall Center Board.

Just as a reminder: This Spring's Survival Kits are also a Rastall Center Board project.

Publicity, Hospitality, and Secretary-Treasurer are the administrative positions. The Hospitality Committee sponsors Rastall Open House, publishes the pamphlet on Rastall Center, and heads up the Christmas decor.

As the name implies, Publicity Committee is in charge of broadcasting any Rastall event all over campus. Another duty of this committee is to fill the display cases.

To provide these functions, Rastall Center Board is given a budget of $2,300. This is, of course, split up among the committees in the following manner: Cultural Affairs $525; Sports and Outings $175; Special Events, $850; Publicity, $150; Hospitality, $225; Secretary-Treasurer, $50.

The remaining $325 is used for such diverse purposes as: supplies for the craft shop, financing a bus for hockey games, contributions to the Campus Chest, and to pay for the initial purchase of stamps, which can now be purchased at Rastall Desk.

dent would have the chance to make his own decision and to voice his own vote. Ray felt that the ASCC had the authority to make whatever decision they deemed advisable.

Bill Ward pointed out that the situation was such that it was negative to deprive those who wish to smoke of the machines and that a far more positive attitude would be to publish propaganda concerning the dangers involved. Bill Pelz mentioned that the effects of the banning of these machines was far reaching and could involve the cigarette contests, etc. The vote was taken and defeated 11-3 with Pelz abstaining.

Karen McIlvaine then suggested that we urge those groups in control of the cigarette vending machines to review machine policy and set up their own regulations. This motion passed unanimously. Therefore, any further action will be taken by those who have control of the machines.

Such actions could include a propaganda campaign, posters on the machines, removal of those machines by those groups, or the donation of their proceeds to one of the organizations fighting dread diseases.

The ASCC will discuss the Black and Gold next week.

Respectfully submitted,
Karen McIlvaine
ASCC Secretary

Rastall Center Board Announces New Poster Rules for Campaigns

Rastall Center Board has added jars of poster paint to the Craft Shop for the use and convenience of those making campaign posters and for all students this year. They will be stored in the lockers in the crafts area and the key for them is available at the Games Area Desk.

A few regulations on placing posters in Rastall:

1. Only one poster per candidate will be allowed in Rastall and that one can be placed only on the large bulletin board in the hall on the first floor. No banners, signs, or posters will be allowed anywhere else, either inside or outside the building.

2. All signs must be approved at Rastall desk and may be removed by the Board if they are not neat or lack good taste.

3. Posters may remain up for only one week. In the case of a run-off, the defeated candidate must remove their own posters; those in the run-off may leave theirs up until the end of elections. It is the responsibility of all candidates to remove their own signs.

Pucksters Drop Two To Denver University

The more accomplished division of CC pucksters disappointed the Winter Carnival Crowd by suffering a double defeat, 3-0 Friday at DU and 6-3 Saturday at the Broadmoor. Friday featured only the same passing capabilities of the Denver forwards and the darting movements of goalies Art Warwick and Buddy Blom. Warwick, who after his graduation will become a French professor with a Phi Beta key, made more saves but Blom came up with his fourth shutout of the year, a Denver record and a pleasing thought for the Detroit Red Wings who offered him a contract that did not match Denver's.

Bob Mamill scored the first Denver goal at 9:40 with a man in the penalty box. Following this, Billy Staub scored at 13:17 of the second period only to have Hamill score again with 3:36 left in the game.

The only person who seemed at home on the ice at this game was Bob Otto who not only played defense but seemed to be one of the few people wanting to carry the attack into the Denver Blue zone. Perhaps this is explicable in that Bob went to school with many of the Denver players.

Saturday the game was an entirely different story with CC in the game all the way. Denver did have a 2-0 lead before the Tigers got going, but John Simus soon took care of this. Defenseman Dave Scrim was serving a tripping penalty, while Simus broke out on a solo and slipped the puck between Blom's legs.

Simus was not through, though, as he set up a 20 foot slap shot to Wayne McAlpine with 14:35 left in the third period for a score.

At 18:39 Simus again got the score when he slapped the puck past Blom on feeds from McAlpine and Peterson.

The Pioneers' big man was Emory Sampson who netted a hat trick. Andy Herrebrut, one of Denver's outstanding sophomores, started DU scoring at 2:26. Two minutes later Warwick was again beaten, this time by Naslend on a fifteen foot shot.

After Simus' first goal, Bill Staib put the puck in the net as he also slid in to end the first period. Midway in the second period Denver got two goals, 13 seconds apart; one was by Don Livingston and the other was Sampson's second. Sampson got his third goal late in the third period by faking Warwick out of the cage with some nice skating to end the excitement.

The Tigers' only consolation from the game was that they have scored more goals against Denver and Blom than anyone else in the league.

The wins made Denver 6-1-1 in the league and the Tigers 3-9-0 in the WCHA.

CC All-Stars Trounced The Air Force Academy

By Mac Calloway

It was a motley scene that greeted the Air Force Academy All Star Hockey team last Friday night. "Disgraceful," said one girl, distinguished by a gaudy glittering hunk of indistinguishable steel pinned to her sweater.

"After all, ultimate victory over all the un-American countries in the world can only be carried out by clean shaven, neatly dressed, mature, well-adjusted American Americans."

No doubt the CC all stars lost the beauty contest, but managed to win the hockey game (but just barely, 5-4).

After the usual twenty minute period of time it takes to place any Air Force Academy team on the field, due to the need for transfer order signed in triplicate, various salutes and other necessities of protocol, the game got underway.

Immediately, it became obvious that the cadets, as we have been told to properly refer to them, were well-drilled and in far better physical shape than either the Tigers or one slightly glassy-eyed referee.

Hampered by poor skating, the Air Force team was able to compensate for this deficiency by sharp, accurate passing and general hustle.

A number of Tiger goals were thwarted by their strong back checking and determined, if not slightly unorthodox defensive tactics in front of the cage.

The game was not, however, without its humorous aspects.

One particularly hateful Tiger, on his first trip onto the ice, seized the immediate opportunity to board, cross check, high stick, and illegally assault one cadet in the offensive zone for which he was awarded a number of cheers, and two minutes in the penalty box, for crimes against God, Country, and sportsmanship.

The next two minutes were spent seeking a place of confinement. However no one seemed pleased with the task of harboring so vicious a criminal, though the Air Force eventually agreed to the confinement.

Throughout early play, no more than a goal separated the two teams with Walsh and Pankke scoring for the Air Force, while Siminon and Hibler tallied for the Tigers.

The second period and early part of the third saw the Tigers pull ahead with goals by Siminon, Calloway, and Dyer, but the Air Force continued to press the now exhausted allstars, and scored twice to bring the game to its 5-4 end.

NOTICE!

March 5 is the deadline for submission to the campus literary missions to the campus literary magazine, the KINNICKINNICK. Materials may be turned in at the Rastall desk. Any questions may be directed to Lynda Spickard x295.

Here's a Lot from POSSUM TROT

A subdued week in sports at CC was accompanied by equally subdued performances by CC athletic teams.

HOCKEY—On Friday night the Denver University leers turned the Tigers' cat west and crooked as the Johnsonsomen perished 3-0. On Saturday night CC was as impressive as mouse-eaten quartz and lost again 6-3.

SWIMMING—"I'm as limber as a dish rag," chortled one of the CC mermen prior to the double dual meet with AFA and Texas Tech. CC then received an 83-12 wringing out from the AFA and were cleaned 80-15 by the Texas squad.

TRACK—Once again track pilot Frank Flood has dispatched the call for cindermen. Coach Flood, who handles his athletics with all the charm and understanding of Eric Von Streichen kicking a peasant to death, has a nucleus of nine lettermen returning from last year's labors.

But Tony McGinnis, last year's high point man and original Woman's Home Companion, suffered a freak attack of Hammerman's cramp in the tennis basement and broke his ankle when attempting to summon help.

Tony will be out of action for a month but should be ready by the commencement of the outdoor season. CC's first indoor meet is March 14 at Mines.

ORCHID OF THE WEEK—"A face like a bowl of walnuts, hair like a rat's nest and a physique like Peter Lore" is a corking good description of John Simus. But regardless of his physiological imperfections, he is the finest hockey player CC has had for the past couple years.

Captain Simus hustled all over the ice in Saturday's game with Denver and scored two of CC's three goals.

BOWLING—Saucer-eyed Bill Evans bowled an astounding 298 last week in the Rastall Center games area. With 11 consecutive strikes, Evans split with his 12th ball and left the three and 16 pins standing. Had the Rastall lanes been sanctioned by the AMA, Evans would have received $1900 in prize merchandise.

John Simus, captain and esteemed player.

Simus Is Hailed as Outstanding Scorer

Who scores two goals and an assist to complete the entire scoring against the toughest team in the West?

Who handles the best goalie in the WCHA in order to knock a teammate's pass into the cage? Who skates flat out at all times when on the ice with only one purpose in mind: that of placing the Rubber Disc in the net?

There is but one answer to all of the above questions and that is John Simus, captain, scoring leader, and inspiration to the Tiger squad this year. Simus, who is not an outstanding skater, nor stick handler, but who when in front of the cage, flails the wood so hard that there is only one place for the puck to go.

Not only is Simus undaunted in front of the cage, but when a teammate steps out of line and is about to receive a penalty, he is apt to find himself strictly censured by the CC captain. Simus always comes to play hockey and not to wrestle or to snap suspenders. Simus now has 19 goals and a total of 35 points, 10 of which have been scored in the last four games.

Rifle Team Loses Exciting Match

The CC rifle team faced the Colorado State University marksmen (one of the two best teams in the conference) on the home range February 15, and lost 1364-1416.

In this return match, CC got the highest shoulder-shoulder score of the year and CSU dropped 17 points below the score of its previous encounter with CC.

Lyman Hunter bore down on his standing target to obtain an 88/100 and a total score of 276. This is Hunter's highest shoulder-shoulder score and it ranked second on the team.

Dan Holmes harassed bullseyes in kneeling (92) and standing (83) to emerge with 270, the fourth-highest score on the team and his highest score in any match this year.

J. Eastman of CSU also merits special mention for shooting 100/10X prone (X indicates a bullseye with the outer edge of the bullet hole not touching the nine-ring). Not only has this shooter shot four perfect prone scores in all four matches this year, but it is one of the only two 100/10X scores in the conference this year.

It should be mentioned also this highly unusual shooter is a girl.

Outstanding individual scores of the meet are these: prone, Blackmer and Johnson (98); kneeling, Blackmer and Johnson (95) standing; Blackmer and Hunter (883).

The top five shooters in the meet were: Blackmer (281), Hunter (276), Johnson (272), Holmes (270) and Striely (265).

Winter Games to Be Held

The 1964 Colorado College WINTER GAMES are being planned for March 12, 13 and 14th as a capping off of our first ice skating season. Both individual and team events will be included for men and women.

There will be speed skating— $\frac{1}{4}$ mile (4 laps), $\frac{1}{2}$ mile (8 laps) and one mile (16 laps) races, an obstacle course, relays and accuracy competition—hockey sticks for men, brooms for women.

A special barrel jumping contest will be held for men only.

Trophies and medals will go to the first three places in each event. This is an individual tournament and thus no points will go toward intramural standings.

All students, faculty and staff are eligible; except for varsity and freshman team athletics.

Entry forms will be available at the Restall Center desk beginning Monday, March 2nd. Interested participants may contact Mr. Frasca or Mr. Oden on questions prior to the release of entry forms.

NEWLY-APPOINTED DEAN OF THE COLLEGE Kenneth J. Curran. Dr. Curran has been acting dean since August, 1963.

Curran Appointed New Dean of the College

Prof. Kenneth J. Curran recently was named dean of Colorado College. He had been acting Dean since August.

President Lloyd E. Worner, in announcing the appointment, said Dr. Curran was offered the deanship last May, but refused to accept it at that time except on an acting basis.

I was very pleased that the Committee on the Deanship and the Board of Trustees unanimously recommended and approved Curran," President Worner said. His acceptance guarantees experienced and sound leadership for the academic program of Colorado College.

Dean Curran has been a professor of economics and chairman of the department of economics and business administration since 1950.

Dean Curran earned a bachelor of science degree in economics at Princeton in 1925 and a master's degree the following year. As an undergraduate he was elected to Phi Beta Kappa, the honorary scholastic society.

He spent the next 10 years in the world of business. In 1926, he went to Persia and Iraq, where he managed the Teheran and Baghdad offices of the American-Persian Development and Trading Corp. The firm imported machinery.

Later he joined Standard Brands and became assistant to the plant manager in Chicago. In 1939 he became an instructor at Princeton University while he worked toward a Ph.D. which he received in 1941.

During World War II, Dean Curran served with the US Army as a lieutenant colonel. He attended the army's school of military government and served in North Africa and Italy.

In 1946 he was presented with the Order of Cavallier d'Italia for "service to the Italian people" by Umberto II, king of Italy.

Dean Curran is the author of one book, "Excess Profits Taxation," and a regular contributor to the Journal of Marketing for the past 10 years.

From 1954 to 1963, Dean Curran was Marshall of the Faculty at Colorado College; he has been chairman of numerous faculty committees including the Public Lectures Committee, Academic Program Committee, Executive Committee of Social Sciences, and the Faculty Salaries and Tenure Committee. He also served as Colorado College director of the Union Carbide Scholarship Program.

The Colorado College Dean is a member of the American Marketing Association, the American Economics Association, the Colorado-Wyoming Social Sciences Association, and is a past president of the college chapter of the American Association of University Professors.

Black and Gold Wins New Lease On Life Monday

The main subject discussed and approved in the ASCC meeting last Monday was the continued existence of Black and Gold. The two-and-a-half hour discussion was begun by Jim Schultz reporting to the ASCC for Black and Gold. He reviewed their activities during the semester trial-period granted to the organization by the Council in October. His statement included the Black and Gold's sponsoring buses to some away sports events, paying for the freshmen girls' cleaning bill of fresh week, and their contributing to publicity when asked by some other enthusiasm committees.

He also mentioned that the Black and Gold morale was low organizationally after being severely criticized.

The floor was opened for discussion and a motion was initiated calling for the ASCC to take appropriate steps to remove Black and Gold from the campus. Many comments followed centering mainly in two areas: The ASCC trial-period for Black and Gold to indicate its interests in remaining an organization and the place of Black and Gold in New Student Orientation Week.

The Council asked why there had been no meetings of the club, or payment of the freshmen girls' cleaning bills during the previous semester. Action taken by the ASCC at the beginning of first semester was to give Black and Gold an opportunity to contribute to the campus despite the consensus favoring removal of the group after their having participated in Orientation Week.

In the course of this discussion it was noted that there was no Black and Gold constitution on file. Also noted was the financial status of the organization. The club is $44.50 in the red. They had agreed to pay the cleaning bills of several freshmen women whose clothes were stained in the hazing of that week. However, having no funds, Black and Gold has not paid these bills, although they published a letter indicating this had been done. It was mentioned that no formal meetings of the Enthusiasm Committee had been held, although when asked to help in publicity for sports the Black and Gold has responded.

It was also mentioned that no hazing will be allowed in next year's orientation and that Black and Gold will need to create a constructive role for itself in these activities as none is presently planned.

Other comments included the possibility of dissolving the present Black and Gold with the hope that some of its members would petition the ASCC to establish a new honorary men's pep club on a different basis. It was also suggested that the trial period be

Ballet Program Features Handel, Modern Dance

Ten dancers, under the direction of Colorado College Prof. Norman Cornick, will present four ballets in the Fine Arts Center Friday and Saturday, March 6-7, at 8:30 p.m.

The Colorado College Dance Theater production will include "Pas de Quatre" to the Water Music of Handel, "Pas de Quatre" with music by Pugn, Balanchine's "Stars and Stripes Forever" with music by Hershy Kay, and "The Insomniacs" with an original score written by Igon Puchalski.

Dancing in the four works will be Terrie Reeves, Mary Emanuel, Malissa Davis, Marietta Wilhelm, Judy May, Cynthia Morin, Cindy Wynn, Esther Geoffrey, James Francis and Professor Cornick.

CC To Host Annual Forensic Tournament

Debate squads from ten states will attend the 16th annual Colorado College Top-of-the-Nation Debate tournament on Friday, March 13, and Saturday, March 14.

The meet will be co-hosted by Adams State College and is predicted to be one of the largest in the Rocky Mountain area. Twenty-five colleges and universities are expected to be in attendance, including teams from as far away as Rice University in Houston, Texas, and Northern State Teachers College in South Dakota.

Competition will be held in Senior and Junior division debate, extemporaneous speaking, original oratory, and oral interpretation. The national collegiate topic will be used for debate; Resolved: That the Federal Government should guarantee an equal opportunity for higher education to all qualified high school graduates. Debate rounds begin at 2:45 Friday afternoon and continue through Round IV at 7:45 Friday night.

Round V will be held at 11:00, Saturday morning. The top eight teams of the preliminary rounds will enter the quarter-finals at 1:15, Saturday afternoon. Semi-finals follow immediately at 2:30. Finals in the event will get under way at 3:45 with the senior division round held in Perkins Hall and the junior division in Rastall Center, WES Room.

Individual events will start Friday, with finals held at 10:00 Saturday morning.

Trophies will be awarded for sweepstakes, first and second places in debate, and first place in individual events. Directors of the tourney are Mr. James A. Johnson, CC speech coach and assistant professor of economics, and Mr. Carroll Harrison, head of forensics at Adams State College.

CC debate club members assisting Mr. Johnson in running the meet are Dave Helms, president; Barbara Keener, secretary; Susan Caudill, Judy Sundquist, Linda Marshall, and Bob Knight. Anyone interested in keeping time for the rounds should contact Mr. Johnston at extension 223.

Notice!

Persons interested in applying for editor of the Student Hand-book may still do so before March 11. Applications may be picked up and left at the Publications Board box at Rastall desk.

Madame Nehru Describes India In Transition

By Merle Rickles

Drawing from her wide experience in India and throughout the world, Madame Rajan Nehru, wife of the head of India's foreign service, painted a picture of an impoverished, illiterate and overpopulated nation, struggling to make progress without incurring any obligations other than peace.

Mme. Nehru spoke to a jammed Perkins Hall on February 27.

It is not Calcutta, Bombay or Madras that is the true India, Madame Nehru insisted, but rather the 700,000 villages where the masses live, masses which under Gandhi for the first time "came into their own."

She commented upon the progress of the struggle for independence, a unique struggle in that it "left no trail of bitterness behind," and upon the social revolution which followed.

Madame Nehru

"I am sure that we have made many mistakes," she said, and great problems remain to be solved, but to her the future is bright.

But perhaps her most enlightening remarks concerned India's position in the modern world. Of the creation of Pakistan, she commented, "a misconception had been created in the minds of our own people, that religion could be a division."

OPINION

By Ben Lyon

At the A.S.C.C. meeting this past Monday, the Council was to 'complete' a job left unfinished from last fall. The matter concerned Black and Gold, an 'organization' on campus that had taken far too much into its own hands in recent years and culminated its lack of taste by upsetting a large part of the campus with its antics during Freshman Orientation Week last fall.

The immediate reaction last fall was to do away with the group on the spot. However, the Council decided the best and fairest approach to take was one of presenting Black and Gold with a rather severe ultimatum, demanding that the organization evaluate itself from within, put into writing standards by which it could govern itself, attempt to conscientiously establish goals for future orientation weeks (not just hazing), and pay for all cleaning bills that were charged to them by any fresh girl who felt B.&G. should take care of such matters. Although this last point was not in writing, the officers of the 'organization' understood all the proposals very clearly. The vote by the Council on this approach was unanimous. B.&G. also understood that at some date in the future, they would have to account for themselves concerning these reasonable demands.

The date set was last Monday. A representative of the group came before the Council and stated in a few words that his group had done absolutely nothing concerning A.S.C.C.'s request. He could offer no reasons as to why nothing had been done; he admitted that they had not even had any meetings at which such business could logically have been taken up.

At an opportune time during the discussion that followed, this representative recognized that there was sympathy for his 'cause' from some members on the Council. At this point he proposed that A.S.C.C. take the group by the hand and lead it out of its depths. He suggested that the Council supervise a new election of officers and that B.&G. be given two weeks to carry out on its own its next proposals—which turned out to be nothing more than a restatement of the ultimatum put to the group five months ago by A.S.C.C.

"GENIUS!" cried some Council members, who proceeded to vote down the motion on the floor that would have removed B.&G. from campus. They wanted to give the 'organization' the 'chance' it 'deserved.'

I find it a most unfortunate situation when A.S.C.C., or at least a majority of its members, can find 'reason' to support such an 'organization.' Black and Gold defied and challenged the strength of student government on this campus and won a smashing victory. The reaction by the Council on this issue, something they supported unanimously earlier in the year and something for which they now could not uphold any conviction at all, was truly appalling. A disturbing amount of rationalization must have been necessary for some members of the Council to ignore the circumstantial and concrete evidence against Black and Gold.

A.S.C.C. has the right to control the existence of any organization under its jurisdiction, especially when any group has gotten completely out of hand. Persons placed in a position of student representation should not be overcome by the thought that they 'owe it to their friends,' even though this is a small minority of the entire population, to uphold their interests, be they right or wrong—in this case obviously wrong. Student government should become non-existent when it reaches the point that it cannot stand by its own decisions at a time when they come under fire.

A majority of A.S.C.C. members displayed a complete lack of intestinal fortitude by condoning the continued existence of Black and Gold. This is the most unfortunate action I have seen in four years at this college. I can only hope that the future will produce student government leaders that will establish convictions of their own and stand by them.

"After all, my child, the Black & Gold is like a poem: it does not have to mean... it just is!"

Monday's ASCC action in refusing to rid the campus of Black and Gold is disconcerting for two reasons. First, it is a sad commentary on the efficacy of the Executive Council that it should refuse to take decisive action in the face of blatant and arrogant defiance from an organization which had clearly been served notice early in the year to either drastically re-evaluate its role here or dissolve. Second, ASCC's inaction means at least one more year of sullen stupor from the men's enthusiasm organization.

Black and Gold Vice-President Jim Schultz admitted that his group not only had not evaluated itself during the last five months, but had not even met, that it was $44.50 in debt and still had not reimbursed those freshmen whose clothing was ruined last fall, that its officers were thoroughly dormant, and its one abortive and ill-publicized attempt to sponsor an activity had failed.

More accurately, the entire organization failed—it failed to justify its continued existence at Colorado College. The Executive Council failed as well when it refused to take the action clearly in order to revoke Black and Gold's apparently non-existent constitution. — (Bonavich)

About the Bitch

To the Editor:

The  has set itself on a pedestal and put itself in the position of a 'know it all.' However, has it ever analyzed itself? The  always has something to say about what is wrong, but how many times has it offered a solution to the problem? Everyone knows that many problems exist, and most students on campus are doing their best to solve them, but the  never does more than criticize. If the  were not anonymous, which is the only reason it is so popular, maybe the energetic staff could put their wasted criticism to better advantage and help solve some of the school's problems.

It's awfully easy to criticize, ; anyone can do that. But to tear something apart and suggest a truly better way to improve it is altogether different. This seems to have escaped you completely. You are accomplishing nothing in that two-page monstrosity except running down, griping about, and criticizing the honest attempts of a few students to do their job the best way they know how.

To the Editors:

Permit me to stick my neck out by saying that I like "The Weakly Bitch." Contrary to Connie Cooper's opinion (Feb. 21), I do not find "The Bitch" (as I will familiarly refer to it) negative and bitter, but humorous and penetrating. "The Bitch" contains good satire directed at the college in particular and our society in general, exposing their follies. With all respect for my friend Connie Cooper, I think she is wrong in her criticism.

In refutation of an argument for

"The Bitch," Connie used the term "hogwash." I quite agree with her and would like to use the term to describe my reaction to "The Bitch."

"The Bitch" is hogwash. But what is the nature of hogwash? Hogwash cleans hogs! Hogs have the filthy habits of wallowing in mud and garbage. By doing so they become encrusted with layers of foul substance. Hogwash attacks the superficial crust, leaving the hog exposed and easier to endure having around.

Institutions of the college and society are like hogs in that they wallow in the mud of ill defined terms, and the garbage of misconceived notions. Thus, most institutions are encrusted with odoriferous follies. When institutions

Had a nice little chat last Sunday with a kind of special CC alumnus, Dr. Louis T. Benitez. He was in Aspen for some conference. (I was there to get away.) About Clarendon, he says he's got lots of things to do and lots of things to build, so he is quite content. Also he says, "hi," to all.

Most of the movies around this week are ones I've never heard of, so I can't be much help there. "Any Number Can Win" is at the Uie; "One Man's Way" is at the Chief through Tuesday, with "The Gun Hawk" (Rory Calhoun and Rod Cameron) starting Wednesday; Elia Kazan's "America, America" will play at the Peak until Tuesday, followed by "Dr. Strangelove" (Peter Sellers) which I strongly recommend, on Wednesday.

Sermon Title: "The Swindler"

In contrast to the false and rather sickening piety associated with his name, Jesus often tells stories which are very worldly and which seem quite shocking to the conventional mind.

He does this to 'stab the hearer's spirit broad awake' and to make him think deeply.

One such story concerns the business manager of a rich man.

This Sunday's sermon will attempt to examine this parable and make an attempt to apply it relevantly to our life today.

ASCC NOTES

At Monday's ASCC meeting, Jim Schultz was present to represent the Black and Gold so that the Council might evaluate Black and Gold's activities of this past year. As requested by the September 23, 1963 vote of the Council, Black and Gold was to have submitted ideas for its activities in order to justify itself as a campus organization. Jim Schultz stated that the Black and Gold officers had had no meeting since that time with the organization's members and had come up with no written statement of its purposes as an organization. Jim said that this was entirely the fault of the officers.

Ben Lyon moved that the ASCC take appropriate steps to remove Black and Gold from the campus as a mens' Pep organization.

Mr. Howard stated that Black and Gold's account was in the red some $44.50 and that some steps should be taken to pay this deficit. Paul also stated that the Black and Gold had not yet paid that cleaning bill that came as a result of last fall's hazing. Jim stated that he thought an assessment of the individual members would have to be taken to pay these bills.

are submitted to the wash of satire they emerge exposed and easier to live with just as the hogs do.

I am all for putting the Greek system through the wash, even though it has previously been examined. I am for putting the administration - student misunderstandings, residential college, the social code, and ROTC through the wash, even though no solutions are thus arrived at.

For those of us who find it difficult to always be intellectual, objective, and solution oriented, "The Bitch" comes as a welcomed relief. What would we do without our Mark Twain, Will Rogers, and Red Skelton? I think "The Bitch" is good, and healthy. It emulates the finest in eastern colleges; need I say more? — Jon Hetzel.

the lack of freshman social life first semester. The Freshman Coordinators responsible for freshman problems cannot be held responsible for this problem because Social Coordinating Committee forgot to appoint them.

Secondly, there are ASCC activities largely unknown to the student body which warrant continuation and further development. These include the beginning of a Junior Year Abroad program, The Colorado Collegiate Association which promises to bring exciting big-name entertainment—something sorely lacking on this campus, and perhaps even the inclusion of two students on the Admissions Committee for determining what sort of student body the students want.

Thirdly, the most important area of consideration must be the inclusion of significant issues in student government. It is in this area that communication with the student body and the administration is even possible, and it is in this area that ambiguity so confuses the function of ASCC. At present, perhaps the best way to illustrate what ASCC must do is the residential college issue. Insofar as this issue is concerned, the ASCC should act as a free-wheeling body capable of mustering support and information from all campus units and organizations. If ASCC would use its resources to discover what the students want, what the administration wants, what alternate solutions might be possible, and what other schools

By reexamining the capabilities of student government and presenting new programs, the following candidates seek election to ASCC offices: Paul Carson and Susan Caudill for president; Diane Cox and Bill Mrachek, vice-presidents; Cathy Grant and Jane Humphrey, secretary; and Mike Carter, Harry Cazzola, Jim Lucey and Paul Tatter for treasurer.

Susan Caudill and Paul Carson will present their platforms in an open assembly on Tuesday March 10 at 11 a. m. in Olin Hall. The other candidates will be introduced and will answer all questions directed to them.

On March 12, there will be a run-off election for the treasurer, voting being from 7 a. m. to 3 p. m. in Rastall have done, then at least ASCC as the governing body of the students of this campus could present to the administration and the students a clear conception of the issues.

Final voting will be on March 17, again from 7 a. m. to 3 p. m. in Rastall.

Even if the administration then decided to disregard student opinion presented in this responsible form, ASCC, supported by knowledge of the situation and by students, would be in a much better position to fight for its goals. It is highly unlikely that the sole purpose of the administration is to take away all of our fun. Yet if there is any room for authority and influence from the student body, this approach must be made first.

Paul Carson

It is my sincere desire that ASCC elections be more than a period of unrealistic promise-making and defeatist replies, that we emerge from election with a clear idea of what can be expected from ASCC, and with the new officers firmly committed to active, realistic programs.

Certainly the greatest challenge to all campus organizations is to improve social opportunities for our students, particularly in the first semester when no freshmen have access to cars. Our student government, ASCC, should lead and coordinate the efforts of all campus bodies to provide an adequate social program.

Rastall Center Board, Slocum Hall, AWS, Blue Key, the classes, and other bodies have all sponsored campus-wide functions. Yet there are many weekends in which nothing is offered to the majority of the students. This gap must be filled, either by Rastall Center Board or the ASCC Social Committee, which presently has no budget and sponsors no events. Rastall Center Board should take the job, given a substantial increase over its $2,000 budget. However, I plan to work for an ASCC social budget since RCB is limited by strong pressure to use campus facilities and already has a substantial drain on its manpower and imagination. Specific programs could include frequent off-campus FAC's and big name entertainment on campus.

A second important area of ASCC effort should be a continual fostering of student activities and campus debate, beginning with the student handbook and freshman orientation and continuing throughout the year. Student interest and participation should be encouraged by meeting issues in open committee meetings and in ASCC as much as possible, rather than in unpublicized discussions in the Committee on Undergraduate life and other committees.

One of the big issues this year has been college social policy. We should not only be concerned with social regulations, but also academic rules, library restrictions, and food service rules. I think certainly ASCC should work in these areas toward more mature rules and more self enforcement of these rules. However, we must realize that progress requires student acceptance of responsibility. Any liberalization of library policy is greatly hindered by the fact that the Student Conduct Committee year before last refused to really discipline a student who mutilated several library books. Also, student judicial bodies should be careful to accept responsibility for only those rules which students will enforce. For example, Student Conduct Committee should not have accepted responsibility for morality violations since some members were unwilling to judge fellow students.

There is great value in students governing their own conduct, but the rules must be reasonable. Further, a great majority of the student community must be willing to accept them, and there must be adequate machinery and willingness of leaders to enforce the rules.

TREASURER

Harry Cazzola

Postivism — New activity in student programs—Improved communication—Redefining of ASCC—System of economic protections—These are the things I stand for. A mood of intellectual rejection rather than an aggressive, energetic, and positive attitude has been prevalent among student organizations. This negative state of mind promotes not only inaction but also a passive, static, and most emphatically a dull society. For this reason as a member of student government I shall promote any organization which promises to enliven and revitalize the fiber of student life through student participation.

The possibilities are unlimited: The Experimental Theater, supported this year by the ASCC for the first time, was a success which to no one can deny. The new sports complex also opens new doors. Small group or all college skating and swimming socials or gatherings loom in the horizon. The difficulties in finding places for study after 10 p.m. and also all social functions are becoming paramount. Positive action is needed!

What concerning financial policies? I propose the need for published bookkeeping. Class balances and expenditures are almost never presented to the students. It must be admitted that as a result much has been foolishly spent. The business managers of the Tiger and Nagget, the biggest spenders of

Paul Tatter

Were the ASCC to continue its inadequate function for another year the prospect would be so despaired that we drive any far-sighted candidate into hermit-like existence to reap at least the benefits of a private education. But I am a candidate in the attempt to avert the decline of student government into total ineffectiveness.

Everyone knows that the ASCC has not functioned according to its potential. Even the present members admit that. Ask them. But the object now is not to rage against past deficiencies. It is rather to use them as lessons for a reconstruction.

In particular I am concerned with finance, insofar as it affects most of the operations of the ASCC. Budgeting is done to facilitate policy. With this in mind I would advocate the following initiatives: an expansion of the college social program to include the bringing of well-known entertainment personalities to our campus when they are in the area, more frequent dances with better bands or combinations, an expanded film series to incorporate the new film society and Rastall films into weekly or bi-weekly showings, more extensive support for the experimental theater, sponsorship of several parties (Agathonian symposia) which would bring faculty and students together in an informal social atmosphere, an increase in the frequency and in the quality of guest lecturers, programs which make more use of the experience of foreign students, and perhaps an extensive discussion and lecture series presented by the faculty and qualified seniors of this college.

ASCC money ($3529, $7910) have not been required to give accurate monthly financial reports. I advocate that expenditures of these organizations be regularly submitted to the ASCC treasurer.

Most of these suggestions necessitate student funds, and therefore an increase or change of the ASCC budget. A direct means for this would be an increase in the $8.00 per student allotment from tuition. I have discussed this possibility with Vice President Broughton and it remains open. Another approach would be to efficiently coordinate the several campus organizations which could sponsor such activities. Thus one would call upon a progressive IFC, Pan-Hellenic, AWS, MRHA, and Rastall Board to cooperate in sharing responsibility for a unified program (involving a reevaluation of the present ASCC Social Coordinating Committee).

In the realm of the ASCC's assuming new roles, I consider most necessary the establishment of a close and permanent basis of discussion and cooperation with the college administration in matters of social life, college services, and academic programs.

VICE-PRESIDENT

Diane Cox

Often one tends to think that the office of Vice-President is relatively unimportant, and this is true in many organizations. Yet, here at Colorado College the role of vice president of ASCC is vital to the campus.

Besides presiding in the absence of the president, the vice president also takes on the duty of serving as chairman of the Social Coordinating Committee and as the parliamentary at all A.S.C.C. meetings.

In addition to scheduling the various social activities of the campus community throughout the year, the vice president has the opportunity to propose and carry out new ideas for social functions.

Moving along quickly to the role of parliamentary, I feel that the vice president's job here is an important one. It is of an advantage to all involved, especially in controversial issues, to have someone present to insure that the meetings are conducted in order and that decisions are made in accordance with the ASCC Constitution.

Having served as chairman of the Constitution Committee this year, I fully realize, and am willing to assume also, this aspect of the vice president's responsibility.

I shall strive to fulfill these various roles of the vice presidency to the best of my ability.

VICE-PRESIDENT

Bill Mrachek

To begin with there does not presently exist any all-college controversial issue which will be pertinent to this election; therefore, in many instances it will be difficult to distinguish candidates just by their platform.

All I desire to do is to present here three steps which I feel possess the capability of improving the present "status quo" of ASCC and also possess the potential of driving ASCC to the front of real student government.

First, the never-ending struggle of the student government and the administration has to be maintained. For it will be only through continued efforts of communication that the ASCC will be seen in the eyes of the administration as the central organization of the student body who are willing to take responsibility.

Secondly, a large portion of the activity of ASCC rests in its committee structure. In order to achieve maximum potential from these groups a closer unity between the ASCC Executive Council and each committee must be established.

Finally, there needs to be developed an "awareness" by the administration that students are sincerely interested in future college changes and that these same students can offer constructive suggestions.

'Smoking and Health' Arouses Controversy

By Susan Phillips

In recent weeks this campus' most heated debate has resulted from the Surgeon General's report Smoking and Health. Since at this time the report is practically unavailable, the debaters might like to know what the report is about.

June 7, 1962, Surgeon General

Luther L. Terry announced formation of the Surgeon General's Advisory Committee on Smoking and Health. He was led to do this because of new American studies in the field, because of the results of a recent study by the Royal College of Physicians of London, and because of "action of the Italian Government to forbid cigarette theadvertising; curtailed advertising of cigarettes by Britain's major tobacco companies on TV; and a similar decision on the part of the Danish tobacco industry."

Smoking and Health is a thorough, critical evaluation of recent studies by experts in a wide variety of fields. The report ranges from complicated mathematical formulae to pictures of diseased tissue obtained from heavy smokers. In addition it contains sociological and psychological studies of smokers. The report asserts that desire for nicotine constitutes one of the major reasons that smokers smoke. The reasons smokers give most often are "It stimulates me," or "It relaxes me," or "Inhaling smoke is a pleasant sensation," a phenomenon one scientist calls "pulmonary criticism."

However, the report is not all light. Death rates of cigarette smokers and non-smokers are first expressed in ratios. Then, to quote the report, "Expressed in percentage-form, this is equivalent to a statement that for coronary artery disease, the leading cause of death in this country, the death rate is 70 percent higher for cigarette smokers. For chronic bronchitis and emphysema, which are among the leading causes of severe disability, the death rate for cigarette smokers is 500 percent higher than for nonsmokers. For lung cancer, the most frequent site of cancer in men, the death rate is nearly 1,000 percent higher."

So much for statistics. Does smoking cause cancer? The report states, "Cigarette smoking is causally related to lung cancer in men; the magnitude of the effect of cigarette smoking far outweighs all other factors. The data for women, although less extensive, point in the same direction."

What about the widespread opinion that once a person starts smoking, preventing lung cancer is out of his hands? "The risk of developing lung cancer increases with duration of smoking and the number of cigarettes smoked per day, and is diminished by discontinuing smoking."

One other thing. Don't trade those cigarettes for a pipe. "The causal relationship of the smoking of pipes to the development of cancer of the lip appears to be established," says the report.

There you have it. Smoking causes lip and lung cancer and contributes greatly to having other kinds of cancer, bronchitis, and underlying habits. Besides breaking the smoking habit, what does the Committee recommend?

"On the basis of prolonged study and evaluation of many lines of converging evidence, the Committee makes the following judgment: 'Cigarette smoking is a health hazard of sufficient importance in the United States to warrant appropriate remedial action.'"

College German Group Presents 'Musikabend'

The Colorado College German Club will feature a "Musikabend," an evening of music at the Delta Gamma lodge on Thursday evening, March 12. Mr. Gerner of the music department will present recordings and discussion of contemporary German music. A group of German students will sing selections from the late middle ages. The evening will be concluded with group singing of German folk songs, whose popularity at many other German Club functions has been well established. Refreshments will be served. The meeting will begin at 7:30 and is open to all German Club members and their guests.

Time Assumes New Meaning For State Mental Patients

Time has an exaggerated meaning or no meaning at all to the patients at Colorado State Hospital in Pueblo.

The patients, who feel that every second creeps by endlessly, wait to be returned to their homes, futilely expecting a letter or a visitor.

They find absolutely nothing to do during their listless waking hours, for the only activities are watching T.V. or playing cards. The slow movement of the hands of the clock become a painful experience.

Opposed to this type of patient are those to whom time has no value and no definition. Dates are noted only in terms of warm or cold weather. (In warm weather the patient may often wander about the hospital grounds, but in cold weather he must stay inside.)

This type of patient, the chronically regressed, comprises about a fourth of the hospital's 2,000 inmates.

On the average these chronically regressed patients have been in a mental hospital for the past 22 years, spending 8 hours and 45 minutes of a 12 hour waking day sitting alone and staring into space or mutely watching those about them.

They are spoken to once every 7 days and they speak to someone else once every 12 days. These patients spend their days in silence. The meager staff is kept busy with the routine custodial duties, and most of the other patients in the ward are either in the same condition of withdrawal or are concerned with conversing only with the more active patients.

Therefore, no attention is paid to these silent ones. Although vast assortments of people are institutionalized at Pueblo, they all have the following in common. They feel, to a certain extent, that they are "community rejects." They exist in a crowded and regimented environment with up to 25 sleeping in rooms only as large as the ASCC room.

Although much could be said about the various abnormalities of the patients, they still have a very normal human need—that is the need for communication with others.

Part of the simplest and most effective treatment that a patient can receive is merely another person's recognition that he is an individual with ideas and feelings.

The shortage of staff is too severe and the incompatibility of patients too great to sufficiently meet this need. Therefore Colorado State Hospital welcomes people from the outside community to come and talk with the patients.

A few students from CC have made weekly trips to the hospital from 12:30 to 5:00. Additional interested people are needed and should contact Frieda Koster X236 and X313.

'Peace, Good Neighborliness, All Friendly Relations'

To demonstrate the falsehood of this assumption, she pointed out that India's present Moslem population of 47 million is the third largest in the world and that there are an additional 35 million Christians living apparently without friction in the midst of the Hindu majority.

The giant nation was, she insisted, founded purely "upon secular principles, and only India, among all the new nations of the world, has created a stable government, given security to its citizens, and has never swerved from the path of secularism."

Greek News

Last Saturday, the Sigma Chi and the Kappas infiltrated the honeybucket for a pre-season beer fest.

On Sunday the Thetas played water basketball with the D.G.'s. Afterwards a dinner was held in the D.G. House.

The traditional Phi Delta Theta basketball game will be held one week from Sunday. The Thetas are heavily favored to overwhelm the Phi Deltas as they last year.

The Phi Gam House is currently laying plans for their annual R.P. to be held with the Kappa Sigmas. The D.G.'s and the Phi Deltas will join forces this weekend to invade Winter Park for a few days of skiing and after-skiing.

Practice does make perfect. After a full semester and a half of working out, the Phi Deltas were able to get the team trophy in intramural wrestling.

Monday night, the Phi Deltas and Thetas had an after-meeting desert at the Phi Delta House.

Pinnings. The Alpha Phi House congratulates Lynn Miller who was recently married to Eric Kleinstein from Colorado State University.

Roscoe Welch of the Phi Gam House was recently pinned to Judy McCoy. Lee Muley, also Phi, became engaged to Pat Hoens.

Two candles were passed last Monday night in the Gamma Phi House. One for the pinning of Terri Lumley to Cadet 2nd classman Jerry Huff, and the other for Pat McClain's engagement to Cadet 1st classman Bob Thomas.

In the halls of Kappa Kappa Gamma, Linda Dunkin announced her engagement to Blake Ozias. The Kappas will also have a dinner this Sunday to be held in the local lodge in honor of their Denver Mother's Club.

Last Thursday evening, the Delta Gamma pledges were guests at a dinner given by the DG alumni. The Gamma Pits are completing their plans for their annual "Favorite professors" dinner to be held on March 10.

Exciting Band

But ROTC Does Sponsor

An Annual Military Ball

By Sgt. Spiller

Next Saturday night at the Broadmoor International Center the 17th annual Military Ball will be held.

Traditionally the most gala all-school event of the year, this year's ROTC cotillion promises to uphold the custom.

The dance will commence at 9 p.m. and terminate at 1:00 a.m.

All Colorado College ROTC cadets are encouraged to bring their dates and frolic to the music of the 179th Army Band.

The Band, whose last engagement was to play the Star Spangled Banner at President Truman's inauguration ceremonies, has since enlarged their repertoire and has been obtained specially for this festive occasion.

As a special added attraction, Cadet commanders John Simus and Charles E. Lawrence will engage in a duel to the death with cavalry sabers at intermission. This one you dare not miss!

To her, the Kashmir problem is an example of Pakistani aggression based upon an extension of this religious misconception, Pakistan assuming that Kashmir is has merely because 80% of its population is Moslem.

The proposed U.N. plebiscite has never occurred simply because the Moslem nation has never withdrawn its illegal troops, she maintained.

The Chinese border problem was also discussed, with great stress being laid upon the sincere Indian efforts to be friendly with the Communist regime, "to help China to feel it belonged to the world, and was not an outpost."

The aggression of Chinese troops took India by surprise, Mao's government behaving "so badly that it hurts us deeply," and Sino-Indian negotiations will be impossible until the occupied territories are evacuated.

India's position is "extraordinary," Madam Nehru noted, since her "friend Pakistan" has recently joined hands with Peking in a treaty of friendship, thus complicating the problem of India's 3,000-mile-long northern border.

The general mood of Indian foreign policy has been non-alignment, "a term which is, honestly somewhat confusing." The speaker pointed out this did not mean that India was Communist or Leftist, but that her dedication was simply to "peace, good neighborliness, all friendly relations, cooperation, international understanding."

Thus, aid has been accepted from many nations, among them the U.S. Of Communism, she said, although it may be fine for other countries, "We know that we do not like that system!"

Within India "Socialism" is merely a necessary term which must be used, as "Capitalism" and "Imperialism" have become so firmly connected in the minds of the people.

To most Indians it means simply the "good life." Actually, over 89 per cent of India's economic output is in the hands of private enterprise, with the government managing certain heavy industries and exercising some "balancing" controls on the economy.

Concluded Madam Nehru, "I am proud as an Indian to say . . . we have stuck to a pattern of life we have accepted for ourselves and in which we believe."

NOTICE

A course in Senior Life-Saving will be offered for those interested in obtaining or renewing their Senior Life-Saving certificates for summer jobs. The course will be offered from 3 p.m. to 4:30 p.m. on Tuesdays and Thursdays and is open to both men and women. Enrollment with Mr. Lear at the swimming pool will be on the 10th of March at 3 p.m.

Pianist, David Burge To Give A Concert

Three Colorado musicians will be featured in a concert at Colorado College March 8.

The concert, open to the public without charge, will be at 8 p.m. in Perkins Hall on the college campus.

The performers include David Burge, nationally acclaimed pianist and composer, who now is on the faculty at Colorado University; Dennis Riley, music critic for the Rocky Mountain News; and George Crumb, also of the Colorado University faculty.

They will perform works by Aaron Copland, Salvatore Martirano, Vincent Persichetti, George Rochberg, and Burge's Second Piano Sonata, composed in 1958.

Short explanations of the style and composing techniques of the composers will be given by Burge prior to the performance of each work.

Dr. Max Lanuer, professor and chairman of the music department at Colorado College, noted that Burge is one of the foremost in-

Elder Speaks on Job Opportunity In Government

On Thursday, March 12, Walter E. Elder, regional director of the US Civil Service Commission for the Denver Region, will speak on "Job Opportunities in Government."

This talk, which will also include comments by Miss Roberts and Mrs. Fletcher, is the second in a series of lectures sponsored by Cap and Gown to help students investigate employment opportunities.

Nancy Parker, president of Cap and Gown, explained that this particular talk is especially intended to acquaint language political science, and history majors with little known job opportunities in their fields, as well as to provide information on government work. All interested students should be in the WES room at 4:00 on Thursday.

Today is the DEADLINE for the KINKINKINK. Materials may be turned in at the Rastall desk. Any question may be directed to Lynda Spiekard X295.

CC to Sponsor 'Bridge School'

Beginning March 19, Colorado College will sponsor a new activity at Rastall Center.

An eight-week "Bridge School" for students and any other interested persons will be offered by J. E. Wendt and Mrs. W. M. Godfrey.

This non-credit course will be limited to 10 tables to insure for each participant the optimum learning situation.

The $12 fee includes the cost of instruction for the series of eight lessons and the mimeographed lesson sheets.

It is hoped that the series may be continued in the fall on the tentative schedule which follows:

Beginning bridge technique, 10 weeks; advanced bridge technique, 10 weeks; duplicate bridge technique, 10 weeks.

If interested in additional information or in registration, call J. E. Wendt, 634-1708, or Mrs. W. M. Godfrey, 634-4675. Registration will close March 12.

'Real Issues' Have Been Lacking in Past ASCC Elections

By Terry Winograd

Student government is under fire again, as it is every year at election time. For the only time all year, students are forced to notice that the ASCC exists, and they are sometimes dubious of what they see. The cry for "real issues" will begin and, if the candidates follow the precedent, will be ignored.

Actually, ASCC elections are not an old tradition at CC.

Until 1957, the officers were selected by the council members in private meeting.

Under the constitutional revision that year, elections were opened to the public, and the first campaign found four candidates vying for votes.

The TIGER did not mention any pre-election platforms, so the only record of what the candidates stood for is the victory statement of the president:

"I want a student government that will provide us with a good, clean, wholesome, and full college life that will lead us along the path of achievement, prosperity, and happiness in later life."

Giving their mandate to this radical proposal were almost half of the students, as a grand total of 80% filled out ballots.

The following year, the battle lines formed in the same direction, with one candidate openly advocating unity, one endorsing the idea that student government helped students learn about democracy, a third calling for more student representation.

One brave soul advocated doing away with required meetings and suspending Saturday classes. For this flippancy, he was punished by being given only half the number of votes that the winner received with his policy of "steadiness and stability."

The TIGER endorsed this, saying, "Student government is a tedious business and it is quite often dull. It needs a level-headed top man." After his victory, the victorious president promised the voters to put his top efforts to revising the constitution.

The year 1959 found student government at a low ebb, as only one candidate filed for the office of president. An assembly was called to berate student apathy, but due to apathy, only sixty persons attended.

By extending the deadline, ASCC managed to find another candidate, who was supported by the TIGER. She proceeded to win, becoming the first woman president of CC, and promising to increase student participation in ASCC. This was obviously needed as only 41% of the student body even bothered to vote.

This record was surpassed in the following election, as the lack of issues brought a resounding 40% of the voters to the polls.

After these dark days, a brave new plan brought an upsurge in participation. The voting methods were changed in 1961, making it more convenient to ballot, and observers credited this, rather than the few non-opposing issues brought out by the candidates, as the main factor in bringing the voting percentage up to two thirds.

The 1962 election was assailed by the TIGER as containing no issues, but again two thirds of the voters turned out to give Max Powers a wide margin of victory. It was suggested that the campus should develop political parties, which could add fervor to the elections.

This wish was somewhat fulfilled in an undesired way in last year's election, as a Greek-Non-Greek orientation began to appear. However, the only major clash of opinion occurred at a campaign assembly attended by fewer than 60 people, at which two members of the audience began a heated debate.

One expressed "disgust at the consistent failure of student leaders to take 'real stands' on important issues." The TIGER reported that there was no real conflict in the ideas of the candidates, and that the campaign itself was the basis for the election of Harris

Sherman.

The voting percentage fell back to 56%, even though some expected a larger turnout along partisan (Greek-Non-Greek) lines.

This year, even that cannot be a factor for interest, as all of the presidential candidates belong to fraternal organizations. Up to this point, there is no reason to expect participation to be any stronger than before, and no real reason to see why it should be.

Trophies to Be Awarded at MRHA Dinner Dance

Two months' planning will be rewarded Saturday when the Men's Residence Hall Association presents its annual Awards-Dinner Dance.

While being the major MRHA special event of the year, it is primarily intended to honor those students or housing units which have been outstanding scholastically or in intramurals.

This year the Most Outstanding Scholastic Housing Unit trophy and the Most Outstanding Intramural Housing Unit trophy go to Loveland House, which is beyond a doubt one of the most enthusiastic groups on campus.

The Most Outstanding Scholastic Wing trophy goes to Dwight Kramer's first south wing, while the Most Outstanding Intramural Wing trophy goes to Steve Cross' third south wing.

The most coveted award goes to Bob Heiny's second west wing, which has demonstrated overall ability scholastically and athletically. To second west goes the Most Outstanding Wing trophy.

Nugget Needs Editor, Business Manager

Once again the positions of Editor and Business Manager of the NUGGET are being made available to the students of Colorado College.

The Editor of the yearbook is responsible for the publication of the annual and all work connected with its contents. Experience for this job should include work on a similar publication in high school or college and preferably on the CC yearbook. A stipend of $175 is given for each semester.

As the financial director of the NUGGET, the Business Manager is responsible for the budget and all other monetary matters. Some accounting experience is helpful for this position, which has a stipend of $100 per semester.

Applications for both of these positions will be available at Rastall Desk. Please pick one up if you are interested, fill it out, and return it to the Publications Board box at the desk.

After the deadline for receiving applications, March 13, the Publications Board will interview each applicant separately for the position and you will be notified of your acceptance or rejection shortly thereafter.

Please refer any questions to Ben Lyon, Chairman of Publications Board.

'Puck Race' Event Will Be Included in 1964 Winter Games

The 1964 Winter Games promise to highlight the ice skating season with a highly competitive and unfilled weekend beginning March 12.

There will be mens' and womens' divisions in the one-fourth, one-half and mile races, one-half mile relay (two men/women teams), one mile relay (four men/women teams), obstacle course and slalom race.

Special barrel jumping and "Put the puck in the net" contests will be for men only. A special "puck race" will be an individual event for women only.

Awards will be given by the 1964 Winter Games Committee recognizing up to the first three places in most events.

Interested students may register at the Rastall Center desk and questions may be directed to either Mr. Frasca or Mr. Oden. There will be no entry fee.

Four Solos Highlight Spanish Hootenanny

The uninhibited melodies and subtle rhythms of Spanish music floated through the air of the W.E.S. room Friday night. The cause of such a flow of melody was the Spanish Hootenanny, sponsored by the Circulo Cultural Hispanico, an organization whose membership is open to interested students and townspeople.

Solos by Fred Whitlock, Gary Ziegler, Genevieve Vaughn, and Dr. Hector Rodriguez interspersed periods of gay group singing for which guitar accompaniment was provided by Dave Tarbox, Gary Ziegler and Fred Whitlock.

The four soloists chose songs of widely different character—from the quiet Mexican love songs performed by Dr. Rodriguez, to the wild and rather risqué "Copias" sung by Gary Ziegler, to the sensual love song from the Spanish province of Montana chosen by Genevieve Vaughn, to the Cha-cha-cha "Me lo digas Adela" sung at its most Cuban by Fred Whitlock.

Future activities of the Spanish Club include a talk on Mexican archeology by Dr. John Rice in March and a Fiesta Primavera in March.

Literary Comment

The central action is based on a time-worn joke, too, Kate is the curst wife of medieval fabliaux. One curses such a shrew by homeopathy: be shrewish to her.

The whole farcical drama is as tried and true as were the routines of Willie Howard or Bobby Clarke. Nevertheless, the play has always been a favorite with audiences because of its lively, though rather simple-minded, prat-fall humor.

Pucksters Needed Victories to Make Playoffs

The CC pucksters ventured to Lansing, Michigan, Friday, February 28, and reported back to Colorado Springs with what Marx would have called a mediocre petty Bourgeois effort over the Spartans if he had been a hockey fan, as I'm sure some recent visitors in Innsbruck, Austria, would have us believe.

The best game was exciting in that CC was behind 4-1 at the sound of the buzzing ending the second period, with Comrade John Simus being the only Tiger to reach his production quota of one goal which gave him 20 for the season.

But during the final period the true proletarian revolution took place when Fordyce, McAlpine, Ebert scored goals with Ebert being awarded the position of power station manager when he took the shot that Jeff Sauer was able to tip in for the final goal and people's victory.

The Tigers did have one rough break when hustler Glenn Blum-mer injured his shoulder from a mishap in the Denver game and thus forced coach Bob Johnson to utilize only two lines during most of the night.

The Spartans cellar dweller had only two true warmongers in Carl Lackey and Doug Roberts both of whom got two goals, the latter getting both in the first period to make the score 3-1.

Saturday, CC had a 4-2 lead in the final period but as the State withered away so did the lead and almost any hope when the Spartans went ahead 5-4 with 20 minutes left.

Dave Peterson, who looked as if he had been scared witless by the NKVD, did manage to put in the tying score at 18:46 with no one showing much zip in the final overtime period.

No one on the CC squad was able to duplicate his efforts despite this age of technology with Fordyce, Sauer, Hansen, Simus and Peterson wedding the nets.

If the Tigers looked like petty exploiting capitalists as a whole, the defense looked like a bunch of feudal garbage collectors when they allowed 56 shots on Warwick in the second game, 49 of which came before the overtime.

CC defensesmen spent 14 minutes in the penalty box with one player who might be getting ready for Siberia getting 8 minutes all by his lonesome for two hooking, one holding and one interference penalty.

If CC is to make the playoffs it must win both of its games against Michigan Tech and to do it the defensesmen are going to have to get fewer stupid penalties, skate and check better and stop looking so spastic that they resemble brokers on the stock exchange who fly off their feet when stock prices rise as when hockey pucks fly.

The Tiger defense is as apt to jump in the air as stop the puck. If the Tigers take both their games it is still necessary that Tech also be beaten by Denver and that North Dakota split with Minnesota so the Tigers can make the playoffs by pursuing a strategy of tertius gaudens.

The WCHA standings as of March 6 are as follows:

Michigan	10	2	0
Denver	6	2	1
Minnesota	9	5	0
Michigan Tech	8	6	0
North Dakota	4	7	1
Colo. College	4	10	1
Michigan State	1	10	1

Here's a Lot from POSSUM TROT

By Steve Sabol

Take a bear's gall bladder, a bottle of Yiddish cologne, an alligator's adenoids, the tail and heart of a gray mole, three hind toes from a green tree-squeak, a white rooster's eyes, and a dead man's shoes stuffed with feathers.

What are they? . . . Zoology lab leftovers? . . . No . . . A Rastall lunch? . . . possibly . . . Well, actually, the aforementioned items are just a few of the innumerable good luck charms that superstitious hockey coach Bob Johnson took with him to Michigan State.

Friday night coach Johnson's good luck trinkets were omnipotent as the Tigers rallied from a 4-1 deficit, with scores by Fordyce, McAlpine and Ebert, to push the contest into overtime.

Jeff Sauer tipped in the winning goal with 4 minutes gone by in the sudden death overtime to give CC its first hockey victory on the road in three years, 5-4.

Saturday night, with the full moon obscured by some low hanging clouds, Coach Johnson's witchery proved ineffective as the Tigers squandered a 4-2 advantage and were forced to settle for a 5-5 draw when neither team could score in the 10 minute overtime session.

Now with a 4-10-1 record in the WCHA, we have little chance of making the playoffs.

Basketball — The basketball squad is once again in the slumlight as they lost their 18th and 19th games to Doane College and Nebraska Wesleyan.

Despite Peter Susemihl's 20 points, Doane dropped the Tigers 88-80.

Tournament bound Nebraska Wesleyan, (21-4) fudged past CC in Saturday's competition. Shooting at a 47 clip in the first half, CC led Wesleyan 38-34 at intermission.

The second half was a different story, however, as the Tigers were so cold that they could have spit ice cubes.

Wesleyan was on range, though, and passed CC in the final minutes and went on to win 79-71. CC meets national ranked (10th) Colorado State College tonight and tomorrow afternoon at Cossitt in the season's finale.

Orchid of the week — to Phi Beta Kappa goalie Art Warwick for his noble play in front of the CC nets in the second game with Michigan State. A forest-born Demosthenes from Clodville, Canada, Warwick was credited with 58 saves against State.

Swimming — Coach Lear took 19 men to the Conference swimming championships at Greeley last Saturday, placed 16 in the finals, and tallied 89 points.

This creditable showing, however, was good enough for only third place as CSC and Mines took first and second. CC had one consolation, though, as Walker, Wolman, Davis and Lyman broke the conference record in the 400 yard freestyle relay. CC's relay team was clocked in 3:47 to shave 4 seconds off the previous conference standard.

President to Get Resolution Today

By Paul Tatter

This proposal was drafted by the Residential College Subcommittee of the ASCC after more than a month of study of the social policies in similar institutions, Pomona, Brandeis, Grinnell, etc.). Compared with a majority of the policies reviewed it is a conservative statement. The proposal was presented to the major student representative bodies for their endorsement, and the administration was informed of the proposal on Monday. Today Harris Sherman, Jean Torcum and Paul Tatter, representing the student body and the Residential College Committee will present the background and the arguments in favor of the policy to President Wornor, and discuss with him the means of its adoption. The results of this discussion will be presented at the ASCC meeting next Monday.

We, the members of the Colorado College student body, in consideration of the social problems inherent in a residential college, with regard for the need of private social association, in recognition of common social etiquette, and on the basis of precedent in similar institutions, do propose for the consideration and approval of the Administration:

Establishment of a visiting schedule in all men's residence halls where students will be allowed to have women guests in their rooms.

I. Regulations

A. This proposal will be enacted in September, 1964 on a one year experimental basis.

B. A man may entertain a woman guest in his room in the men's dormitories during the following hours: Saturdays—7:00 p.m. to 11:00 p.m.; Sundays—2:00 p.m. to 5:00 p.m.

C. Sign-in and sign-out procedures: Both the male student and his guest must sign a register in the main lounge of the residence hall indicating their names, the room, and the time. Upon leaving, the woman guest must sign out with her name and the time. Violations of hours will require a late-slip to be signed by the host.

D. The doors of all rooms with women visitors must be open.

II. Responsibilities

A. A student is on his honor to comply with all regulations, to assume responsibility for the conduct of his guests, and to respect the right of other male students to study and sleep, if they wish, during room permission hours.

B. The responsibilities of each men's dormitory are: To arrange for the dormitory to be neat and clean during and after each visiting period; to provide lavatory facilities for women guests and to mark them clearly.

C. In each residence hall, there will be an official whose responsibility will be to supervise the visiting procedures. This official will be selected by the President's Advisory Committee on Student Conduct with the approval of the President.

D. Violations of visiting rules will be treated on an individual basis; that is, those individuals who are responsible for a violation, and not the dormitory unit as a whole, will be penalized.

E. The adjudication of visiting hour violations will be under the direct jurisdiction of the Inter-Hall Council or the Inter-Fraternity Council, which will distinguish between major and minor infractions. They will deal with minor infrac-

Jaramillo, Sherman, Torcum and Hybl approve new doctrine

tions themselves and will refer major infractions to the President's Advisory Council on Student Conduct. The President's Advisory Committee will have final jurisdiction over all cases with the approval of the President.

F. Recommendations for amendments to this proposal will be made by the Student Policy Committee of the ASCC, with the endorsement of the Executive Council of the ASCC, and subject to approval by the President of the College.

It is our hope that this policy will be a successful approach to guaranteeing the students of Colorado College an element of free and responsible social action in accordance with the standard expectations of mature college students.

Arnest Art Exhibit Opens at Lehigh U.

An exhibit of 16 paintings by Bernard P. Arnest, professor of art at Colorado College in Colorado Springs, opened Sunday at Lehigh University in Bethlehem, Pa.

The paintings by Professor Arnest form half of a two-man show scheduled to hang at the university through March 28. Exhibiting with the Colorado College professor is Raymond Mintz.

Represented are paintings Professor Arnest has done over a period of years reaching back to World War II. Several of the paintings are the result of his three-month visit to Afghanistan during the summer of 1960.

A graduate of the Colorado Springs Fine Arts Center School of Art, Professor Arnest joined the faculty at Colorado College and the Fine Arts Center in 1957.

He previously taught at the Minneapolis School of Art and at the University of Minnesota. During World War II he was a painter with the army's historical section in Europe.

ACTORS IN REHEARSAL for the Colorado College Players' presentation of William Shakespeare's "The Taming of the Shrew," which is to be in Perkins Hall on March 19, 20, and 21.

CC Dance Performance Rated As Subtle Success

By Cindy Muntwyler

Last weekend Colorado College made another stab at campus culture with its Dance Theatre, this time rather successfully. Thursday, Friday and Saturday evenings at the Fine Arts Center were given over to the long-planned premiere of Norman Cornick's 1963-64 dance classes. What they gave us was far from classical ballet, but it was DANCE, the story told mutely through the movements of the body.

A Pas De Quatre to Handel's Water Music began the performance. Unfortunately, this particular aspect of the evening WAS a "performance," as the dancers were only too acutely aware. They, ironically the four most experienced in ballet, were not "feeling" the dance and so were not smooth. Their facial expressions were fixed and insincere; their arms were held consciously in their awkward places interminably.

Yet even as a "performance," it did not succeed. Often the dancers were not in unison; in general, the choreography was poor, which is in part explained by the fact that all three of the Theatre's chore-

Candidates Discuss Issues at Special Assembly

The two candidates for the ASCC presidency, Sue Caudill and Paul Carson, presented their views at a meeting last Tuesday in Olin Hall. The meeting became more of a debate than a speech-making session and things became lively before it was over.

Major ASCC-sponsored events should be considered in advance of formal planning (would we really want a spring homecoming as has been suggested by the alumni?). Freshman orientation should get careful and careful consideration too.

Mr. Carson spoke first. He discussed the committee structure of ASCC and stated that the president has a basic responsibility to see to good organization. He advocated holding regularly scheduled meetings of the committee chairmen before ASCC meetings in order that relevant issues might be brought up and so that at the regular meetings the president might give direction without speaking to a great extent.

To increase students' involvement in ASCC, Mr. Carson would promote open committee meetings with the policy that major issues should be discussed by the entire campus. Finally, Mr. Carson stated that he believes a president must spend time with students in various groups on campus. Student interest can be increased by more activity on the part of ASCC. Mr. Carson closed by saying that the basis of a good ASCC is competency and competent candidates

Administration Urged To Adopt Resolution

By Harris Sherman, Pres. of ASCC

The student body, through the unanimous endorsement of its main representative organizations (ASCC, AWS, IFC, and MRHA) and the strong support of the faculty, is asking for the establishment of a new social policy allowing men students to have women guests in their dormitory rooms. At 4 p.m. today, this heavily supported proposal will be submitted to President Worner and the Administration for their consideration and approval. The student body considers this plan a responsible and reasonable approach to the growing necessity of improving campus social policies and recognizing the realities of a residential college.

The endorsed proposal was formulated during the past two months by a special ASCC subcommittee. The committee made extensive evaluation of Colorado College social regulations in addition to thorough research of dormitory regulations of other colleges throughout the United States.

The proposal is designed to accentuate the student's need for a degree of privacy in a residential college while giving him the responsibility to act as a discreet, mature adult. This plan is conservative compared to dormitory policies of other schools. It calls for open doors, a one-year experimental basis, and adequate enforcement clauses.

The one-year experimental clause should give students a chance to prove the success of the plan and give the Administration a clear idea of how such an operation could work in a totally residential college.

The Administration is urged to adopt this proposal. Only in this way will students be given a minimum opportunity for free and responsible social action.

LETTERS to the EDITORS

To the Editors:

Lovelace House opened its Sunday Evening Forum to the candidates for president, and vice-president of ASCC this past week. And for one and one-half hours the Forum was bored by the pedantic ponderousness of Paul Carson, Sue Caudill, Bill Mracek, and Diane Cox. The candidates were first asked to give a statement of platform, and after this it was clear the only honest one was Diane Cox, who stated she had no platform. Without exception these four were unwilling to make an issue out of anything. The question arises in my mind as to whether there are any issues. The only fire in the entire evening was brought on by the Black and Gold platform. But this outbreak, ended shortly because the candidates all agreed that the problem was mis-handled. When asked for a little explicitness on how it should have been handled, no one seemed to be very clear on what had really happened.

It seems to me the topic is chiefly, as Sue Caudill pointed out, the residential college. But this topic, although it was tabled for a time, rolled off and hit the floor with a dull thud. Caudill wants to have smaller housing units and Carson wants some social improvements in the new dorms. Neither of these ideas seem to be any kind of acceptable solution at all and certain ydo not seem to be representative of what the students would like to see done. But Carson and Caudill agreed that it was a dead cause, because the administration had already decided what to do. Apparently everyone will be forced to live in a dormitory, and in my opinion there should be a candidate who is willing to fight the residential policy until it is changed or the students accept it.

The chief issue seemed to be coordinating the myriad committees to do their various jobs, so we the students, must make the big decision of who would be the ablest administrator. Quite frankly, I think that these committees have functioned quite well and I find it hard to raise issues over their malfunctions. But the candidates tell us it was all terribly inefficient.

If neither of them wants to be anything more than an administrator, then perhaps the presidency should be an appointed post. As it stands now, the only thing we could base our voting decision on would be the past achievements of the candidates in ASCC. But on the emphasis on this aspect has been neglected. The agreement of the candidates on most of the large issues not only deprives the students of the American joy of observing a well fought campaign, but also will end in making the reasons for voting one way or the other so murky that there will be hardly any reason to vote at all. As it stands, of course, any other student was willing to take a stand on the residential college, ROTC, etc., which was more than "well," it will always be open to discussion." He could certainly get my write-in vote. —Bill Weiss

From the Chair

By Terry Fouvile

It has come to the attention of the ASCC thru the Committee on Undergraduate Life and the faculty Library Committee that there is considerable abuse of library regulations by students. A CUL subcommittee has reported, as a result of conferences with the library staff, that the noise in the library makes it impossible to study in some areas. The chairman of the faculty Library Committee has echoed the above complaint and has added that the destruction and mutilation of books is still a problem, although book theft has been severely reduced due to the check system at the door.

The second floor atrium seems to be the major problem as far as the noise is concerned. If, in the future, the noise is not kept to a minimum, the full lounge and reading area of the atrium will not be made available. Also it has been noticed that students do not make proper use of the rooms. The two conference rooms and the three smoking-study rooms in the library were designed in order that groups of students would have priority, not individual students. Also there seems to be some confusion between the purpose of the smoking-study rooms and smoking lounges. The function of each type of room is clearly designated and should be observed.

If the destruction and mutilation of books continues, the library staff has no choice but to tighten library rules and controls. Many students have expressed a desire to have library hours extended. It is senseless to expect concessions in library policy if we do not exercise any responsibility under the present system.

ASCC Secretarial Platforms

By Cathy Grant

The potential for CC is great, and has been realized in some instances.

In general, the students are given the opportunity to work with, and contribute to every academic and administrative aspect of the campus.

Whenever students have worked in an organized and mature manner, doors have opened, and many things have been accomplished—such as the Rastal Center Board work or the Foreign Student Committee plans. And whenever the response is poor or indicates lack of judgment, the doors are closed—such as with Black and Gold or the Student Conduct Committee.

As a candidate for secretary there are several practical steps that can be taken in the area of more effective communications. Student interest can be aroused by publicity which is briefly presented, and disseminated through some of the present and some new channels.

Representatives from dorms and Greek organizations should be invited and reminded about ASCC meetings; minutes should be posted in Palmer, the Greek houses and the dorms.

Secondly, the agenda for ASCC meetings should be announced previous to the meetings. A third step which would actually improve the ASCC committee network would be in meeting with all secretaries of ASCC committees, and keeping a file of their minutes.

Such action would be a much needed check for inactivity of various committees.

In presenting this brief and specific platform at a time close to the election, it is hoped that it will illustrate my ideas in developing more effective communication by a greater extension of them to the student body.

By Jane Humphrey

After two weeks of waiting for a campaign issue to arise, I have decided to try to create one by making known my candidacy for secretary of ASCC.

The lack of clear campus issues which are worthy of being involved in does indicate a need for better communications. Basically there is the need for something to communicate, but once this is found, channels must be used through which things can be accomplished.

This is not through irate and sometimes illiterate letters to the TIGER, nor is it through inane (though seldom illiterate) articles written by TIGER staff.

Working through the ASCC is a more effective avenue than individual students going directly to the administration. Representing students is the function of ASCC and cannot be accomplished by merely talking about it.

Polls could be taken to sound out student opinion, and it would then be possible to go to the administration with something concrete to say.

This process must also be reversed with the ASCC talking to members of the administration and informing the student body of its ideas and plans.

Student-faculty-administration communications are essential for a student government, and the administration could not be unrepresented to a good representation of student opinion.

As for the technical demands of the office of secretary, I have served on Judicial Board, had a summer secretarial job, and can read and write.

This Weekend

Film Society to Screen 'Zorro'

Take One a hilarious success last week with Buster Keaton and his wood-burning engine, The General, against the Union Army and evaded the fate to win the heart of his sloe-eyed Southern treasure, the Colorado College Film Society is ready with Take Two this Saturday night, March 14.

Please note that the time and place have changed for this showing to 7:30 p.m. in the WEB Room of Rastal.

The flick this week is another silent, circa 1920, The Mark of Zorro, starring the greatest grinning swashbuckler of all time, Douglas Fairbanks, Sr.

The story, by Johnston McCullie, set in the Spanish California of the 1880's and directed by Fred (Ben Hur) Niblo, is one of the most exciting adventure stories to hit the silver screen (it was remade in 1940 with Tyrone Power and mangled recently by Walt Disney).

In the original, there are three villains: a sinister soldier of fortune, his wicked dictator-slog, and a vicious standing army of nasty cutthroats.

The hero and sole opposition to this bloody band is a daytime film, one Don Diego Vega, who sheds his wings by night (they are a disguise to hide his true identity) and dons the mask and sword of ZORRO, the first Robin Hood of the Old West.

Across the moonlit plains he slashes his famous Z's through not only fences and papers, but foreheads as well. This strikes terror into the hearts of the oppressors (of course).

But Diego has his tender moments too, and the dictator has a lovely niece . . .

Film Society members admitted by card; others 75¢ payable at the door. Membership is still open for $3.50 for the nine remaining films (still a bargain) and are obtainable at Rastal desk.

Madrigal Choir Sings Scarlatti Mass for First Time in U.S.

Colorado College's Madrigal Choir will sing a 250-year-old Scarlatti mass Sunday, March 15, that never has been performed in the United States.

It will be sung by the 14-voice choir, under the direction of Prof. Donald P. Jenkins, at 11 a.m. in Shovel Chapel.

Composed by Alessandro Scarlatti about 1710, the mass has never been sung since it was performed for Cardinal Ottoboni in Rome. It was composed on commission from the cardinal.

The manuscript of the mass was obtained from the Vatican Library by Prof. Albert Seay of the Colorado College music department.

Stop at CiCino's for Entertainment, Pizza

Tonight the CiCino comes alive again from 10:00 p.m. until 12:30 a.m. promising the best pizza in town, low lights, two shows, dancing and casual atmosphere—just stop in at your leisure.

The CiCino bows to the Military Ball Saturday night but will open again next Friday, March 20, for the regular two nights.

Luigi's pizza has met with such popularity at the CiCino that it will be on the menu every Sunday evening henceforth from 5:00-10:00 p.m.

Stop in and meet Luigi and watch him make your favorite pizza.

MILITARY BALL Queen Candidates Anita Gable, Leslie Ekhart, Riki Robbins, Kay Baker, Susan Freeland, and Judy Sessions.

Foreign Student Committee Elections

The Foreign Student Committee met on Tuesday, February 25th, at 8:15 p.m. Results from the recent election of officers were announced as follows: president, Cathy Grant; vice president, Ernest LeMelle; secretary, Alexa Watson; treasurer, Bill Greeley; publicity, Monica Beck.

The possibility of setting up an exchange program with the University of Göttingen in Germany was discussed. The exchange for the junior year would not be restricted to German majors.

The FSC plans to sponsor at least four foreign students next year. These students are: two boys from Japan and Pakistan pending normal repatriation, a Dutch boy under an exchange program with K.O.I.B., and the German student, either a boy or a girl.

The Dutch exchange student from CC for 1964-65 will be Glenn Clifford.

The committee hopes to increase the number of foreign students on campus. The success of the proposed German program will be an important factor in determining the extent and variety of new exchanges.

Those concerned with creating a more cosmopolitan atmosphere at CC are urged to contribute their ideas at the next meeting.

Membership on the committee is achieved through the attendance of three consecutive meetings which are scheduled every third Thursday at 4:15 p.m. All interested students are invited to meet in the WES Room, Rastall Center, on March 17th.

CC Anthropology Forum Forming

By Jonathan Hetzel

If you like talking about people, why not do it in a big way in the Anthropology Forum?

The kick-off meeting will be Sunday at 7:30 p.m. in Rastall, room 203. We need you to carry the ball!

The purpose of the forum is to make the best use of diverse student opinion and local resources. There is no doubt that an organized group at Colorado College can do a great deal in the area of anthropology.

Some of the many possibilities are discussions, lectures, films, and field trips to the Cheyenne Mountain Zoo, the catcombs of the Taylor Museum, and a yet undiscovered Indian site in South Park.

Attendees need not have knowledge of anthropology. The group feels that a full-session, or any other activity, will profit from a variety of points of view.

We hope to focus consideration on local and topical problems such as college attitudes, social values, and local history.

Please come this Sunday night at 7:30 in Rastall Room No. 203. The topic for discussion will be, "Should Anthropologists Rule the World?" We would like to hear your opinions. There will be free refreshments.

For further information contact Dan Martin, Warren Taylor, or Jon Hetzel.

Tryouts Scheduled For 'Dr. Faustus'

The Experimental Theatre has announced that its final production this year will be Christopher Marlowe's Dr. Faustus.

Tryouts will be held a week from this Sunday, March 22, from 2:30 to 4:00 in Perkins Hall.

The performance is tentatively set for Saturday afternoon, May 2 (Parents Weekend) in Shove Chapel.

All students and faculty who felt that they would have liked to have been in Volpone if they had known about it, are cordially invited to read.

For an actor and actress of imposing ego, the mute roles of Alexander the Great and Helen of Troy writhe up out of Hell!

Gamma Phi Offer Service with a Smile

Some good luck (purchasable for only 99c) will be available on Friday the 13th to anyone who has a dirty car and would like to see it well-cleaned.

The Gamma Phi Beta pledges are offering "99c service with a smile" from 1:00-4:00 p.m. at the Gulf station at Nevada & Cache La Poudre and invite anyone to test their efficiency and dedication to the cause.

If you accept the challenge, Black Friday can't be all bad!

RCB Coffee Hour

On Tuesday, March 17, Dr. Neale Reinitz will present a series of slides on "Cathedral and Coffee House in England, Finland, and Russia."

The presentation will be a part of Rastall Center Board's Coffee Hour.

Dr. Reinitz will attempt in the slide showing to reveal the face of history in these nations with the faces of the people in their everyday lives.

Carson Seeks Campus Unity

At recent convention, Paul Carson, candidate for ASCC President, receives enthusiastic endorsement of top political and business figures.

CC Dance Theatre Program at FAC Rated as Subtle Success

ographers were in this dance. It did not succeed as a performance, also because of the staging; the costuming was brilliant, though the colors were not always suited to the individual; and, though the silhouette lighting technique was an effective variation, frequently the breaks were TOO long between sections of music while the silhouetted dancers waited to begin. This not only was for a lack of continuity but was too deliberately a "show."

In the Affettuoso, Norman Cornick and James Frances danced rather unevenly, as the latter was notably unsteady and sometimes jerky. The seventh and last movement was danced to the Hompipe, a very brief piece of the Water Music suite. Perhaps it was too abrupt for conclusion of this Pas de Quatre, unless no continuity was intended (a grave injustice to Handel). It would better have been concluded to the Andante Espresso or the Allegro Deciso, which normally follow the Hompipe in the Water Music.

The second Pas de Quatre was an amazingly marked contrast to the first. It was very natural; for the first time we saw grace and flowing movements. In both Cynthia Morin's and Marietta Wilhelm's variations, the timing was excellent and the pirouettes professional. Terrie Reeves' was difficult and very well executed. The first part, with her very good arabesques, contrasted well with the second, which showed her skill in fast basics. Both were refreshing in their daintiness and joy; there was no pretentious smile.

In her variation, Judy May emerged as expertly skillful, dancing with silent slippers in the classical manner.

In Stars and Stripes we found the typical director's attempt to include everyone. It is not a classical ballet, though there are some classical steps; the dancers became too bound up in their theme, thereby destroying some of the dance's nature as a ballet.

In its Pas de Trois we saw the three youngest performers, enjoying their genuine happiness and natural, straightforward movements. Gary Masters was exceptionally good. In the Pas de Deux of Part Two, James Frances came into his own while dancing with Marietta Wilhelm.

In Part III, Norman Cornick and James Frances performed some excellent standing leaps. In the Pas de Deux of this same part, we saw the most classical dancing of the evening, by Norman Cornick and Judy May. It was very difficult, and on the whole quite good. Cornick's lifts in place were poor, but the lifts in actual dancing were excellent.

Terrie Reeves' variation was again excellent, particularly noteworthy in its fast pirouettes. In this variation and in the last dance, she proved that she deserves the bouquet, for this whole program; it seems that she best realized the value of the elongated body and fully raised arms. Stars and Stripes was especially well coordinated, as it had to be.

The last selection for the program, The Insomniacs, was not really ballet, but modern interpretive dance. It was perfectly costumed and coordinated. The overabundance of action on stage suggested that aspect of city-dwellers' lives; the occasional planned lack of coordination suggested that their existence was sometimes inharmonious. Trina Delaney was good as the head gangster, her actions symbolizing realistic gangster control of a city. The Beatnik's dancing conveyed well the combination of sensuousness and apathy. At the close, the conquered street-walker (Esther Geoffrey) is lying down facing the wrong direction, gets up and aligns herself with the other masked night people, clearly symbolizing by not fitting in herself that she did not fit, all of them did not fit into the Big City society—or the world.

Caudill and Carson grimace after Tuesday assembly.

Theology Professor Presents Lectures

One of the outstanding thoughtful theological speakers in the English speaking world, Dr. Joseph Sittler, will give three lectures in the coming week at CC.

Dr. Sittler, Professor of Theology in the University of Chicago will speak on "The Glory and the Obvious" from the sixtieth chapter of the prophet Isaiah, at the regular 11 a.m. Sunday service at Shove.

For Sunday evening's Religious Forum Dr. Sittler has chosen "Gerard Manley Hopkins, and the Poetic Effort to Specify Grace," as his theme. Light refreshments will be served.

The Tuesday lecture will also be given by Dr. Sittler, who will speak on the intriguing title of "The Counterpoint of Use and Enjoyment."

Dr. Sittler was one of the main speakers at the New Delhi Assembly of the World Council of Churches. He is a Lutheran Minister and is Professor of Theology at the University of Chicago specializing in Biblical Theology.

CC Faculty Members Receive Promotions

Fourteen faculty members at Colorado College have received promotions effective in September.

Promotions included four professors, eight associate professors, and two assistant professors. Last year nine faculty members received promotions.

Named full professor this year are Richard G. Beidleman of zoology, Darnell E. Rucker of philosophy, Fred A. Sondermann of political science, and Ray O. Werner of economics. All four moved up from the rank of associate professor.

New associate professors are Paul T. Bechtel of economics, Glenn E. Brooks of political science, Kenneth W. Burton of religion, Gilbert R. Johns of psychology, Paul Kutsche of sociology and anthropology, Robert M. Ormes of English, Elmer R. Peterson of French, and John P. Rudd of education.

Promoted from instructor to assistant professor were Miss Ellen C. Claydon of Spanish and Rudolph Gomez of political science.

Carson, Caudill Give Campaign Platforms

are needed and should be supported for later class elections.

Questions were permitted and Mr. Carson was questioned rather extensively about how he might promote more mature library rules with fewer checks and regulations and still avoid a tuition raise to pay for missing books.

On substantive areas of concern to many, Miss Caudill would advocate committee reports to ASOC and then an open meeting. She felt that the first step for more effective committees is coordination between the ASOC Executive Council and committees. Miss Caudill advocated that the president and vice-president of ASOC must see that each committee understands its function at the beginning of the year. Rather than a meeting before the regular meeting (which Miss Caudill regarded as superfluous), she said coordination between committees and the Executive Council should be stressed early in the year and then carried on throughout the year.

What is being done is being done too late and too ambiguously. Miss Caudill stated that the first step in such issues should be to find out exactly what the administration's policy is and why. Meetings with the faculty committees involved should be held and again asked why a certain policy is in effect. After fact-gathering, the ASOC can go to the administration with the facts.

Secondly, CC has an amazing super-structure of committees from judicial and financial to Mountain Club and social committees. "We are bottom-heavy with committees with really no accomplishment," Miss Caudill stated that ASOC needs to muster support among these various committees and groups on campus and thus, close the gap between an apathetic student body and an inefficient ASOC.

When an issue concerns all students ASOC has a responsibility to stand up and fight and secondly, ASOC should bridge gaps. Students will never entirely run the college but the administration is willing to listen because they have an interest in our education and secondly because they desire student cooperation and not martial law.

The candidates finally seemed to agree that they disagreed not on the general but in the specific. It was somewhat difficult at the end of the hour to know what the specific was and exactly how they disagreed.

Jr. Class Sponsors

The JCF, sponsored by the junior class, has been scheduled for Saturday, April 11, in the upper room of the Iron Springs Chateau in Manitou Springs. The all school party will run from 1:00 p.m. through 1 a.m.

Transportation by bus will be provided for anyone who wishes it. Everyone is urged to attend, as this party promises to be unforgettable. Featured at the JCF will be a myriad of CC talent. Folk-singing, mood music, and a dance band will comprise the entertainment. For refreshments, sandwiches and beer will be sold.

The admission price for this unique event is a nominal 50¢ per person. Tickets may be purchased at Rastall desk and from junior class members.

RECITAL OF CONTEMPORARY AMERICAN PIANO MUSIC GIVEN

By Anne Perry

A program of contemporary American piano music was performed by David Burge last Sunday afternoon in Perkins Hall.

A composer, as well as an interpreter of contemporary music, Mr. Burge is currently a member of the music faculty of the University of Colorado. He was assisted by Rodney Schmidt, violin, and Florence Gilbert, 'cello.

The performance was an excellent one, marred only by the quality of some of the music presented.

Burge is a fine pianist; his playing is distinguished by clarity and precision, and by a generally sensitive approach to the music.

On such a program it is the music itself rather than the performance which is important.

Mr. Burge was kind enough to give some brief comments about the music, explaining a little about the techniques employed by the composers. These verbal program notes were both helpful and interesting.

esting.

Mr. Burge performed works by Dennis Riley, Aaron Copland, George Crumb, Salvatore Martirano, Vincent Persichetti, George Rochberg, and a trio of his own works composed last year.

The music itself was varied to a degree that one might not have expected. This was due to the inclusion of the Copland Variations and the ninth piano sonata of Persichetti, both works being somewhat more traditional.

One is led to believe that the variety that is so necessary in a concert can be provided only by music from several periods, which not only makes the listening experience more pleasant, but also provides a better basis for judging both the music and the performing artist.

The next concert in the winter series will be the Colorado College Choir, in Shove Chapel at 4:00 p.m. on Sunday, April 12.

Students Given Chance with Rights Movement

This spring there will be an opportunity for all interested CC students to help further the civil rights movement here in Colorado Springs.

Two local organizations have expressed their willingness to work with college age students who would serve in a volunteer capacity on weekend projects in the community.

These are the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People and The Human Rights Action Committee.

Two important jobs must be accomplished. The NAACP is sponsoring a Voter Registration Drive to inform local Negroes of voting procedures for the coming national elections in November and to compile a list of those who will need transportation to local polling centers.

The Human Rights Action Committee plans to coordinate its project of gathering information about discriminatory practices in the Springs with the Registration Campaign.

Negroes will be asked to fill out forms describing where, how, and when such discrimination took place so that the Committee will have all the pertinent information in its files, which will greatly facilitate prompt legal action in the event of future problems of this nature.

Both projects can be aided greatly by a healthy turnout of college volunteers. Although the NAACP has not yet worked out all the mechanics of the registration drive, the director, Mr. Samuel Hunter, has expressed his desire to work with those students who can spare as much as a half day on certain weekends this spring.

Colorado College could play a valuable role in this area of community affairs and by its participation in these projects learn much indeed about one of the most pressing and serious problems on today's national scene.

Information about the dates, transportation, time involved will be made available as soon as possible. Please register your interest in participating with Michael Pleasants at 633-8524.

CC Icers End Good Season with Losses

The Colorado College Tigers wrapped up what many thought was a surprisingly good season with two heart-breaking but exciting games against Michigan Tech, which was on its annual Colorado Trek to play Denver and CC.

In the first game God seemed to bear some grudge against hustling and hard driving Tiger Squad and all American goalie Gary Baumann gave the appearance of being wrapped in a halo which repulsed some 38 shots at this wizard. Art Warwick, who was making his last appearance in the nets in this series with his amazing and familiar sprawls across the nets, put on almost as good a show had two shots out of 33 leak the first goal came in the first period when Dart managed to make the French Professor. The two teams played almost evenly with Tech getting a 13-12 shot advantage.

The second period was again a stand off and in the final period the Tigers won the battle but lost the war outshooting the Huskies 3-5 when Hill, another All-American, made the score two to nothing to end the night's action.

On Saturday, after Tech had gaily a series with Denver, the game was entirely different with both teams scoring often.

The Tigers still had a chance to take a spot in the playoffs due to Minnesota's withdrawal from same and the Gopher's 3-1 upset victory over North Dakota.

The Tigers had an 8-5 lead with 12 minutes to go by a goal by Baumann and two more by Norm Wimmer put the game into overtime.

Fred Dart ended the game 3 minutes later when he put one in from the direct mouth of the cage.

The Tiger crowd was pleased by the Bengal's efforts when they heard that the inspirational John Simus had an attack of the measles and regular defenseman Ken Hanson had the same affliction.

The game was exciting even before it started when one member of the Tiger band, known for his partisan action but preferring to remain anonymous, was picked off by a car entering the World Arena with symbols and drums flying to make the guestiest Jax and the raucous mess of the band that spectators were to see or hear all night.

The partisan, whose motto is "Never say die," showed his Tiger teeth and went on to play in the band before checking in the hospital for X-rays which were negative.

Dave Hill sparked Tech to a 12 lead with two of the three goals he was to get Saturday. However at 8:27 of the second period the score was tied up and 11 minutes later Sophomores, Edert and Palm, had the score racked up to 6-4.

Palm had scored previously in the first period following Roger Sinton's slap shot score that opened the night's adventure for CC. McAlpine and Fordyce followed Palm to end the second period tallies.

In the third period, Dave Peterson and Bob Otto scored on McVittie, who had taken over to rest Baumann for the evening. Warwick ended the season with a fine performance making 41 saves and McVittie making 37.

Last year's WCHA coach of the year, Tony Frasca, led his Fraternity All-Stars team to an undefeated season as they tromped the Air Force Academy for a second time, 6-4, a dubious achievement.

Again the Tigers were out hustled throughout the game, as Roscoe Welch gave the appearance of having a tape affixed to his skate blades. But it helps to know how to skate and check, as the cadets readily learned.

The Tigers jumped to a 2-0 lead on Red dogging Raja Williams' blue line slapper which neither the goalie nor Raja saw. Hern Whiton followed with his change of pace shot that dribbled in three minutes after the goalie had made his save.

Rolf Heblor who played an outstanding game out-foxed the Air Force goalie with his shot from behind the cage which was neatly cleared into the cage. At this point the Air Force thought it wise to change goalies and drum the former out of the corps.

After the Air Force got on the serving column, Tudor Marks, the marvelous wanderer scored, and Rolf Heblor put his second one in shortly thereafter. At this point a Tiger defenseman lost his pants, SCENE FROM EXCITING MATCH last week . . . CC loses in overtime.

and a cadet swung around him and scored.

With the score, 5-4, and seconds left, Dave Simmonson who had been haunting the Air Force goalie all evening, finally took advantage of no goalie at all and shot the puck the entire length of the ice to insure the Tiger victory.

The next evening, the Slooam All-Star squad met a fast shaking group from CU, and without the services of Tony Frasca lost in a sudden death overtime, a 5-4 game which would have put any roller derby to shame.

The Slooam group scored first on Nick Hare's edition of a slap shot which looked more like a lethal duck killer until it dropped 30 feet and fell in the corner of the cage.

CU then scored three times in succession, and looked as if they could not be stopped.

Steve Sprague, however, decided to challenge, and after taking four quick jabs in the face which left his teeth in a somewhat disarranged manner, he flattered his opponent with a hard right. In the future, he plans to hang on to his stick.

Late in the third period, CU scored again, and seemingly ended the game, but Nick Hare and Skip Hamilton joined for three goals with Hamilton neatly stuffing the puck past the CU goalie on his breakaway for his second goal.

An overtime followed, and CU scored quickly to take the game. However, a return match is planned for 5 p. m. this Saturday and during this period the Slooam gang has been taking advantage of Coach Frank Flood's boxing lessons.

● Bowling: Bill Evans, fanons for his 298 game, led the Zetas to a win in the fraternity bowling league with a high game of 223, and high series of 606. Close behind was a Sigma Chi, Mike Tralid, who nailed down second place honors with a 214 game, and 537 series. Third place went to the Kappa Sigs who amassed a total of 2,263 pins with the Fijis close behind cleaning off 2,200 pins. The Betas and Phi Deltas occupied fourth and fifth places.

Teaming up with four-eyes Evans were marvelous Marv Parliament, former prime minister of the Zetas, Jim "the mouth" Tolman, Sam Walker, better known for his efforts on the swimming team, and Tom Kaminski, whom we know nothing about, save a 507 series.

Coach Flood Optimistic About Track Team

A couple of days ago, we managed to separate Frank Flood from his snow shoveling duties on Washburn field, a job for which, he was clear to indicate, he was not getting paid.

After talking with him for a while, we realized that the snow had not dampened his optimism about his track team.

"We've got a well balanced team this year," he said, "and I expect to see some records broken."

To date the Tigers have competed in one triangular meet with Colorado Mines and Southern Colorado State, placing third. However, said Flood, "It was only a workout meet and we hadn't had much practice."

This weekend the Tigers will venture to Mines to participate in a Rocky Mountain Conference meet, where the Tigers should be able to take second behind the Oregongers, who have an indoor track, and have been practicing most of the winter.

The Tigers should be strong in the mile, two mile, high jump, hurdles, the 880 and the 440. Save for the discus, where Craig Welch has improved greatly, the team is an unknown quantity in the remaining events.

Tony McGinnis was the conference champion in both the mile and two mile events last year, defeated only once throughout the season. He should repeat his performance of last year and, with improvement, easily better the CC mile mark.

Ed Loosli should be the Tiger threat in the high jump. Ineligible for competition last year, he jumped six feet two inches as a sophomore, a near record leap. But lack of practice might have made him stale, only time will tell.

He and Norm Liden should also place well in the hurdles, though Liden can run almost any race on the track and win.

While the Tigers boast of no record threats in the 880 and the 440, there are enough sub two minute men in the 880, and low 50 second competitors in the 440 to gain the valuable second and third place points.

The two mile relay team of Jay Shiedler, Bob Schuyler, Mike Durfee, and Bob Lindbergh should be the fastest in the conference, and should better the conference record in this event.

Always a steady competitor in the broad jump and the hop step and jump, an event which no one to this date has been able to explain to me, is Abi Afonja, whose equally difficult name suits the event perfectly.

On paper it looks as if the Tigers should place highly in the conference standings, but practices have been limited thus far, and a lot will be expected of the freshmen.

It seems that Coach Flood's optimism has some facts behind it, but the interview was cut short by an offer to help clear off the track so we beat a hasty retreat to our den of iniquity in the bowels of Rastall Center.

Here's a Lot from POSSUM TROT

By Steve Sabol

In re-examining the past winter sporting segment of our school year, several noteworthy achievements emerge from an otherwise tolerable season.

And in view of the up and coming Academy Awards, I should like to recognize these exceptional accomplishments with awards of my own—The Possum Trot Plutizers.

The following is a list of the awards, the requisites necessary to win one, and the recipients.

The Golden Skate—to the most outstanding CC hockey player—John Simus.

The Iron Ring—to the most outstanding basketball player—Bob Heiny.

The Silver Flounder—to the most outstanding swimmer—Steve Wolman.

Cat-of-Nine-Tails—to the most outstanding winter team coach—Bob Johnson.

Comeback Award—Judson Alexander.

An autographed copy of the famous detective story, The Hound of the Baskin-Balls—to that member of the basketball squad whose social life least interferes with his performance on the court—Bill Pelz.

Long-Lipped Howler Medal With Bronx Bag Pipe Clusters—to that member of the student body who, through either audio-visual or verbal extremes, most fervently supports CC winter teams—Robert P. Halsband.

Phonos-Balonua Award — bestowed upon the most prominent bogus athlete on campus—to Rich Love who has now completed four years on a full ride hockey scholarship and never has experienced a second of varsity competition.

Leland Gregg Smith Plaque—conferred upon that athlete whose physiognomy is such that he deserves special recognition—Marvin Parliament.

Tissue Paper Shiek Trophy—to that athlete who has withstood social rejection and physical abuse with undaunted spirit—to Farrell Howell who has sustained two social setbacks and one severe thrashing in which Farrell was beaten to his knees.

Spitt Quick Catarrah Award—presented to a well-known breed on this campus (i.e. the spring football hero, the winter time 9.4 sprinter, and the summer hockey star) whose total contribution to Colorado College athletics consists of one afternoon: withdrawing equipment, one-half of one practice session, and thence the returning of said equipment accompanied by half-hearted mumblings of old knee injuries, discrimination, grades, ineligibility, multiple sclerosis and high blood pressure.

The following afternoon these quasi-athletes can be seen and heard in the Hub, lustily berating that cruel twist of fate which has brought an abrupt ending to what would have otherwise been a glorious career in athletics at CC. This year's recipients are—Jim Knopp, John Dunn, Pete Davis.

Film Society Will Present "Modern Times"

Last Saturday night in Perkins, while some of you were at the Military Ball, a small, discerning group (The Colorado College Film Society) watched Doug Fairbanks in his now famous role of Don "Have you seen this one?" Diego Zorro ("Justice for all"). Notwithstanding a strangely powerful updraft at the end and a heckler in the back, a dashing slashing good time was had by all.

Before the main attraction, there was a short by Charlie Chaplin entitled "A Dog's Life." This coming Tuesday, March 24, at 8 p.m. in Perkins, Chaplin takes the spotlight in his 1936 production, "Modern Times", and W. C. Fields' "The Barber Shop" will be the short.

By 1936, talkies were well established, but Modern Times is still largely silent and still has subtitles. Some of the actors speak, but Charlie doesn't. He sings one song, and the rest of the time relies on his characteristic pantomime. There will be music this time though, a score written by Chaplin himself, who plays violin, banjo, organ, uceintina, and several brass horns but can't read music.

In this film, Charlie starts out as a worker in a steel factory, screwing nuts on plates in an assembly line. When his boss subjects him to a test of a new eating machine, he goes wild and is sent off to prison.

Later sprung, he works in a shipyard, returns to the steel factory and finally ends up as a night watchman in a department store until he gets sent up again for winning in the wine department with three old buddies who happened to break in that night. Meanwhile, he has made the acquaintance of a Gamin (Paulette Goddard) who gets him a job as a singing waiter in the cabaret where she dances.

Miss Goddard, by the way, was Chaplin's "companion as well as his leading lady," as Time phrased it in 1936. She drove him around in her Rolls, got him to dress up occasionally and "modernized" his house by throwing out his collection of old scripts and broken records.

Anyway, things are OK for our hero and his girl until the Juvenile Court Officials come after her. At this point, they flee together down an endless road, and the film ends. On the technical side, it took Chaplin, using a sketchy script for the first time, only 148 days of shooting to complete Modern Times (City Lights, 1931, had taken him two years).

As before, he designed his own sets, cast the players, directed them by acting out each part, developed his own camera angles, cut each sequence, and did the score in the projection room, using a piano and a musical stenographer.

Needless to say there is NOT a cast of thousands, panoramic vision, or stereophonic sound, but Modern Times is monumental in its own right as the work of the "one acknowledged genius" (Time, Feb. 17, 1936) of the film industry.

Notice on Spring Vacation

Students are reminded that college rules provide that all students must attend the last session of each class, seminar, laboratory, etc., before and after spring vacation. Excuses may be granted only by the Dean of Men and Dean of Women.

In substance, this rule means that students may miss no academic sessions this year on Tuesday, March 26, Wednesday, March 25, (except those held after 5 p.m.), Thursday, April 9 or Friday, April 10.

Talk with Parents Urged

Action Deferred to Trustees On Visiting Hour Proposals

At a meeting with student representatives last Friday, President Womer outlined the procedure for discussion of and decision upon the visiting hour proposal. He explained that responsibility for such a major change in policy rested with the College's Board of Trustees.

During the next month parents will be polled for their opinions, and students are encouraged to discuss the matter with parents while home for the spring break.

Election Results

After a heated campaign for ASCC president Paul Carson Wednesday emerged as president-elect of the student body. In a record vote of 789 students also elected Bill Mrachek, vice-president; Cathy Grant, secretary and Paul Tatter, treasurer. Although four candidates ran for treasurer, Mr. Tatter won a majority on the first vote, eliminating the need for a runoff.

After being informed of his election, Paul Carson expressed gratitude as well as awareness of the heavy responsibilities he was undertaking. He stated that he was happy with the results of the other elections and expressed hope that the elections for class commissioners would provide officers of equal quality.

The count of votes was as follows:

President:
Paul Carson — 420
Susan Caudill — 354
Vice-President:
Bill Mrachek — 475
Diane Cox — 275
Secretary:
Cathy Grant — 440
Jane Humphrey — 316
Treasurer:
Paul Tatter — 400
Mike Carter — 203
Jim Lucey — 91
Harry Cazzola — 74

Flu Epidemic

Not Connected With CC Food

Robert Torrens, Food Service Manager at CC stated today that the epidemic stomach flu of last week was not connected with the meal served in Taylor-Bemis Dining Hall.

He pointed to the fact that all of the cooks ate the same food, and not one of them was sick. Mr. Brown of the Colorado Springs Health Department, which investigated the incident at Mr. Torrens' request stated, "I can't see any possibility of food poisoning."

He stated that the symptoms reported were not those of poisoning, which would have included violent illness and projectile vomiting. The illness reported sounds more like a type of airborne virus.

The administration will correspond with other schools that have such a visiting schedule for their reactions and comments on its operation. The Residential College Committee is to make a written statement of the need for and arrangement in favor of the proposal. All this—poll, reactions, statement—will be presented at the meeting of the Trustees, April 25. A decision will not be made at that time, but the Trustees will be asked to discuss it and make provisions for any further desired information.

Later, members of the Residential College Committee and a subcommittee of the Trustee Board will discuss questions unanswered at the April 25 meeting. Then at the meeting in the second week of June the final presentations will be made and a decision reached.

During the summer the student body will be notified of the decision by mail.

Seniors Must Pass Exams to Be Graduated

Seniors graduating in June are reminded that, for the first time, among the requirements for graduation will be the requirement that a senior must "pass" the Graduate Record Examination Tests.

The area tests are the tests given in the three areas: the social sciences, natural sciences and the humanities.

"Passing" the area tests will be interpreted as follows: the student must pass the test in the area of his major and must have a passing average on the tests in the other two areas combined.

If the grade in one of these two areas is a failure, the grade in the other area must be at least a D-minus. This requirement for graduation was adopted by the faculty in March, 1960, to be effective with students graduating in June, 1964.

Experience has shown that very few students who survive four years at Colorado College will fail to meet this requirement for graduation.

Tyree's Quasi-Shakespeare Production Lacks Bard's Touch

By Jan Carter

Last night saw the opening of William Warren's adaptation of The Taming of the Shrew. This version of Shakespeare's popular comedy was first produced in the early part of this century and was even intended for serious production. Lacking in quality, smoothness, and taste, Chief Tyree's production is a poor contribution to the Shakespearean Quasi-century celebration.

The play's six scenes are set within a framework of soap opera teasers, commercials, and semi-popular music. The oral introduction, which explains the position of "young Bill Shakespeare" in the world of theatre, could better have been placed, in written form, in the program. It was distracting and overly studied for cleverness. The first scene (sponsored by the Georgian Dragon Pub) offered the initial introduction to the principals. Hank Pool, complete with helmet, gave us a Petruccio seemed to speak his lines without knowing why. Jody Korum, as Kate, paced back and forth in a state of meaningless anger.

And, alas, the poor Music Master, Geoffrey Greco, had his foot nailed to the floor for the major portion of the scene.

The second scene, introduced by the melodic strains of "A Change in the Weather" and Yorkshire pudding brings more meaningless stage movement. It seems as though Chief Tyree chose to ignore the stage's "fourth wall" tradition of transparency and allows his actors to speak with their backs to the audience, and to upstage themselves and their fellow actors.

A point of wonder is the teaser before the third scene. The announcer asks if the audience thinks Kate and Petruccio will wed. They were wed in the previous scene!

It seems useless to discuss in detail the commercials for Fenshaw's Smoke Masks, Bradshaw's Stout ("Gets you here with lots of cheer"), MacDaugall's Fine Haggis, and the Pig and Whistle Pub, which, by the way, has just reclaimed its still from the Department of Revenue.

A tip of the hat to Miss Komor, Mr. Clay (Grumio), Miss Halton (Widow), and Mr. Burton (Bap-tista) who could be understood most of the time. A note, however should be inserted here. Most of the cast are totally inexperienced in regard to stage work. When this is the case the entire weight of the production rests upon the shoulders of the director. The quality of the production is not totally the responsibility of the actors. As the lights faded out to the tune of "Turkey in the Straw" it must be said that it is sad CC's contribution to the Quasi-century Celebration could not have been of a higher quality, a production worthy of a fine liberal arts college.

Colorado Schools Win In CC Speech Tournament

Avea schools dominated the final rounds in the annual Top-of-the-Nation debate tournament sponsored jointly by Colorado College and Adams State College. March 13 and 14 at CC. In the 11-state meet the United States Air Force Academy captured first place in the senior division of debate. Taking second place to the Academy was Denver University. Denver University also had the top team in the junior division, defeating Arizona University in the finals.

Texas Western State of El Paso was sweepstakes winner. Texas Western also boasted the champion in the oral interpretation event.

Taking home the trophy for first place in original oratory was Southern Colorado State in Pueblo, Colorado University was tops in extemporaneous speaking.

CC could not compete for awards in the tourney, but Dave Helms and Bob Knight served as fill-in team. Dave and Bob had a 4-1 record which would have qualified them for the quarter-finals.

The Class Commissioner Elections

The most important ASCC elections are still to come, and it is with them that the spirit and the structure of student government will be determined. Of the 15 voting members of the council, only three have been chosen. Too often the class commissioner elections have been considered by elections, a place to elect a pretty face or a nice guy, but not a place to debate issues and resolve school and class policy. It was this attitude that gave us our present incompetent ASCC, and which will give us the same mediocrity again if we do not actively seek to avoid it.

As these elections approach, it is up to us to vote for strong candidates who will forcefully speak out for school unity and strong student government, and who will direct and unify their classes. To do less is to re-play the aging record of banality and insipidity that is now CC. —Heckman

To the Editors:

Last year the students of Colorado College were informed that for the 1963-1964 school year board charges would be increased by $12.50 per semester. Most students greeted the proposed increase with resignation.

At the beginning of the fall semester a number of us who had, in the past, been accustomed to getting second servings of the meat dishes served at dinner, were informed that a new policy had been adopted. We were told that the college food service had decided to stress "quality rather than quantity" in the future.

Many students would be willing to argue that not only has the quantity of food served declined, but also the quality. Until a week ago, such arguments would have been difficult to support with facts. On Thursday, March 12, approximately 100 students contracted a minor illness, the symptoms of which were nausea, dizziness, and stomach cramps. The illness occurred in each case between the hours of 6 a.m. and 6 p.m. The illness was confined, oddly enough, to students who had eaten dinner in Bemis and Taylor dining rooms on March 11. I am not absolutely certain that the students were poisoned, but the evidence seems overwhelmingly to suggest it.

I learned recently that it is the policy of the food service to purchase milk that is old milk "for economy purposes." I have experienced sour milk in the Bemis dining room approximately half-a-dozen times in the last month. This is an appallingly bad batting average.

I do not believe that it is in the best interests of the Colorado College community for the food service to (1) poison students, or (2) serve sour milk. It is at best poor economy. The food service owes us a full explanation, printed in the Tiger, of the items I have cited.

Sincerely,

David L. Bitters

To the Editor:

Colorado College has again made a stab at evaluating "culture" in its article on the "subtle success" of the CC dance concert. Actually, I have no complaints about Miss Muntwyler's honest evaluation of the program, but I do feel that it was an unadmitted personal viewpoint (which I suppose is the prerogative of any "art critic"), and I felt that she was unwarranted in expecting a performance of pure, unadulterated classical ballet from New York Ballet Theatre, or something similar. Perhaps I am merely being a "temperamental dancer" inclined to be defensive about six weeks' hard labor slashed in a campus newspaper by a personal opinion, but I do feel that a number of considerations were neglected in the interests of pushing a "professional" opinion on a well-executed but unprofessional production.

First, I did not obtain from this article any opinion as to the general audience reaction to the production at hand. Did Miss Muntwyler enjoy the program or was she merely interested in the dissection and the public examination of the pieces? Any staged art is aimed at the enjoyment and/or stimulation of its viewers, and it is seldom intended to set the intellectual gears of rational selectivity to work. I am quite aware of tendencies among "cultured" audiences to demand "understanding" of the arts and to feel that one has to be an expert to appreciate anything. I feel that many times we reason and criticize ourselves out of enjoying anything.

I am quite aware that the Colorado College dance theatre is not a professional organization; its choreographer receives little material benefit for the time and effort spent on an outside production; the dancers from the college also lead an academic life; none of the performers has the time to be professional except through interest, dedication and sacrifice. I feel that for the time and resources available, this production was worth more than an analytical dissection of another Colorado College stab at culture.

I see no point in having every worthy effort on this campus destructively criticized on the basis of professional or pseudo-professional standards. This is a college campus composed of young and talented students and professors with capabilities for many fine things for the benefit and education of all. I know of many students in our midst with well-cultivated talent in numerous areas that have never had the desire to perform or share openly their interests and abilities. Why have they not shown themselves? Partly because the effort is not worth the enthusiasm or appreciation it presently receives. None of us are expected to be professional performers and neither do we expect other students to be professional critics. Everyone desires interest and intelligent opinions on work done, but some of us seem to suffer from a college idealism that expects perfection in all, and if something does not fit the standard, the entirety falls into a cynical rejection of the whole.

I feel that acknowledgments go to Mr. Cornick who staged, choreographed, and planned a two-hour dance program of high quality; credits go to dancers and behind-the-scenes workers who spent over a month on a program aimed at the enjoyment of an interested audience who might find pleasure in movement, choreography, ideas, and enthusiastic talent of all ages. Credit also goes to the individuals in the audience who appreciate the dance's dedication to movement and form and the excellent execution of these in many spots in the performance, not necessarily by one or two individuals but often-times by the group as a whole. I regret that Maria Tallchief, Ted Shawn, Martha Graham, George Balanchine, and Stravinsky were not the stars and initiators of the performance, but I am rather proud that Colorado College is gifted with a good deal of talented, enthusiastic, and dedicated individuals—Mr. Cornick as a prime example—and somewhere along the line they should be given more than intellectual acknowledgement for their efforts.

Sincerely,

Mary Emmanuel

The Village Idiot

By Caroline Creyke

"Captain Newman" starts today at the Cooper, and evidently somebody in the Universal echelons thinks it's good enough to merit inviting representatives from all of the Colorado College and university papers to a four-course luncheon at Denver's Brown Palace Hotel in honor of Newman's (Gregory Peck) nurse, Angie Dickson.

Before I left school for this shindig, I took a rather informal poll of our student body. Of the 10 or so polled, maybe two had heard of her. Talent, perhaps she has; a big name, she certainly hasn't.

And, since the only thanks Universal asks for feeding me (a welcome change) and giving me the opportunity to meet some of this state's other yellow journalists in publicity, I hereby grant them that and designate today as Spread - Angie - Dickson's - Name Around-Day.

I have been telling people since Monday morning that spring is really here to stay, and nobody believes me. But boy, I'll show 'em. I got proof—ta-ta—the Aircadia and the Vista View (I refuse to spell that right/wrong) opened this week. (And if anybody knows a cheerful song about March or April spring—besides "April Showers"—please sing it to me).

"Goliath and the Sins of Babylon," and "Sampson and the Slave Queen" play through the 24th at both of them.

From the 25th to the 27th, "A Gathering of Eagles" and "Whatever Happened to Baby Jane" will be at the Vista View, and "Sword in the Stone" and "Gigot" at the Aircadia. (If you're not going to be here then, the latter two will be run by the 8th Street tomorrow through Tuesday).

The Broadmoor will hold "America, America," and the Peak, "Dr. Strangelove," through the 27th. Then, after a week of "The Incredible Mr. Limpet," "Tom Jones" (don't miss it) will be at the Peak.

At the Chief for (at least) a week is Disney's "A Tiger Walks" and at the Ute, "Children of the Damned."

Visiting Theologian

Immediately after the Spring vacation Professor Daniel Jenkins will be visiting the Colorado College campus. Professor Jenkins will be here Thursday, April 9th, through Sunday, April 12th.

During this time he will give a public lecture on the Thursday evening, speak at a faculty luncheon, preach in the Chapel on Sunday morning and he will again speak that evening at a Religious Forum at 5:00 p.m.

Dr. Jenkins is the Chaplain and Professor of Theology at the University of Sussex, one of the new universities recently opened in Great Britain.

He is one of the most noted of contemporary theologians and is an influential social thinker. This will be his second visit to the Colorado College campus.

To the Editors:

Your critical review of the CC dance concert states "Colorado College makes stab at campus culture." It is very accurate in a very literal sense. Your review truly took a stab at the heart of every creative effort that went into that concert.

When you assign a critic to review a dance program, there are certain responsibilities both you and the critic must assume. After all, any person who sees a performance has very personal views of what he thinks dance should be. But what should the criteria for the expert be, the dance critic?

1st—You as editor are responsible to assign a person who understands dance, that is, not only all aspects of ballet, but modern dance as well.

2nd—This person must have some knowledge of choreography.

3rd—You are responsible to assign a person who has a sincere interest in dance as an art, one who is sincerely interested in seeing that this art grows at Colorado College. One would also feel that you are responsible to select a person who is not taken in by those little tricks of spectacle and pseudo-virtuosity the choreographer has to insert into a program in order to hold those laymen in the audience with little knowledge of dance.

The critical review in the Tiger evidences failure in all these areas. Destroyed or ignored were some of the most positive and artistic aspects of the dance presentation. Lauded out of proportion were others hardly deserving comment, or that were deliberately played for the laymen uneducated to dance. Petty errors and opening night tension were enlarged, while large positive areas of performance and choreography were criticized. Inability to differentiate balletic styles and an erroneous concept of seeing all ballet as necessarily classic, evidences a lack of background for the critic's job. The critic could not even see the choreography for Handel was a critical modern dance base with pre-classic stylization. She assumed it was ballet, again evidence of a lack of knowledge for the dance critic's job. The reference to "Insomniacs" as a modern

Students, Faculty to Play Major Role in Parents' Weekend

By Bill Greeley
Preparations are underway for the Seventh Annual Parents' Weekend April 30 through May 3. The festivities will begin Thursday afternoon with registration in Rastall Center Lounge; that evening the "C/Cino" will be held from 9:00 to 11:00 p.m.

On Friday, classes will be open to the parents, and that afternoon informal tours will be conducted through Tut Library and Olin Hall. Later, students will have an opportunity to show their parents another side of CC life at the PAC in the Hub.

Friday evening at 8:00 p.m. will be the highlight, for some, of the Parents' Weekend — the long prepared for Song Fest which will be followed by an informal reception in Slocum Hall.

Saturday, classes will be open again to the parents until 11:00 a.m. At this time in Shove Chapel, President Wornor will give his Welcoming Address entitled "Life on the Campus."

That afternoon the students will have another opportunity to take part in the Parents' Weekend program by competing in the Tournament of Cycles. Following the Tournament, there will be an Open House held in all the fraternities, sororities, and residence halls from 4:30 to 5:30 p.m.

The Annual Faculty-Parent-Student

dinner will be held in the Rastall Center Dining Room at 6:15 p.m. Later in the evening, everyone is invited to attend Jim Fox's Experimental Theater Play Production, Dr. Faustus, in Shove Chapel.

Early Sunday morning at 8:00 a.m., there will be a Chuck Wagon breakfast at the Garden of the God's Pavilion. Highlighting the breakfast will be a rock climbing demonstration by the Colorado College Mountain Club and a short talk by Dr. Beideman on the history of the Pikes Peak Region.

The Parents' Weekend Program will be formally concluded with a non-denominational church service in Shove Chapel.

This year's Parents' Weekend promises to be an exciting, fun-filled four days for both parents and students. The committee hopes that all students will urge their parents to come to CC for this weekend, for this is an excellent opportunity for parents to see our campus and the Pikes Peak Region, to visit classes, and to have a very enjoyable weekend.

However, it is necessary that all the students give some of their time to show our visitors as much of the campus life as they can.

Whether or not a student's parents may be present for this weekend, the committee hopes that it can count on 100% participation from both the student body and the faculty in order to make the Seventh Annual Parents' Weekend the most successful of all.

Let's take the initiative and turn out in full force for Parents' Weekend, April 30 through May 3. The chairman of Parents' Weekend is Bill Greeley; the members of his committee are: Songfest, Don Bradbury; Registration, Kathy Symms and Mary Bardone; Food Arrangements, Bill Mracek and Bill Thompson; Songfest Reception and Tours, Ellen Mels; Publicity and Publications, Patch Gnillella and Betsy Crockett; Correspondence, Mary Bardone and Betsy Crockett; President's Address and Church Service, Sharon Shackelford; Business Manager, Bob Ward.

Those students who may be interested in working on any of the above committees, please contact the respective committee chairman.

4th West Secedes

On March 12, 1964, the members of Slocum 4th West met to decide whether they should secede from the Men's Residence Halls Association. Every member of the wing voted for secession and 4th West immediately recalled its representative from the Council and abolished his position.

Forming what they modestly term the Provisional Government of Slocum Hall, members of the rebellious wing urged other residents of Slocum to join their efforts to dissolve the MRHA. Promising a withering away of their provisional government as soon as victory over the bourgeois General Council is achieved, Provisional Chairman John Gillespie claimed that the MRHA no longer represents the interests of Slocum residents.

The cause of the secession of fourth west, and the formation of the resultant provisional government lies in what one member of this group termed, lack of representative government on the part of the MRHA. This body, as seen through the eyes of fourth west, has outlived its own existence, and now exists merely as a collection agency for Slocum dues, obeyed only out of hazy memories of its long since forgotten intent.

OPINION

By Brad Scharf

Amidst the ASCC campaigning of recent weeks, the frequent outcries concerning the ineffectiveness of student government occasioned frequently the same responses. It is my intention to bring forth a new, constructive proposal which would basically affect the structure of ASCC.

The perennial lament about "communications problems" was again in flower. Student government remains ineffective so long as it is not truly representative, and its representative function is improperly fulfilled so long as the student body knows not what ASCC is doing. We cannot charge the council members with indifference or failure to discuss problems facing student government. The problem lies in that their discussions remain largely amongst themselves. Little opportunity is provided the average student to participate in ASCC affairs. He must struggle to decipher ASCC Notes or be content to read of the latest developments long after they have been developed.

The second response which came forth was somewhat new, to my ears at least. Student government is weak, it was said, because too many student leaders are too compromising, are not creative, dynamic and aggressive. Many, too, were simply too busy. It was refreshing to hear this opinion, so clearly vindicated by the majority of this year's council members, expressed by student leaders themselves.

But, unfortunately, no solution was proposed, and discussion never reached beyond a universal agreement that the situation should be improved. The purpose of this article is therefore to set forth a concrete proposal for a more dynamic and more responsible ASCC council.

It is my opinion that a modification of the council's structure should be considered. I would suggest that the voting membership of the council, exclusive of the President, be altered to include 1) the three ASCC executive officers, 2) the president of each class, 3) a special representative elected by each class, and 4) the senior officers of MRHA, AWS, IFC and Pan-Hellenic. Class officers would then be distinct from council representatives, and subordinate class officers would not hold council positions. The voting membership of the council would remain at fifteen.

Such a revision would have three distinct advantages. First, it would circumvent the situation of those leaders best suited to lead and organize class activities being ill-equipped, in time and character, to provide aggressive direction of ASCC committees and dynamic involvement in ASCC policy formation. The special council representative could be elected for the purpose of providing energetic leadership to the council, unrestricted by other obligations.

Secondly, the college's four main subdivisions of student government would be granted the council vote clearly justified by their constituencies. That the present ex-officio status of their presidents is unrealistic is evident when one considers that these organizations are much more viable than the four classes, presently allotted considerable representation. A more active role in ASCC for the presidents of AWS, MRHA, IFC and Pan-Hellenic would also facilitate badly needed coordination among these governing bodies.

Thirdly, this quasi-federal structure would introduce into ASCC the concept of responsible government. The council would then consist of four executive members-at-large, two "representatives" of each class (to what extent are they held truly responsible?), and genuine representatives from each of the four other governing bodies on campus. These last four members would be held responsible by their respective constituencies which have their own councils and representative systems for that very purpose. If our student body wants an effective and responsible governing council, it must provide some means for calling its actions into account.

It might be much to hope for a rapid, or even a partial, implementation of this proposal. But some consideration of the capabilities of class representatives and some adaptation of the principle of accountability of representative officials must come about before our student government will develop satisfactorily. This program is but a minimal step in that direction.

interpretive dance again shows she is very short on dance knowledge. Interpretive dance is spontaneous and improvisational; it is not set choreography.

Time and again cries have gone out on campus for truly creative efforts in the arts. Perhaps a first step might be in educating ourselves to recognize honest creativity when it does occur, even though we may not enjoy a particular work. A second step might be to find qualified people to review performances in order to help in such recognition. A third step might be to look within ourselves and ask whether we clamor for those things because we derive pleasure and meaning from the creative or whether a display of interest or rather pseudo-interest happens to be a handy tool to get one up the status ladder.

The arts do not benefit from the false, they grow only from the honest, from knowledge, and from those who have the elasticity to try to understand the new, even though it may not always be comfortable to do so.—Dance Department of Colo. College.

To the Editors:

Last Friday Miss Cindy Muntwyler made another stab at campus journalism with her review of the Colorado College Dance Theatre. In general, Miss Muntwyler's article was poor, which is in part explained by the fact that she wrote it. By being ignorant of her subject, she is ignorant of her subject. She is difficult; and not well executed.

Lodge Must Work to Take Advantage of N.H. Victory

By Jean Torcum

The New Hampshire primary is somewhat unique, first, for the simple reason that it is the earliest in the campaign year, and second because it permits a slate of candidates to be elected without any overt action on the part of the candidate. He may, as was the case in 1952 with Eisenhower, have his name entered on the ballot, or he may, as was the case last week with Mr. Lodge, not be on the ballot.

In any case it is rather unusual that a candidate who did not appear on the ballot and who has declared himself not a candidate for the Republican presidential nomination should nevertheless score a decisive victory over several declared contenders.

The reasons for this are several. First, it seems clear to many observers that the people of New Hampshire were in part expressing disapproval of the two front-runners, Rockefeller and Goldwater, some because they disapprove of the former's divorce and remarriage — which disapproval strikes me as ridiculous since it bears no real relevance to his qualification for President — and some because they wisely realized that the honorable Senator Goldwater is flourishing somewhere out in right field with very little probability of coming to rest with both feet on the ground.

Goldwater went into New Hampshire boasting a four-to-one advantage over his nearest rival and every time he presented his "conservative conservatism" he lost considerable numbers of votes. As a result Ambassador Lodge, from his vantage point in Saigon, and with the help of a highly organized and well-executed mailing campaign, totaled some 33,459 votes to 21,748 for Goldwater and 19,475 for Rockefeller.

We may draw several conclusions from this performance. First, Mr. Rockefeller has boasted that this is really more of a defeat for Goldwater than it is for him and essentially he is right. However, if he is to go very far in his bid for the nomination next July he will have to do considerably better than a poor third in the upcoming primary contests, particularly in California where to date he and Goldwater are the only entries.

In California Goldwater has the same advantages that Rockefeller was supposed to have had in New Hampshire, such as familiarity and ties with the locality.

Second, we must conclude that Mr. Lodge might become an important contender for the nomination. Not all the votes for him were negative. He too is a native of that area with a long tradition in New England politics. He is

Federal Job Tests Soon

The Federal Service Entrance Examination closes for receipt of applications on April 14, 1964, and will not re-open until September, 1964.

There are only two test dates open for the rest of this academic year—April 18 and May 16, 1964.

Persons who wish to take the April test must have applied for it by March 19, and those who wish to take the test may have until April 14 to apply.

The FSEE is open to all seniors or graduates, and gives a person a chance to see what opportunities are open to him in the Federal Service.

While the FSEE is open to all majors, individuals who have backgrounds, through study or work, in the biological sciences, business administration, accounting, economics, statistics, data processing, or public administration (political science) seem to have the best chances for employment with federal agencies in the States of Arizona, Colorado, New Mexico, Utah, and Wyoming.

You may pick up a copy of the Federal Service Entrance Examination announcement at your college placement office. The card which you use on the back page of the announcement.

not an unattractive candidate and as a matter of fact the Republican Party could do much worse in San Francisco next summer.

However, I would say that if he is to capitalize on this victory he would have to do some active campaigning and be wary of relying too heavily on the possibility of a draft. If either Goldwater or Rockefeller scores a strong victory in California in June, the convention could easily forget New Hampshire.

Finally, I would point out that the most heartening thing for me in the New Hampshire contest was the fact that Senator Goldwater was defeated. I am only sorry he did not run fourth or fifth. In the Senate he is fine; if there is a place for a Long and a Morse and a Neuberger in the Senate, then there is also a place for a Goldwater.

But if the Republican Party is going to present a realistic choice to the voters in November, it will not be with Goldwater on the ticket. Many people have said that if Goldwater were nominated it would give the American voter a real choice for the first time in a long time.

GREEK WEEK

Suzie Halton of the Alpha Phi house will be playing the Merry Widow in "The Taming of the Shrew." Molly King of KKG is also on the cast of the upcoming play.

Last Tuesday, the Gamma Phis held their annual favorite professor's dinner at the Swiss Chalet. Dr. Sondermann was the featured speaker for the event.

The Sigma Chi spring program of guest speakers was initiated last week. Dean and Mrs. Reid were dinner guests of the Sigma Chi last Monday, and afterwards Dean Reid spoke on future developments of Colorado College and the fraternity role in this program. This week Dr. Stabler spoke on everything from falconry to the apathetic ways of the current generation.

Monday night, the DG's were guests at the Alpha Phi House for refreshments and a debate. The Alpha Phis took the affirmative on Resolved: The U.S. should adopt the British Educational System, and the DG's took the negative. The judges were Dr. Reinitz, Dr. Shaw, and Miss Saunders, and the victory went to Delta Gamma.

Last Sunday, the Kappas held a dinner for the Kappa Denver Mother's Club. Barb Couey played the piano and Peggy Hoover, Judy Stampff, Suzie White, and Charlotte Adams provided the chorus.

The Gamma Phi Beta pledges had to cancel their scheduled car wash last Friday, but they have rescheduled it for this Saturday, weather permitting.

In rabid determinism, the Theta house has installed a vigorous study program. Witness the long faces of the Thetas.

It was a good week for pinnings. Monday night Kappa Molly King announced her pinning to Phi Delta Dave Van Ness. DG Suzie Merrell passed a candle Monday announcing her pinning to Frank Boyden, and Bill Ward of the Sigma Chi house was recently engaged to Sharon Terry.

Social

The Kappa Sig and Theta pledges held a tobogganing party last Saturday.

On Tuesday, the Honeybucket was the scene of a St. Patrick's Day celebration by the DG's and the Sigma Chi.

Tomorrow the DG's and the Kappas will hold an informal party beginning with tobogganing at Woodland Park in the afternoon and followed by dinner at the Kappa Lodge.

Due to a dubious referee and even more dubious playing on the part of the Phi Deltas, the Thetas lost the basketball game on Sunday. The dinner afterwards was much easier to swallow, and all had a great time.

The Sigma Chi winter social season will reach its climax with the Sigma Chi ski-weekend to be held this weekend at Arapahoe Basin.

The Gamma Phis paid homage to the day of the great Saint Patrick with a tea held at their house.

One last note, the Miami Triad will be held this weekend by the Sigma Chis, Phi Deltas, and Betas. Need more be said?

Dr. J. Sittler Presents

If man delights in nature, he uses nature properly. He does not use atomic power as an instrument of world incineration, he does not pollute streams or destroy forests. Instead, delight in nature begets in man responsible scientific work. "Delight is the basis of right use."

The above is the thesis presented by Dr. Joseph Sittler, Professor of Systematic Theology at the University of Chicago, in both his lecture on "Gerard Manly Hopkins, and the Poetic Effort to Specify Grace" on March 15 and his lecture on "The Counterpoint of Use and Enjoyment" on March 17.

The nature of both talks is a challenge to both the clerical and academic communities to relate themselves to natural man, to inject themselves once again into the center of man's living, conscious being.

Theological, historical and humanistic man teaches delight in and respect for nature. Natural man, however, teaches that all the universe is a mechanical process which may be controlled in any way desired. The latter breeds irresponsible science and destruction of the world.

Man's tragedy is that the uni-

Winter Games End Successful Program at New Ice Rink

Last week's Winter Games marked the end of a highly successful winter program on the college's newly acquired hockey rink. The Sigma Chis topped the intramural league with the Phi Gams a close second, while the faculty team downed all comers in the Slocum league.

Four inter-collegiate games were played with the Air Force and CU, the Tigers dropping only two goal efforts of Rolf Hebler overtime to CU.

But this loss was quickly avenged as the Slocum team surged to an impressive 6-0 victory on the two goal efforts of Rolf Hebler, and Mac Callaway while Bill Hodges and John Sheldon each got one, in a game that was marked by fighting and which was finally ended a minute before regular play had expired as a result of the bellicose nature of the Boulder team.

The results of the Winter Games are as follows. In the quarter mile race of four laps Ray Mithun was the winner with Tom Siminison taking the half mile race.

Mithun and Siminison then combined to take the half mile relay in a time of two minutes and two seconds. In the mile relay, once again, it was Siminison and Mithun joining with Sherm Malkerson and Andy Barnes to win in a time of four minutes and four seconds.

In the obstacle race which proved to be as difficult to navigate as the Greek labyrinth, Ray Mithun managed to squeak by the Minutaur while Adriane wasn't at home.

So all Ray got was a medal. Second was Tom Siminison, with Kurt Kennet finishing third.

The slalom event was won by Tom Althus in 51 seconds, with Siminison second and Stan Brech-buhler finishing third.

The Puck in the Net event, for want of a better name, was won by Tom Siminison who hit the sage on two of his five ice length shots. Mithun and Siminison dominated the games and also showed themselves as excellent hockey players during the season both for the Phi Deltas and the Fraternity All-Stars.

Rolf Hebler improved perhaps more than any player during the season and was the strong point of the Phi Gam team as well as aiding the All-Stars in their victories over the Air Force Academy.

The wonder of the year was the one-time manager and all time whistling gypsy loafer John Pasley who at the beginning of the year didn't know the difference between a blue line and a goalie stick.

Over the season as the much harried Zeta goalie, who from time to time consented to lend his aid to Arthur House and Slocum stars, and though best known for his high frequency of injuries, intended to give his undermanned team a rest. John learned how to stop the puck, and even keep it out of the net—a style which enabled the Slocum stars to defeat CU 6-0 for the only shut-out of the season.

Unfortunately the brine will cease to flow as of this Wednesday and no doubt will be replaced by an increased flow of happy juice, but some will mourn.

And if you should visit the rink

New Colorado College Ski Team Has Successful Season

It has been a successful season for the young ski team.

The ski team is unique from other campus sports in two ways. Girls are not only a part of this team but also at victorious part. And skiing is the only sport in which CC has won championships.

In the class A and B Downhill championships at Aspen Lynda Spickard was third. Jean Gillispie won the class C Giant Slalom championship at Crested Butte.

In the class A and B Slalom and Giant Slalom championships at Breckenridge we were highly successful. In the Giant Slalom Jean Gillispie was victorious and Lynda Spickard was second. For the boys in Giant Slalom Glenn Foust was second.

The Slalom found Lynda Spickard second and Jean Gillispie fourth while Glenn Foust and Kent Drummond were seventh and eighth for the boys.

These championships were all sanctioned by Southern Rocky Mountain Ski Association, the most difficult racing division of the United States Ski Association.

Besides competing for championships our skiers were found racing at the Broadmoor, Arapahoe Basin, Loveland Valley, Steamboat Springs, Lake Eldora, and Winter Park. In nearly all these meets we were able to bring home medals and trophies.

This week's our Tiger team will seek success at Breckenridge. Members of the team will be Glenn Foust, Kent Drummond, Tom Althus, Mike Malachowski and Ski Hamilton, who so far holds the CC team championship for the best fall. We wish you best of luck and if anyone wants to see the race, the Ski Club will be going to Breckenridge this weekend.

Tennis Schedule Opens Next Week

On Tuesday and Wednesday, March 24 and 25 at the Garden of the Gods Country Club courts the CC tennis team open its 1964 season against Parson College and Texas Western.

The team is coached this year by Richard Bradley. This team by Richard Bradley inherited from Elmer Peterson was last year's conference champ with an eight and three record. The Tigers were defeated only by CU, DU and AFA. The team later avenged this defeat by the cadets.

Coach Bradley said this team could be the best in the state. We have a tough schedule, but with some luck we could beat such teams as CU, DU, and CSU.

This year's team will most likely consist of Cy Dyer, Duncan MacNaughton, Bill York, Bob Bohne, Bill Cogswell, Rob Baker and Jim Heiberger. However, there are still several players gunning for a starting spot.

Rifle Team Has Good First Year

The Colorado College rifle team fired a postal score against all fifth Army teams in the nation on February 20, 1964.

The official results of this match (fired on international targets) have been received. Of the scores so far published, CC beat the University of Kansas team 2255 to 2227 for its third victory this year.

This match required ten men to fire for score; highest possible team score was 3,000 and the highest possible individual score was 300.

International match bullseyes are more difficult to hit than those on conventional intercollegiate targets because the bullseye of the former is the size of the period at the end of this sentence, and it must be hit at 50 feet.

Conventional intercollegiate targets have a bullseye 15 inches in diameter (about the size of this O) and are much easier to hit than dot-type international target.

Individual scores will be ranked, and the top 100 shooters in the fifth Army will be determined from them. The individual scores of CC's ten men are not yet known. The following men fired on the team: Lyman Hunter, William New-comb, Neil Chobot, Daniel Martin, Ralph Dalla Betta, Thomas House, James Blackmer (co-captain), William Johnson (captain), Daniel Holmes, and Robert Strieby.

On March 14, CC hosted the University of Wyoming, the best team in the conference, and took a 1361-1409 loss.

Captain Bill Johnson fired a fine 281, but was disappointed by a 94/100 kneeling score.

Close behind Johnson was freshman Bob Strieby with a fine 279, a good improvement after many disappointing scores during the year.

The top five shooters in the CC-University of Wyoming match were: Johnson (281), Strieby (279), Blackmer (272), Newcomb (268), and Hunter (261).

Individual position honors went to: Johnson and Strieby (prone: 100); Strieby (kneeling: 96); Johnson (standing: 87).

CC, with its brand new team, has done much to be proud of this year. To start with, it has won three matches (three times as many matches as usual).

Also, it has set three new all-time high team scores (1373, 1379, 1390), three new all-time individual scores (287, 288, 289), and five new all-time individual position scores (prone: 100/9X; kneeling: 98, 100; standing: 92, 94).

Here's a Lot from POSSUM TROT

In a week devoid of an abundance of sporting activity, CC's first and last indoor trackfest holds the spotlight.

Coach Flood's cindermen finished a gentlemanly fourth behind Mines, Adams State and Colorado State. Banan Loosli paced the Tigers with twin victories in the high jump (6'0") and the 50 yard high hurdles (:06.6).

Loosli was high point man two years ago but deficiencies forced him into semi-retirement last year and he is returning to the sports picture this season.

Tony McGinnis, who runs like he's wearing a suit of wooden underwear, was a happy but chafed victor in the mile run as he toured the course in 4:44.7.

Michael Durfee, whose Trolley-wire physique indicates that he has been a strict patronizer of the school food service program, ab-squatulated with 5th place in the mile.

Last week Jay Schidler was issued a warning from the Morals Board (or whatever they call themselves) for an "overt and excessive display of affection" in the Loomis Lobby.

Jay handled the curves more discreetly this weekend though, as he rounded the indoor oval for a 3rd place in the half-mile.

Liden (4th in the 220), Schuyler (5th in the 880), Hayes (5th in the 440) and Kintz (5th in the 2 mile) were CC's other point-getters.

Next week's column will feature a taped interview with Mr. Torrens, director of the school's culinary department, entitled "Botulism and Its Effect on Athletes."

Alpha Phis, DG's Debate Issues Of British Educational System

Alpha Phi and Delta Gamma houses joined together Monday, March 16, at the Alpha Phi Lodge for the third in the sorority debate series. The topic for discussion was Resolved: that the United States should adopt the British form of education. Upholding the affirmative side of the question for the Alpha Phis were Donna Story and Cathey Grant. Speaking against adopting the English system were Delta Gammas, Cathi Close and Judy Sundquist.

The issues revolved around the inadequacies of the American system and the effects of the British form on our pupils.

Donna and Cathey stated that the 11 plus idea would be beneficial to our students because they could decide what they wanted to do at an earlier date and would therefore be better prepared for their profession.

Cathi and Judy maintained that only the select few remain in school after the sixth grade in England while in the U.S. we uphold the principle of free education for all through the twelfth grade.

Cathey delved quite extensively into the U.S. teacher shortage and the difference in salaries from state to state. She then proposed a plan of incorporating the British setup in our public schools.

Judy began her refutation by pointing out how Colorado College would no longer be in existence if such a plan were accepted.

She continued to point out the great governmental jurisdiction over all school programs which is maintained in England. She concluded by stating that although the British love freedom, they hate equality. For this reason their system would certainly not be functional in our society.

Questions from the floor concerned the success of both systems in correlation with the development of the nation. Also discussed was the impact of the HMI (Her Majesty's Inspectors) on the autonomy of the individual classroom in Britain.

Judges for the event were Mrs. Margaret Saunders, assistant professor of education, Dr. Neal Reinitz, associate professor of English, and Dr. Van B. Shaw, professor of sociology.

The decision was a close one with the DG's getting the victory. The win leaves Delta Gamma undefeated in the Greek debate series. They will be meeting the Gamma Phi sometime in April.

Seniors — Notice!

The LAST opportunity to be measured for caps and gowns will be next Tuesday, March 24, in Perkins Hall from 11:00 a. m. to 12:15 p. m. If there is any difficulty, please contact Miss Lorena Berger at extension 204.

Colorado College

CC Graduate In Gunsmoke

Festus Haggen, the newest character on the CBS Saturday night western Gunsmoke, was regarded as a budding composer of Broadway musical comedies when he was an undergraduate at Colorado College.

In fact, the man who now plays the role of the gun-toting racial festus—Ken Curtis, wrote the first musical, "Rhythmic City," ever produced at the Colorado Springs Fine Arts Center.

Curtis, who recently signed as the humorous character on Gunsmoke now that Dennis Weaver (Chester) is withdrawing from the show, attended Colorado College from 1935 to 1938. In those days, he was Curtis Gates of Las Animas, Colo.

"Be showed a great deal of promise as a composer when he was a college student," recalled Arthur G. Sharp of Broadmoor, a professor of English and director of drama at Colorado College in the 1930's.

Other Colorado College professors recalled that Gates was a good student. Although he was majoring in music, he also found time to take part in dramatic productions.

Former Prof. of Music at CC Dies

A former Colorado College faculty professor of music died Friday after a month's illness. Services for Mrs. Myrtle M. Bridges will be at 11 a.m. Monday at Olinger Mortuary.

Born Dec. 4, 1872, in Indianola, Ill., she studied at the Chicago Conservatory of Music and for three years was a student at Northwestern University where she majored in music. She held a degree of Bachelor of Music from the Chicago Conservatory.

Mrs. Bridges joined the CC faculty as professor of music and headed the college's public school music department for 35 years. She received bachelor of arts and master of arts degrees while teaching at CC.

After her retirement from the faculty, she continued to teach music to private pupils until the onset of her illness. Friends, who wish, may make contributions to the Myrtle M. Bridges Music Scholarship Fund at Colorado College.

Nancy Pollack Has Received Grace Grant for Independent Field Work

Nancy J. Pollack, a junior majoring in anthropology at Colorado College, has been awarded the Grace Grant in anthropological field work.

A native of Ewell, England, Miss Pollack will use the grant to "observe the patterns of adolescent inter-relationship among a small homogenous group on the island of Jamaica."

Miss Pollack, who also is secretary of the Dean of Women at Colorado College, will spend June through August on the Caribbean island, inhabited by Carib Indians.

Nancy C. Pollack

She is interested in social adjustments of the group to other groups on the island and in educational facilities.

The independent work will enable Miss Pollack to receive a Distinction in Anthropology upon graduation.

"Candidates for the distinction must have a three-point grade average and show promise of ability to do independent research without direct supervision," said Dr. Paul Kutsche, assistant professor of anthropology at the college.

Miss Pollack will write a senior honors thesis based on the results of her research in Jamaica.

A graduate of the Rosebery County Grammar School (high school) in Epsom, England, she attended the University of Hartford in Connecticut prior to enrolling at Colorado College in 1962.

The grant, which carries a stipend of $500, was established last year by J. Brewster Grace, who was graduated from Colorado College in 1961.

Plagiarism Booklet Being Distributed

The Colorado College Honor Council is in the process of distributing its booklet entitled "Source Acknowledgement." After many weeks of preparation the Council feels this booklet, if READ CAREFULLY by ALL members of the student body, will clear up any questions in the area of proper recognition. We encourage each individual to read the entire booklet and refer any questions to the Council.

Important Note. On campus students should have the Publication by Tuesday, April 14th. Off campus students by the end of the week. If you do not receive one, please call a member of the Council.

Fine Arts Center Library Open to All CC Students

Few students are taking advantage of the opportunities available to them at the Fine Arts Center Library. Several years ago the library was opened to students, but it has been used mainly by art students.

The major part of the collection is composed of two fields of study. First, there is a wealth of material on the fine arts. Books on art and artists include several rare editions and many of the finest references available. The Skira series, published in Switzerland, contains full color reproductions of most of the famous works of art, and a series of biographies by the French author E. Benoit is considered the best work of its kind.

Prize Entrance Fellowship Established for CC Grads.

The Chicago Theological Seminary today announced the establishment of a Colorado College Prize Entrance Fellowship. Designed to enable a graduate of Colorado College to attend the seminary for one year, the Fellowship provides a stipend of up to $2,000.

The Fellowship was announced by Howard Schomer, president of The Chicago Theological Seminary.

President Schomer said the seminary recently made a survey of the college background of outstanding Seminary graduates over the past 30 years.

He said the conclusion was that Colorado College is one of the six liberal arts colleges to which the Seminary owes some of its ablest students of the period studied.

Candidates for the Fellowship must demonstrate superior academic ability and character during their four years.

The Colorado College candidate will be selected by a committee composed of President Lloyd E. Worner and five members of the college faculty.

Serving on the selection committee with President Worner are Dean Kenneth J. Curran, Professors Kenneth Burman and Douglas Fox of the religion department, Professor J. Glenn Gray of the philosophy department and Professor Neale R. Reinitz of the English department.

NOTICE

Proposed Change in the ASCC Constitution—Section 4 of the By-Laws.

Proposed that: Section 4 of the By-Laws should read, "The members of the Executive Council shall take office no sooner than six weeks before second semester finals and preferably in time for three ASCC meetings to be held, and they shall serve one calendar year."

Paul Bernard

Dr. Bernard Publishes Book on Josephinism

The Colorado College Studies today announced publication of "The Origins of Josephinism: Two Studies," by Prof. Paul Bernard of the college history department.

Copies of the work now are available at the Charles Leaming Tutt Library on the Colorado College campus. Publisher of The Colorado College Studies is the College Research Committee.

The two studies contained in the 52-page volume are the result of research started during the summer of 1962 in Austria. They are entitled "Joseph I and Reform of Joseph II" and "On the Ideological Origins of Josephinism."

Working under a research grant from Colorado College, Professor Bernard spent the summer of 1962 in Vienna laying the ground work for his study of the reform movement in 18th century Austria.

He established communications channels for continuing the study during the past two years from the Colorado College campus and he plans to return to Vienna this summer to spend a full year doing research on Emperor Joseph for a book.

Professor Bernard, who earned his Ph.D. at the University of Colorado, joined the faculty at Colorado College in 1955. He is a former Fulbright Fellow and former Post Doctoral Ford Fellow.

the outside door, which is found by going down the stairs at the west end of the rear of the main building at the Arts Center. During regular Center hours, the main doors will be open as well.

Anyone who is interested in doing research in the fields of art or anthropology, or who is simply interested in browsing through the wide selection of books, magazines or works of art will find his time well spent at the Fine Arts Center Library.

CC Students in Model UN

Venezuela — for the first time in the history of this country a president was able to serve out a full five-year constitutional term and turn over the presidency to his successor after a legal election.

The representation of this enterprising country at the upcoming session of the Model United Nations is now the responsibility of interested Colorado College students.

The International Relations Club has pre-registered for a delegation representing Venezuela at the two day conference scheduled for April 24-25th at Nebraska Wesleyan University in Lincoln, Nebraska.

Each delegation is composed of three members but the number of students representing each school is unlimited. The procedures and regulations which will be followed at the conference are closely patterned after the ones adopted by the United Nations in New York City.

National elections were successfully conducted in Venezuela last fall despite Communist attempts to sabotage the elections and brought to office Romulo Leon, a labor lawyer, whose professed aim is the "consolidation of democracy," and who is committed to a policy of spreading democracy throughout the Americas.

Dr. Fred Sondermann and David Finley of the Political Science Department have offered their services to assist the students who will represent Colorado College in the preparation of their material and Resolutions to be presented to the General Assembly at the Model United Nations.

It is evident that such activities are interesting, worthwhile, and of real consequences for they offer an opportunity for the cultivation of an awareness of the problems involved in international diplomacy and world affairs.

The Waiting Game

The recent action of the Residential College Committee in drafting an open dorm proposal, shows that mature student government is possible. Months of researching and interviewing have produced definite plans, and demonstrate to the administration that student government can be responsible.

Unfortunately there has been some talk of a march on Cutler to demonstrate student support for the dorm proposal. It takes little thought to conclude that violence or threats of violence only weaken organized student effort and administration support. The administration knows the strong student feeling behind this measure and must recognize the careful planning that went into it.

Waiting might seem unpalatable to the more impatient, but it is only by waiting that we can gauge the administration's sincerity in supporting student government and constitutional activity. We can only hope that the administration matches our careful study with careful study of its own and our responsibility and maturity.

If the ASCC is proven to be an ineffective voice of student sentiment, and if the administration is unwilling to honor the sincere feelings of the students, then we will know, once and for all, that student government is dead; killed, not from student apathy, but from administration antipathy.—Heckman

Prof. Jones Named New Chairman of Economics

Paul M. Jones, professor of business administration at Colorado College, has been named chairman of the department of economics and business administration at CC.

Professor Jones, acting departmental chairman since last August, has been teaching business administration and banking at Colorado College since he joined the faculty in 1948.

The new chairman is the author of numerous articles in professional journals and staff author of one book, "Principles of Accounting."

Prior to coming to Colorado College, Professor Jones was secretary of the United Building and Loan Association in Wichita. He has taught at the University of Wichita, Louisiana State University and Mississippi State College.

Professor Jones holds a master of science degree from the University of Denver and a bachelor's degree from Western State College in Colorado, where he specialized in the field of accounting. He is a member of Pi Kappa Delta, Kappa Delta Pi, Alpha Kappa Psi and Pi Gamma Mu.

Professor Armstrong To Join CC Faculty

Robert M. Armstrong, a doctoral candidate at the University of Arizona, will join the faculty at Colorado College in September as an instructor in English.

Mr. Armstrong, 28, has been an instructor at the South Dakota School of Mines and Technology, a junior instructor at Johns Hopkins University and a teaching assistant at the University of Arizona.

He holds a bachelor of arts degree from Carleton College and a master of arts degree from the University of Arizona. He expects to receive his doctorate from Arizona in May of this year.

CC Representatives At Speech Conference

David Helms and Bob Knight represented Colorado College at the first annual speech conference of the newly merged Delta Sigma Rho-Tau Kappa Alpha forensic honoraries. More than 100 colleges and universities were represented at the three day debate tournament held in Indianapolis, Ind., March 30-April 1.

During the conference Dave and Bob were formally initiated into DSR-TKA.

Senator Edmund Muskie, Democrat from Maine, and Leroy Collins, ex-governor of Florida and currently the President of the National Association of Broadcasters both emphasized the necessity for individuals to coherently speak out for what they believe whether they be in the majority or the minority. Both men praised the collegiate forensic programs for the benefits they offer to modern communications.

To the Editors:

I am greatly disturbed over the laxity of the girl hashers in their conformity with certain state regulations governing the wearing of hairnets by all female employees.

The female hashers, especially those at the dinner meals, either go without hairnets or casually drop a scrap of net over the tops of their heads. I know that these hairnets are bothersome and no girl enjoys wearing them, but the regulation has a strong basis. Hairnets keep falling hair out of the food.

I have noticed several girls, especially those with long hair, wearing no hairnets and casually shaking their heads over the serving dishes.

I spoke to one member of the Food Service Staff concerning this problem and even cited five cases occurring in the dining room that evening, and as yet there has been no improvement.

Why should these girls be allowed to shake their hair into everyone's dinner when the state of Colorado has said that this is to be prevented?

All women who are connected with cooking and serving food to the public must wear hairnets.

If these girls do not start wearing hairnets and continue to be defiant, I would suggest that they lose their jobs.

I am extremely annoyed each time I must remove a long hair, be it blond, brown, black, or red, from my vegetables!

With all due respects,

Lynn Tondro

To the Editors:

Thank heavens someone is truly interested in the hairnet problem in the food service. It's about time that some of these more pertinent campus issues were brought to the surface. Unfortunately your paper, either by some obvious oversight, or as a result of journalistic cowardice, has not concerned itself with this and other pressing problems, such as the despicable state of dress which is at present gracing the campus A disgrace.

I for one am becoming fatigued by all this trash about students' rights. Everyone knows that we are free to do as we like, with only minimal restraints imposed from the administration, ASCC, CUL, JB, and the honor system. So why mention them.

Let's get out and do something responsible for our college. It's time those trash cans were painted, and hairnets worn, as well as ankle length skirts.

John M. Callaway, Jr.

I would like to compliment the administration on the radiance of their new installment, the number of additional straight braced metallic bedside lanterns set about light the path for study swollen feet at night. . . or perhaps also to protect our bourgeoisie daughters from the haste and embrace of their dates, and other little boogeymen . . . to make the campus safe from privatism inside of democracy, and other such things, for who is to be otherwise certain whether we are taking our responsibility with our freedom. More appropriate, however, I think, is the delightfully browned trash outside the library, forthwith (tousrissimo) to create a pleasant impression.—Bright eyes (jc)

Dear Hub:

It would be possible to cut your lemons length-wise rather than cross-wise and slightly larger the way Food Service does it for meals?

If not, would it be possible to have two of the little ones?

Onica Friend

To the Editors:

It has been said, and with some prudence, that it is sometimes better to remain silent on certain issues than to expose one's ignorance.

However, since we do not consider those students who have elected to enroll at Colorado College as being unable to assimilate

Sculptor Snyder Exhibits at Doane

An exhibit of sculpture, relief paintings and drawings by Herman Snyder, instructor in art at Colorado College, opened Sunday, March 15, at Doane College in Crete, Neb.

The exhibit will remain on view for a month in the Contemporary Art Gallery at Doane.

During the month Mr. Snyder will visit Doane to lecture before art classes.

Included in the one-man show are 12 works of sculpture, five relief paintings, and a wide selection of drawings by the Colorado College artist.

CC Students Invited To 'India Day' Study

At Loretto Heights, classes will be suspended for an entire day that will be devoted to learning more about the culture of India. On India Day, April 23, students will present papers at several sessions, and there will be a panel discussing India's foreign policy. Dr. William Mulder from the University of Utah will be the keynote speaker.

Colorado College students are invited. Students who are planning to attend should notify Dr. Robert H. Amundson, chairman of the Department of Sociology at Loretto Heights.

Krutzke Appointed to Bemis English Chair

Prof. Frank A. Krutzke, chairman of the English department at Colorado College, has been named Judson M. Bemis Professor of English.

Professor Krutzke succeeds Prof. Lewis M. Knapp who retired in June of 1962. Professor Knapp has been Judson M. Bemis Professor of English at Colorado College since 1956.

The chair was established in March of 1898 by Mr. and Mrs. Judson M. Bemis. A long-time benefactor of Colorado College, Bemis was a trustee of the college from 1912 to 1919.

Professor Krutzke recently was awarded Colorado College's new Beneset Faculty Rotating Fellowship to spend a year analyzing college freshman English. It was made possible through a grant from the Danforth Foundation.

LETTERS to the EDITORS

and analyze facts, and since they recently have been exposed to a diatribe of distorted "facts," misquoting and personal opinions calculated to foster a hatred for the ROTC Program, and therefore are entitled to a more objective presentation, we have decided that we can remain silent no longer.

It is not our intent to "sell" ROTC to anyone. We are not recruiters, although we do admit to a degree of partiality toward the ROTC program, else we would not have chosen this particular method of meeting our obligation to assist in the defense of our country.

The first consideration, and one not infrequently relegated for consideration to the uncertainty of the future, is that we and all able-bodied American males without prior service will be required by law to serve in the Armed Forces.

The second consideration is one of a moral obligation to ourselves, knowing that we now enjoy many privileges and liberties which have been bought for us by the lives of thousands of Americans and which we could not continue to enjoy with impunity to our consciences if we failed to repay with some small measure of similar service.

We firmly believe that no student at Colorado College conscientiously differs with us in regard to these obligations.

We were then faced with a third consideration, that of choosing which of several ways available we would elect to meet our obligations. Without intending in any way to degrade the valiant and dedicated service previously and now being performed by enlisted men of our Armed Forces, we nevertheless felt that we could render our most valuable contributions in positions of leadership wherein our college education might prove most helpful to ourselves and our country i.e., as officers in the Army.

For most students, the choices leading to a commission are limited to two, the ROTC Program and Officers Candidate School.

A brief review of these two programs clearly revealed the advantages of ROTC over OCS and we no longer had to face the future with unresolved problems regarding how we could best meet our military obligation. We feel that a review of these two programs might help others make this important decision.

The Officer Candidate School Enlistment Option program was initiated in September of 1962. This program was designed to insure male college graduates enrollment in OCS either if they were graduated from a non-Army ROTC College or for a valid reason could not participate in ROTC in an Army ROTC College.

Before enlistment, the applicant must take the Armed Forces Qualification test (A.F.Q.T.), the Aptitude Test (A.Q.B.) and be physically qualified for duty as an Infantry or Artillery Officer.

The A.F.Q.T. tests the applicants knowledge in such areas as: (1) combat arms, (2) Infantry, (3) Artillery and Armor, (4) electronics (5) general maintenance, (6) motor maintenance, (7) clerical, and (8) general and technical knowledge.

If the applicant meets these three requirements he is given the Officer's Candidate Test, which is like an I.Q. Test. If he passes this test, he must appear before a board of officers for a personal interview where he may be accepted or rejected.

If accepted he must enlist in the Regular Army for two years.

He will then be sent to eight weeks combat infantry basic training, eight weeks combat advanced infantry training and 23 weeks OCS. The only two officer candidate schools are Artillery and Infantry. At OCS, he must pass the Combat Physical Proficiency Test with a minimum score of 300 (possible 500).

Wright is Granted Wilson Fellowship

Carol L. Wright, a Colorado College senior from Hot Springs, Ark., has been elected a Woodrow Wilson Fellow for a year of graduate study.

A psychology major at Colorado College, she plans to earn a Ph.D. degree as a step toward a career in college-level teaching and research.

During the past year, Miss Wright has been doing independent research in sensory change reinforcement.

She was elected to Phi Beta Kappa, the national scholastic honorary society, and has been on the Dean's List for outstanding scholastic ability. She also has been elected to Cap and Gown.

Miss Wright is past president of Gamma Phi Beta sorority and is vice president of Associated Women Students at Colorado College.

The Woodrow Wilson National Fellowship Foundation is dedicated to developing "college teachers for tomorrow." A Woodrow Wilson Fellow is granted full tuition and fees for the first year at the graduate school of his choice, as well as a stipend of $1,800 and dependency allowances.

Candidates are nominated by faculty members and are screened carefully by regional and national selection committees, composed of eminent college professors, deans and presidents.

If the individual is commissioned, he must serve a minimum of two years on active duty as a commissioned officer beginning the date he graduates from OCS. If he is not commissioned, he must serve the remainder of his two years as an enlisted man and two years in the active reserve.

From this review of the salient features of the OCS option, it is immediately apparent that the program contains several features that militate against it.

First, it assures consideration only to those who can meet the stringent requirements of a combat arms physical examination.

Second, it involves a minimum of two years and ten months active duty.

Third, and to us a most important consideration, it leaves too much to chance: passing tests on unfamiliar subjects; making a favorable first impression on the OCS board; and the probability of insufficient quotas being allotted to the program (there are, after all, only two schools available).

Fourth, the applicant is left waiting for an undeterminable length of time after graduation before he can begin the program.

In considering the Advanced ROTC program as the other way to obtain a commission, we were first impressed with the fact that freedom is a two-edged sword and cuts both ways. By having completed a compulsory basic program, we now had the freedom to choose the advanced program.

Without the basic program, our only choices would have been the draft, enlistment, or the OCS option, none of which appeared particularly desirable. In passing, we also noted that the Basic ROTC Course replaced another compulsory program at CC: two hours per week of physical education.

We felt that compulsory ROTC offered the advantage of providing something more substantial as a basis for future choice.

We were also grateful that Colorado College provided a General Military Science program, rather than a specific branch program. As a result, this year our seniors will be commissioned in the Adjutant General Corps, Armor, Artillery, Finance Corps, Infantry, Army Intelligence and Security, Signal Corps, Transportation Corps and the Military Police Corps.

Only four of these branches required the officer to be physically qualified for duty with a combat arm.

In 1952, Colorado College requested the activation of an Army ROTC unit on the campus. The terms offered by the Department of the Army were accepted on May 12, 1952, by the almost unanimous vote of the faculty (there was only one dissenting vote).

The program has continued in its present form since that date. The same mature people who made that decision, and who have seen the consequences of war, continue to recognize that ROTC is of lasting value and contributes to the development of the well-rounded graduate, increasing his awareness of his responsibilities to the community and the nation.

Clifford to Study in Holland

Glenn D. Clifford of Rocky Ford, Colo., has been elected the exchange student for the 1964-65 academic year from Colorado College here to Nijerode College in Holland.

Nijerode College, located 10 miles south of Amsterdam, has an enrollment of more than 250 students. It was founded in 1946.

Clifford will spend his junior year studying international trade at the Dutch college and return to Colorado College for his senior year.

During the same period a student at Nijerode College will study at Colorado College. Here from Nijerode this year is Emile Duyster of Brussels.

Clifford, now studying Dutch with Duyster, plans to go to Holland in June. He wants to spend the summer working in Holland and perfecting his Dutch before classes get under way in September.

A center and defensive tackle for the Colorado College varsity football team, Clifford is interested in economics. He hopes to become a college teacher.

Delta Epsilon Initiates New Members

Seventeen Colorado College students and three professors were initiated Friday night, Feb. 28, into the local chapter of Delta Epsilon, the honorary scientific society.

Speaker for the occasion was Air Force Academy Lt. Col. John D. Calhoun, who talked about science and the collective competence.

Colorado College faculty members elected to the society were Richard L. Tabor, assistant professor of chemistry; Benjamin H. Banta, assistant professor of zoology, and Dean P. McIntire, assistant professor of mathematics.

Students initiated into the society were Robert A. Bauer, Robert R. Carlson, Carol A. Nelson, Herbert S. Gaskill, Paul L. Carson, Carol S. Matoush, Ellen C. Boughn, Stanley W. Brechbuhler, Phillip D. Doerr, John W. Evans, Dwight E. Kramer, Friedrich C. Luft, Jennie P. Moore, T. Michael Norris, John S. Tarr, Melinda Wells, and Stefan Feyock.

The Village Idiot

By Caroline Creeke
And now the real rat race begins. If you think it was bad before, just wait—you have a big surprise awaiting you. The trouble with having to do five papers and study for just as many tests, plus finals, is having to do all this when it's springtime in the Rockies —an environment not too conducive to studying.

Fortunately all ten local theatres are now open—this means you can catch a different flick every night, plus three matinees. Wow!
This idiot's choice for the best picture of the year, "Tom Jones," is at the Peak. Sure wish I could go to a press luncheon for Albert Finney.

Shock of the week—the Chief is out of its usual rut of showing other-than-great-films! "Irma La Douce" (Shirley MacLaine and Jack Lemmon) and "Some Like
It Hot" (Marilyn Monroe and Tony Curtis) are there through tomorrow afternoon. But then,
"Strait Jacket" (Joan Crawford)
starts Wednesday.

The Ute, too, has strayed somewhat from its usuality by showing "Mondo Cane," a depressing, but well done art film. (The manager of the Cooper Theatres tells me that, in general, art films don't do very well in this town. Could this possibly mean that Colorado Springs is not a center of culture?
Don't be silly.)

If you missed missing either
"Under the Yum-Yum Tree" or "Man's Favorite Sport," the former is at the Broadmoor now; the latter starts there on Wednesday.
The Cooper offers us "All the Way Home (Jean Simmons and Robert Preston)

"Lilies of the Field" and "Ballad of a Gunfighter" are at the Air-cadia now, and move on Wednesday to the Eighth Street. "Who's Been Sleeping in My Bed?" is there now, and on Wednesday will be at the Aircadia. Cute little switch.

For those of you who are animal-minded, "The Cardinal" and "Olympic Elk" (Disney) are at the Vista View. "Muscle Beach Party" (Annette Funicello and Frankie Avalon) leaves the Skyview Wednesday to make room for "Irma" and "Some Like It Hot"—in case you missed them at the Chief.

Last, and certainly not, not least, the Starlight re-opens Wednesday with a big one—Jayne Mansfield in "Promises, Promises" plus Jeffrey Hunter in "The Man From Galveston."

Over vacation I learned a creaky new game. It's called Pinchy Winchy. Just ask any member of Tour Chou (who, by the way, surmounting all obstacles of measles, sore throats, and that general ache all over feeling, presented a darn fine concert) to show you how to play. I'm quite sure he'll be delighted to oblige.

Golf Season Opens Thursday

Six returning lettermen and six good freshmen prospects in a sport in which six men normally comprise a team would make most coaches smile from ear to ear.

Golf coach J. Juan Reid finds himself in this position and can't even manage a smile.

Reid is bemoaning the fact that he is again facing the yearly dilemma of having an excellent golf team, but having to meet even better competition.

"If you look at the schedule we play, you can see why I'm not overly optimistic about our chances," said Reid. The Tigers play in the rugged University Division of the National Collegiate Athletic Association and regularly meet the larger schools such as the Air Force Academy, University of Denver and the University of Colorado.

In addition, Colorado College is co-hosting the Pikes Peak Intercollegiate Tournament this spring and this meet annually draws the top teams from the Rocky Mountain area.

The highlight of the season will be when the Tigers act as host for the NCAA tournament June 15-20. The University Division of this tournament is being held at the Broadmoor Golf Course with Colorado College being the host school.

"We should have a good season," said Reid, "but even with a lot of breaks it will be difficult for us to win any matches."

The Tigers open play on April 11 with a match against the U. S. Air Force Academy at the Eisenhower Golf Course. The remainder of the schedule is as follows:

April 16—
Colorado School of Mines
April 17—

Students Work At Reservation Over Vacation

By Jonathan Hetzel

The domain of the San Carlos Apaches is arid, rugged land joined with a great variety ofactus life. Massive, varicolored mesas and sharp volcanic forms divide the horizon.

On March 27 six CC students graduated this land. John Fernie, Katie Anderson, Penny Nichols, Sally Dietrich, Marianne Rys, and John Hetzels arrived in San Carlos, Arizona, to spend their vacation on the Apache reservation.

These Apache, once lead by Geronimo, were considered among the toughest American Indians and were among the last to give in to the government's military might. In 1872 they finally were confined to the reservation and

Choir Ends 6,000 Mile Tour With Sunday Shove Concert

By Horace Work

The Colorado College Choir sang an exciting and varied hour plus program in Shove Chapel Sunday, under the inspiring leadership of Donald P. Jenkins, and thoroughly delighted an audience of over 500.

The Choir of 55, fresh back from a 6,000 mile tour of the East, was missing some of its members but lacked no vitality nor fullness of sound on that account.

Mr. Jenkins was conducting his fourth Tour Choir and for the first time performed the program from memory. Although it is the ideal of every conductor to memorize his program, not all conductors are capable of doing so and fewer yet would risk it.

But in so doing, Mr. Jenkins freed himself to cue the voices more precisely, bring out subtleties of expression and attain a greater ensemble on attacks and releases than before.

The program consisted of eleven selections of which the following were particularly enjoyable: a Crucifixus by Loth, slow, full of suspensions and sung with a sonorous blend of all the voices; Psalm 116 by J. Schein executed in almost flawless German; Motet No. 1 by J. S. Bach performed with instrument-like clarity, where every voice in the fugal sections of part I and III could be heard; an early, difficult work of Arnold Schoenberg called Friede Auf Erden, in which the choir reached its full dynamic capabilities in loudness and softness and four short pieces at the end which were done with the ease and freedom a choir can achieve only after mastering more difficult works.

Prayer to Jesus by George Oldroyd was a suitable change of pace to follow Friede and Margaret Hoover and John Giammes deserve praise on their smooth solos.

The Negro Spiritual, Ezekiel Saw The Wheel, was very precise and Ronney Philpot's short solo, very spirited. The choir performed with ensemble, confidence and with a blend that goes unequalled in the past.

The Tour Choir is a relatively new organization at CC, postdating ex-president Benetz's arrival here. Mr. Jenkins took over the duties of director in 1960 and through increasing selectivity and an expanding cognition of conductorial tasks, has grown into his job admirably.

If he doesn't slow down, Carl Orff had better look out. The choir and Mr. Jenkins deserve a hearty commendation on their fine performance Sunday; theirs was of a professional nature rarely excelled by college choirs anywhere.

Meeting Today for Symposium Planning

A meeting to discuss a Symposium topic for next January will be held this afternoon, April 17, at 3:30 in the WBS Lounge of Rastall Center. All interested students and Faculty are cordially invited to attend.

While Dr. Fred A. Sondermann has already drawn up a list of possible topics, it is hoped that others will be suggested at this meeting and that a decision can shortly be reached.

Among those topics suggested by Dr. Sondermann are "Poverty," "Automation," "The Negro in America," and "1985: A 20-year Projection for American Society."

Groundbreaking Held

Ground was broken formally for the Boettcher Health Center Wednesday morning when the official ceremony took place. After brief remarks by Armin Bunney, board chairman of CC; Cris Dobbus, board chairman of the Boettcher Foundation; E. Warren Willard, president of the Foundation; ground was officially broken with a golden shovel.

Regarded by architects and educators as a departure in campus infirmary design, the circular building features study lounges, and other aids to help students keep up with class work while they are ill. It is being built under a $200,000 grant from the Boettcher Foundation of Denver and a $25,000 grant from the Kresge Foundation of Detroit.

General contractor is Gerald H. Phipps Inc., of Colorado Springs. The Health Center was designed by the architectural firm of Cawdill, Rowlett and Scott of Houston and by Carlisle B. Guy of Colorado Springs as associate architect.

Jenkins Speaks Powerfully On Contemporary Education

By Mary Emanuel

I only regret that more people were not present to hear the lecture given Thursday night by Doctor Daniel Jenkins on "The Educated Society."

Dr. Jenkins is now studying the social and institutional implications of the recent educational expansion in England with regard to the demand for university education and professional excellence. He first evaluated the extent of social change that is taking place as a result of this recently acquired appetite for education, this search and drive toward an "educated society."

Some of the reasons are obvious: a new vitality for democratic societies, a higher level of social culture, economic and social advantages in a specialized society, and a requisite responsibility of these groups to recognize and use their power effectively.

He then examined the character of academic institutions as a training ground for society in general. There is an undeniable urgency in modern societies for these institutions to accept their own influence in the formation of the future world. Young adults are spending their most formative and, potentially, most beneficial years in the hands of college educators, and the preparedness of these institutions to properly shape young attitudes toward education and the world is eventually going to determine the kind of so-

Foreign Fellowship Meeting to Be Held

Next Friday at 4 p.m. in the WES Room, there will be a meeting for all students interested in applying for foreign fellowships next year.

Applications will open on May 1st for the 1965-66 program. Anyone graduating in 1965 is eligible, but preference will be given to candidates who have not previously lived or studied abroad.

Three types of grants will be available—U. S. government full grants, joint U. S.-other government grants, and U. S. government travel-only grants. The Fulbright advisors on campus are Dr. Reinitz, Mr. LeLong, Dr. Diller, Dr. Seay, and Miss Clayden.

MIT Dean Questions Traditional Campus Sex Ethic

By John T. Rule

Reprinted with permission of the author from an article in the April, 1964, Atlantic, "Must Colleges Police Sex?" The author is former Dean of Students at M.I.T.

Many adolescents consciously seek critical life experiences that they believe will test out and confirm their adulthood. The college years are a period of reaching for sexual maturity. In general, this is a period of advance and retreat, of tentative testing forays and frightened escape. [Some seek security by trying to establish a permanent relationship. Going steady appeals for this reason. Intercourse appeals because it seems to be an instrument for achieving the haven of permanence.]

For some students, too much freedom leads to indulgence; for others who doubt their capacity for control, it can lead to complete retreat as the only means to protect themselves from unknown consequences. For still others, a prolonging of more juvenile outlooks serves as a protection against more intimate relations. Party raids are a juvenile sex outlet.

The achievement of sexual maturity is an intensely individual problem. Colleges that approach the subject with understanding and a desire to help their students must consider the consequences of every action on the development of the individual. The behavioral sciences have already brought us many profound insights into the structure of personality. At present in colleges we are in an amorphous period in which new approaches to student problems based on these insights are being tested and refined. Eventually, no doubt, a new equilibrium will be reached, a new ethic achieved.

Where it is believed that education begins and ends in the classroom, the easiest procedure in handling nonclassroom conduct on the residential campus is to institute strict regulations for dormitory and fraternity living which are purely preventive in nature and which protect the college from external criticism. Such regulations in their extreme form generally forbid the presence of one sex in any living unit of the other except "on the first floor" and in strictly controlled and chaperoned groups.

Hours at which women's dormitories will be locked and unlocked, hours when students must be in the building, sign-in and sign-out rules, and elaborate and cumulative sys-

Sex and the College Image

One of the propositions central to the article by Dean Rule reprinted on page 1 is this: that stringent social and dormitory regulations are the mark of schools, usually state universities, which believe that the educational process "begins and ends in the classroom," and that it is, conversely, the college which is concerned with the education of the whole individual which is liberalizing these regulations in an attempt to recognize and satisfy the needs of the student and better fulfill its educational responsibility.

Colorado College fits rather unevenly into Dean Rule's thesis. While declaring vehemently its determination to extend the educational endeavor to every phase of the student's life, it employs a highly institutional and stultifying set of social regulations which are anything but educational. Like the state universities which Dean Rule describes, the favorite rationalization for this action is the maintenance of a "high moral standard" to preserve the reputation of the school. Presumably this noble reputation will in turn lead to an increase in the quality of those who apply for admission.

We would submit, however, that the quality of emerging students should be more important to any school than the quality of entering students. Similarly, any school concerned with educating the whole person is abdicating a portion of its academic and educational responsibility when it places its own institutional well-being above the well-being and the maturity of its students.

Far from preventing students from expressing their immaturity, such a school is, as Dean Rule indicates, denying them the opportunity to mature at all by discovering for themselves the path, moral as well as academic, which they will follow for the rest of their lives.

LETTERS to the EDITORS

Open Letter to Publications Board:

As the selection of the editors for next year's Tiger approaches I should like to recall to the members of the Publications Board that the selection of editors of all student publications is a matter of conscience and of strictest impartiality, involving an honest decision based on experience, capability, and a proved devotion to the publication in question, shown by a record of diligent and creative work, and is not to be swayed by emotional or social considerations.

May the Publications Board also remember that integrity is one of the most important moral factors in government of any kind. If our people for responsible student government are to have any meaning whatsoever, the organs of student government must never fail to show responsibility, integrity, and a sense of justice in all their actions, to the point that a betrayal of these qualities becomes a heavy weight both to the collective conscience of the student body and to the conscience of the individuals involved.

Sincerely,
Genevieve Vaughn

To the Editors:

I, for one, happen to appreciate the new lights which the administration has put in. I also happen to think Bright Eyes' criticism—if it can be dignified by such a name—is unwarranted. Since when has enough light to see where you are walking become a situation to incite ridicule?

Film Society Shows 'Private's Progress'

If you think Tom Jones is funny, you should have seen Modern Times March 24th, coupled with The Barber Shop.

Last night saw the presentation of the Marx Brothers running around in Duck Soup like Harpo in the lemonade. Robert Benchley also gave an entertaining talk on The Sex Life of the Polyp, but was forced to desist to look for a species which takes its sex a little more seriously.

This short was one of the first sustained dialogues recorded in the experimental days of sound.

Saturday night, April 18th at 8 p.m. in Perkins, The Colorado College Film Society leaves American films of the '30s for a Boulting Brothers' production-direction-lit-eration of 1956.

The film is Private's Progress, starring Ian Carmichael, Richard Attenborough, and Terry Thomas. It is dedicated "To all who got away with it," and the producers "gratefully acknowledge the official cooperation of absolutely nobody," much to the dismay of Her Majesty's British War Office, which feared the film's release in this country lest it soil the Empire's image.

Our Hero is Private Stanley Windrush, who progresses out of Gravestone Barracks, through a pantless obstacle course, and right into Uncle Bertie's (Brigadier General Bertram Tracepudder) "Operation Hattrack," a masterpiece of private enterprise at everyone's expense.

The Village Idiot

By Caroline Creyke

Henceforth let it ne'er be said that the administration pays no mind to student requests. At approximately 2:30, Monday, April 13th (the TIGER having been in circulation a mere three and one-half hours) my request for a lemon was nonchalantly filled by a Hubtress, not with a scant slice, but with a well-ligh weighty wedge.

An event so singular in character as this behoves me to follow suit with this publication's other columnist. So, to reinforce and encourage those who dare, the White Knight of the Week Award is herewith deemed to exist, the recipient incipient of which is, of course, Miss Onica Friend.

"Tom Jones" will hang around the Peak for at least one—and probably two — more weeks. "Straight Jacket" will be at the Chief until the 22nd, when Steve (proper stranger) McQueen plays "Soldiers in the Rain" with Jackie Gleason. "Man's Favorite Sport" is still at the Broadmoor.

The Cooper and the Ute seem to be showing each other's type movies this week. "Hud" (Pat Neal and Paul Newman) is at the latter, leaving to its sister the very dubious honor of featuring Elvis in "Kissin' Cousins".

If it's all the same to you all, I'm going to what movies will be at the drive-ins this week, and only in certain cases say exactly when and which one. Because, after all, does it really matter? "Lilies of the Field" (Poitier) is at the Eighth Street today and

ASCC NOTES

Summary of important business Class commissioner elections announced 1964 Freshman orientation, discussed applications for assemblies committee and Tiger editor opened, and United Fund representatives speak.

The Elections Committee announced that the candidates for class commissioners appeared today's Tiger. A motion to extend the deadline for petitions to April 14 at 11:00 a.m. was passed.

Mr. Wood explained the philosophy of the new student orientation for the coming year. His hope is that the program will extend for a longer period and involve more students, administration, and faculty. Suggestions were made and a meeting open to the student body will be announced for further discussion. Ideas are for inter-class dining, an off-campus retreat with faculty advisors and all interested students, and the wearing of beanies were mentioned.

Two committees announced they would be receiving applications for campus positions: Assemblies Committee members with a deadline of April 30, and Publications Board for Tiger editor and business manager, Photographic editor and Writer's Workshop chairman, with a deadline of April 21. The Executive Council also approved the appointment of Jan Okamoto and Anne Holmes as new Freshman editors for 1964.

Mr. Paine and Mr. Pfeiffer, representatives of the United Fund, announced an interest in initiating a program that would lead to greater student participation and contribution in the United Fund drive.

The Student Policy Committee announced their progress on the poll of parents about the proposed Open Dorm Policy. With a 25% return about 65% of the parents favor the proposal.

Respectfully submitted
Cathy Grant,
ASCC Sec. Elect.

Jenkins Speaks

ety in which we will live—good, bad, or intolerable. If we are to make a success of the society in which we will live, it is absolutely necessary, he contends, that there be a flow of unself-conscious communication of the educational virtues from the educated "elite" to the popular culture of those who will have to understand, respect, and support the value of those virtues and the social power that rests in them.

In order to maintain the vitality of our democratic standards, there are certain academic dangers, which I think are very accurate and pointed, we should beware of: (1) our own form of intellectual self-righteousness; the supposedly educated man is credited with a certain intellectual and moral sensitivity which is oftentimes detrimentally eloquent in justifying its own integrity and merit at the expense of condemning others, (2) the academic tendency to its own species of triviality—a complacency that comes from the detachment of analytical thought at the risk of becoming narrow, uncreative and pedantic, and probably the most significant, (3) the tendency to encourage indecision and the habit of non-commitment and still being able to give so many excellent and convincing reasons for remaining uncommitted! Positive and immediate decision-making is often inevitable, and the academic, contemplative, there's-more-than-one-side-to-the-question attitude is preventing the most capable leaders from assuming their position of power and responsibility.

According to Dr. Jenkins, we are approaching an educationally elite society, and precautions must be taken that these "elite" do not endanger the principles of democracy under a "well educated" minority.

Knowledge does have powerful tools with which to work, both for ill and for good, and tyranny because of "superiority" is not the solution. There must develop a Common Culture, which means an integrated relationship between the elite academic culture and the popular or "gentle" culture of the less or differently educated.

How can there be a common culture? Dr. Jenkins states that it rises out of (1) a measure of agreement about the true nature and end of man, i.e. they share common convictions; they respect each other's personal freedom and they accept the responsibilities of that freedom (this rules out any form of secular absolutism), (2) the existence of conditions in which to exercise freedom, i.e. a well developed sense of discrimination and judgment, an honest desire for self-evaluation and constructive criticism and a system of public information that will allow communication between the popular and elite cultures, and (3) a respect for common convictions and the realization of an interdependent society based on effective communication.

This society will be the "educated society" — the one where communication and understanding between the "haves" and the "have-nots" of education will lead to a diversified and vibrant society where struggles for convictions, beliefs, and ideals will not be hampered by intolerance, resentment, and the conflicts of distrust in things that are not understood or taken for granted. An excellent speaker and a thought-provoking lecture!

English Theologian

Jenkins Attempts Honest Appraisal of Religion

Dr. Daniel Jenkins, former professor of ecumenical theology at the University of Chicago and present chaplain at the New University of Sussex, England, last Sunday discussed the provoking topic of "What I dislike about the Church, and what holds me to it."

Beginning with the premise that the only relevant criticism of the church must come from a position of commitment and obligation, Dr. Jenkins emphasized that the Christian has no right to be a public relations officer."

To defend everything is to be either blind or dishonest or both. Instead, realizing that total detachment is both impossible and undesirable, Christians must learn to be critical, must learn to evaluate a divine Church, but human institution, with a spirit of continuing reform. In other words, love of God must exceed love of Church.

Proceeding from this base, the British minister pointed out that the real shock and scandal today rests in the triviality and sentimentality which permeates the life of churches.

If the Christian maintains he has the secret of eternal life and the solid base for human relationships, it is time he preaches the full force of this kind of message. "To domesticate the strength of the Church into harmless platitudes" is to lose all the style, excitement, and fun of Christianity.

An apprehension of the real power of Christianity is, in fact, the legitimate source of disciplined, fruitful criticism of the Church.

Former MIT Dean Questions Traditional Campus Sex Ethic

tems of punishment for lateness and every variety of violation are quite common in state universities.

Such rules may be rigidly enforced, with punishment spelled out in advance; or a pro forma enforcement system may exist, with little effort made to detect violations. Administration of such rules may be in the hands of student government, which either is strictly under the control of the dean or has a reasonable degree of autonomy. The reality behind the rules in any given university can only be determined by a campus visit including interviews with students. The practices going on behind the public shell of published rules may differ radically from such rules.

Under such a system a naive and immature eighteen-year-old freshman desperately needing to talk out his problems about sex is limited to "consultation by appointment" or to student bull sessions, where he is restricted by the narrow horizons of his peers who are struggling with the same problems. He generally comes to conform to the mores and beliefs of the student body, existing in a vacuum of secrecy protected from any adult wisdom by the obvious disparity between the university's public posture and the student's awareness of the local reality. It is the failure of the college to carry on a constant, intelligent, constructive debate with students, the failure to listen with calmness rather than outrage to the young defenders of sexual privilege that causes students to revolt.

Some American colleges have developed the philosophy that their educational opportunities and responsibilities are not confined to the classroom; the college is a community whose every impact on the student is a component of his education. The classrooms furnish the specifics; other phases of campus life, the generalities. All integrate into the total experience which constitutes a college education. It is in the nonacademic phases of college life that character and personality, integrity and morality are strengthened or weakened.

The philosophy is being explored most vigorously in private institutions, especially those in the East, including Ivy League. These are the colleges and universities that have liberalized their dormitory rules and permitted a couple to be alone in the room of either the boy or girl at specified times. In a survey conducted last winter of 87 colleges and universities, either coeducational or men-only, seven of the 19 private colleges, none of the 18 public ones, gave such permission in varying degrees.

Once the college actively subscribes to the philosophy of total education, it must take into account, in addition to the overall intent of its rules and regulations, their effects on the development of each individual student.

In doing this the college creates for itself a dilemma from which it can never thereafter escape. Society must be restrictive, and the college is educating the student to be a member of society. But the young, sentient human being learns to remain to accept social restriction chiefly through revolt, personal experimentation, and the long, long process of talking it out through the controlled, mutually respectful, argumentative discourse that can and should occur between college authorities and their student bodies.

The recognition of individual uniqueness also leads the college to perceive that treating students as too immature to handle responsibility or to be trusted in adult emotional realms, especially that of sex, keeps the door of communication closed and denies the college of any meaningful participation in the lives of its students.

To be truly effective, the college must make the assumption that its students are mature, and then deal with their lapses into immaturity that responsible adults enjoy and be willing to ensure student protests when the offenders are punished.

A student should never be punished for what he might do but only for what he has done. Punishment in advance is unjust to the innocent and quite clearly states that he is not to be trusted. Subscription to this seemingly simple principle is the core of the controversy over parietal rules. To deny him the "right" to have a party in his room is to punish him in advance for fear that the party might get out of hand.

To punish all to prevent the transgressions of the few, is on the face of it, unjust. At most the college can, by legislation, limit opportunities for immorality. Such limitation is at heart police action, not educational action. Limiting immorality is not teaching morality. Though it is a much more difficult policy to follow, severity toward those who abuse a privilege is far better than denying everyone the privilege. The college that is willing to accept the headach such a policy inevitably entails then in a position to define by specific disciplinary actions what it considers to be abuse.

Society is based on consensus. The members of a large and established society such as ours are established through education, consensus did not help form. Social relations, sexual conduct, and community courtesy are all matters of consensus. It is such consensus, the larger society that the college must help the student accept. The college student is at the age of revolt. He is at the peak of his eccentricity and the arrogance of youth. He should to some degree cross swords with social conventions, defy them, attempt to alter them, test their validity for himself in order that he may eventually subscribe to them willingly.

The area of disagreement about sex between the central position responsible students and the college authorities is, underneath the controversy, never very great. Incidents which require college disciplinary action in general involve violations of consensus that most students would agree to. Each student incident as it is treated individually becomes an instrument for exchange of ideas and evaluation of standards.

More important, this is the one approach that encourages students to view adults as human beings, and it takes human beings to persuade students to expose their doubts about their own adult status to adult influence. The achievement of frank discourse between a college and its students is an essential prerequisite to the fulfillment of the college's broader educational aims.

forced to give up their 700 year old customs of roaming, hunting, and pillaging. It took the San Carlos Apache until 1886 to show even partial willingness to adjust to reservation life. Their health and morale declined steadily, hitting an all time low in 1920. In 1923 a land reform pushing out parasitic white ranchers started the Apache on the up-grade. The first tolerance of Indian initiative came in 1936 under the Indian Reorganization Act which allowed them to have a Tribal Council. In 1938, 500 families were each given a small farm, but agriculture was still so alien to their way of life that only 40 of these farms are still worked. Instead livestock became the major enterprise. With increase of stock prices during World War II the tribe directed all its interest into ranching. But ranching requires little labor, so most of the Indians were still unemployed. After the war 200 men returned from the military, having known a richer way of life. Their difficult readjustment added to drinking and social disorder on the reservation. Finally the decline of stock prices in 1952 brought about a crisis from which the Apache still are trying to recover.

The problems of the San Carlos Apache are due in part to the cultural adjustment they have to make and in part to unwise government policies. The land given to them was thought to be very poor. Later rich mineral finds were made in the eastern part of the reservation. So by executive order the valuable half of the reservation was taken away. The present reservation is too poor in mineral resources to mine.

"So," you ask, "what did the CC crusaders do?" The answer is "Not much." We cleaned out a swimming pool which had formerly been used as a trash can. As far as we know the pool will again be used for community trash. Yet I don't think any of us feel the camp was a failure. Frankly, I think what we enjoyed most was our own company, and second we liked getting to know the Apache and their situation. While we worked on the pool, adults and children came to watch, some spoke with us, and some worked with us. Even a drunk graced us with his company. Officials of the Tribal Council and the Bureau of Indian Affairs took interest in us. They helped us, invited us to dinner, spoke with us, and even took us on a full day trip into the remote cattle country. Thus the work project served as a good way to get in good with the community, and little else. So in our way of thinking the project was a great success.

Ross Named Head of English Dept.

Dr. Thomas W. Ross, professor of English at Colorado College, today was named chairman of the department of English.

Professor Ross will assume the departmental chairmanship in September. He succeeds Prof. Frank A. Krutskie, who has been named Judson M. Bemis Professor of English.

Professor Ross earned his bachelor's and master's degrees in English at Colorado College. He received his Ph.D. at the University of Michigan in 1951.

As an undergraduate at Colorado College, where he was graduated magna cum laude, he was elected to Phi Beta Kappa, the national honorary scholastic society. At Michigan, he was a University Fellow.

The chairman-elect is an authority on Middle English and is the author of articles in scholarly journals. He currently is reassembling from various sources the anonymous 14th century poem "A Satire on Edward II."

Professor Ross began his academic career as a teaching fellow at the University of Michigan, joining the faculty at Colorado College in 1951.

The Forum Committee of the ASCC has announced that applications are now open. There are approximately 10 positions to be filled. The application blanks may be received at Rastall desk. The deadline is Wednesday April 29.

He was assistant dean of the college from 1953 to 1954 when he went to Austria as assistant director of the Salzburg Seminar in American studies. He returned to Colorado College in 1958 and served as director of admissions for three years.

During the summer of 1955, he was a visiting professor of English at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology.

A native of Colorado Springs, Professor Ross is a former reporter for both the Free Press and the Gazette Telegraph.

Musical Comedy At AFA Friday

This Friday and Saturday, April 17th and 18th, Colorado College and the Air Force Academy will join forces to present "The Trouble With Gruber," a musical comedy written and scored by members of the cadet wing, and performed by eleven CC coeds and their male counterparts from the AFA.

The price of admission is $1, or $75 with an activity card, which may be presented at the ticket booth at Arnold Hall Friday or Saturday night.

Friday night's show will begin at 6:20 p.m., with the curtains rising Saturday at 7:30 p.m.

Those of you who saw last year's show, "Hey! Mr. Blue," will recognize the talent of Kathy Aurin and Tom Calaise, who again take the leads.

Prof. Thomas W. Ross

Supporting them, and playing opposite personalities during the majority of the production, are Karen Lambert and Ron Todd.

If you want to hear some swingin' music, and watch a really amusing comedy, be at the Arnold Hall Theater, USAFA, this Friday or Saturday night.

FTA to Meet at CC

The area high school chapters of the Future Teachers of America will be the guests of the Student Education Association at a tea on Wednesday, April 22, at 4:30 p.m. in the WES Room of Rastall Center.

Members are urged to attend so that they can meet these students and talk to them about teacher preparation in college.

This will be the last meeting of the year. Next year's president will be elected at this time.

Notice

All pizza lovers are invited to come to the Rastall Center Ci-Cino tonight from 10 to 12:30 and tomorrow night from 10 to 1. Jim Lacey will be featured tonight and Ann (Henric) Barkley will sing tomorrow night. So come with your date after the show or just take a study book and join the fun at the Ci-Cino.

WCHA Rules to Help Equalize Competition

Callaway

Along with death and taxes, the only other inevitability over the last few years has been the domination by Junior players of WCHA, in teams such as Denver, North Dakota, Michigan, and Michigan Tech. But all this is destined to change, and soon.

At the annual meeting of the WCHA representatives on March 27 and 28, several new regulations were drafted and accepted by the league, designed to strike fear into the hearts of the twenty-two year old semi-professional hockey players who often compete against CC. However, it should be pointed out that those rules adopted were not formed solely on negative intent.

Under an old regulation, any student who had participated in an organized hockey program in a foreign country, after his twentieth birthday, lost one year of eligibility for each year after that birthday. This age has now been lowered to 19. It is hoped that such a stipulation will help to lower the competitive disparity between Canadians and Americans, which is usually caused by the experience one can gain as a result of age.

A restriction was also placed upon Junior A participants, which is a new twist for the WCHA. No Junior A player over the age of 19 is eligible for conference participation. Again, the league felt that the experience a person can gain over this age in Junior A competition, places such a person in a competitive bracket far above that of the usual high school player.

The amount of scholarship aid has also been defined. A college can now expend only six times the amount of money needed to send one student to college for one year for hockey scholarships. And this amount can be distributed to the minimum of nine students. Thus, both the amount of money to be used for hockey scholarships, and the number that can be given, has been set.

Also adopted was a letter of intent, by which a student must definitely announce his intention to go to a certain college. While this letter might be viewed as something similar to a contract, such is not the case. This letter was designed to prevent or at least curb the bidding of hockey players.

While these regulations may not be on such a level in recent years.

Canadians have not been excluded, but near professionals have. The position of the WCHA is a moderate one and, I think, the only possible and practical position that could have been taken. Needless to say, it was not contemplated by your raving sports editors.

In the realm of wishful thinking one might expect to see these regulations adopted by the ECAC, the Eastern counterpart of the WCHA, thus enabling the national championships to become more than an assumption that the WCHA is akin to the master race.

John Simus, First CC All-American Since '58

By Bob Halsband

John Otto Simus was born in Minneapolis, Minnesota, 21 years ago. He started skating at the age of four and came to CC with a winning tradition behind him, having led Washburn High School of Minneapolis to two consecutive trips to the finals of the Minnesota State High School Tournament.

John is the first American-born hockey All-American to attend CC since his brother Jeff, a goalie, was selected in 1955, and CC's first All-American since the legendary Red Hay line made it in 1958.

As this year's captain, John handled the difficult chore exceptionally well. A captain must set a good example for the rest of the team, exert a degree of influence over the other players, and get the players psychologically up for games.

It goes without saying that John's consistent desire, avid competitiveness, and driving leadership gained the high respect not only of the team, but also of spectators in the stands who knew he was no ordinary hockey player. John's 21 goals and 17 assists speak for themselves.

After three years of varsity competition, one experience is bound to stand out above all others and John says his greatest thrill was when CC beat Denver 6-5 in the Broadmoor.

In that game, Don Stauffer flipped one in from 20-feet with 28 seconds remaining. John was right in the middle of the action, scoring a goal to tie up the game at 5-5.

"Hockey has been very good to me in the four years I have been here," says John. "I feel I have received an excellent education. Aside from that, I've made some great friends here and everyone has been very good to me."

"I'd like to thank Coach Frasca, Coach Johnson, and my teammates who for the last three years have tutored and encouraged me, and have made playing hockey at CC a wonderful experience. The credit for any awards I may have received from hockey belongs to them."

"I feel that a large contribution to the team's success was the faithful support of the CC student body, who rallied behind us when the going got rough."

Games Tournament Coming Next Week

The Rastall Center games area tournament will be held April 20 through April 23. The events featured will include straight pool, "golf" on the snooker table, singles and doubles in bowling and table tennis for men, and singles and doubles in bowling and table tennis for women.

Special bowling rates will prevail, and awards will be presented to the winners.

To take advantage of this opportunity to display your athletic prowess and sign up now in the games area. Win or lose, you could still have a great time.

New CC Lacrosse Team Shows Surprising Skill

Those who found themselves gathered on Stewart Field last Saturday were met with what most must have considered a spectacle as incompatible as U.N. dealing with the Cyprus Problem.

Twenty helmeted and ill dressed people, brandishing the like of butterfly nets, could be seen, at one moment bent on destroying the human race, and the next, gathered in small, seemingly disinterested groups discussing possible alternatives. However odd this sight, it will be ever again—and again, we hope.

For those who still are unaware of the name of this dubious sport, it is lacrosse, a game which was originated by the Iroquois Indians and which has been refined by various Caucasians, so that the death rate was minimized to a degree where even CC might contemplate its practice.

Lack of experience, coupled with the sedentary nature of spring break habits, led to CC's downfall in the second half, in which Denver tallied 6 goals to the Tigers one.

The game however must be counted a success in light of the problems which confronted and no doubt will continue to plague the Tigers.

As in any sport, it will take a great deal of time to train new devotees and condition those who are already familiar with the game.

As might be expected all CC scoring came from experienced players. Mac Callaway scored the first two Tigers' goals early in the first period with close-in shots.

Tad Davis, early in the second quarter, took the ball from his center position, maneuvered through the entire defense, and stuffed the ball in the net to put CC ahead 3-2.

Though losing to the Denver Lacrosse Club 10-4, the Tigers, many of whom had never seen a lacrosse stick until this March, played well in the first half, down only one goal at that point 4-3.

Mixed Doubles Tennis Tournament Planned

Colorado College will sponsor its second Pikes Peak mixed doubles tournament during the coming weeks. Matches will be scheduled on an informal basis and the tournament will be open to the public.

Entry blanks may be obtained at Rastall Center Desk. Entry fee will be fifty cents a person, and each team will be required to bring a new can of balls to the matches with the losers keeping the can used for play. A picnic will follow the finals which will be played two or three weekends from now. For further information call Roms Favrot ext 354 or ask at Rastall Center Desk.

At this point, Denver took over control of the game and it wasn't until the fourth quarter that Frank Bond, who had been hitting the post consistently, sunk the ball past the Denver goalie for the final score.

While experience proved the factor in goal production for CC, several of the Tigers new recruits played well above what might have been expected. Rolf Hebler, playing for the first time in the goal, turned in an outstanding performance in the nets.

Bill Hodges and Warren Fordyce both jarred Denver attackers at their defense positions, Tony Bryan also did an outstanding job at mid-field.

Despite the score, the game was

Golfers Score First In Win Over AFA

The Colorado College Golf Team opened its 1964 season with a 9½-8½ win over the US Air Force Academy team in a match played last Saturday at the Eisenhower Golf Course.

The six returning lettermen who were responsible for the victory over the previously unbeaten cadets were: Bob Heiny, Bob Magie, Rich Nichols, Jim Schultz, Cole Robinson and Steve Wollman.

These six gave the Tigers a nucleus for a strong team. Five new men have been added to the squad following tryouts — Dick Knight, Mike Erickson, Andy Barnes, Jim Amidon and John Wells.

The team match was not decided until the last individual match came in. Steve Wollman captured the final three points needed for the win by beating his opponent all three ways.

Cole Robinson also won his match while Bob Heiny and Rich Nichols held their opponents to a stand-off.

a success for Dr. Stabler the CC coach and for all who played. The enthusiasm registered by the fans, also indicated that Lacrosse is here to stay at CC and in case anyone is interested, this game has grown in the last ten years faster than any other collegiate sport.

And it has even been said that several of CC's frustrated intellectuals have considered lacrosse as an outlet akin to Zen.

The Possum Trots

By Herman Whiton

Have you ever seen a malformed watermelon with a bat engraved on it, or heard of a fraternity man who was not popular among his brothers because he was too active and dominated too many "functions" within this organization that could not grow with him. Well, next year's Tiger football team has made just such a find in Captain Steve Sabol, alias Batman, Super, and Sudden Death.

Steve is big in more ways than one, in that he not only weighs 215 pounds and is capable of bowling over any opposing lineman or backer, and at the same time has a mind that is equal to the most complex problems. To add to high physical and mental capabilities, Steve has also shown a high capacity to lead other players which is done by rational advice and exemplary deeds. At the same time, however, this idol of the once thought mythical, but now actual Possum Trot Chamber of Commerce (Steve has a letter concerning this from a disc jockey in Possum Trot, Tennessee) has always avoided the limbo of many athletes who try to lead, in that he does not see any virtue in hideous comments about giving your life for god, country, and Colorado College which is merely a stagnation left over from the sentimental days of Knute Rockne. Sabol has been known to have denounced many of those college phonies who speak loudly and carry an impotent stick and perhaps even more effectively, to use his sharp humor to tease these bores into silence.

Many people will probably misinterpret the new Tiger captain's self-written publicity for egocentricity, but this writer feels that criticism like this is both unfair and unfounded in that the amount of interest in football at CC has been on a constant decline in recent years, and that Sabol's main desire is to create a mythical character who will bring crowds to see Sudden Death in action as a football player on an exciting, exploding team that may be able to win in the last few seconds and thus make the myth of Sudden Death a reality. There are few Tiger Gridders, as indicated by Steve's large majority vote, who add as to bring crowds to the nightmare in the wake of Dutch Clark to see Steve Sabol individually.

Thus Sabol is an individual leader, smart Public Relations man, Team Captain who foregoes cliché "buddyism" for a much more meaningful mutual respect of teammates, and offers the prospect of being one of CC's greatest captains. It is only hoped that next year's highly talented Tiger squad will be able to live up to the man who for four years has given them his unwavering loyalty.

Dr. Wright Appointed New Physics Chairman

Dr. Wilbur H. Wright, professor of physics at Colorado College, has been named chairman of the physics department. A member of the Colorado College faculty since 1956, Professor Wright will take up his duties as departmental chairman in September. He headed up a campus committee which worked closely with the architects in planning the college's Olin Hall of Science, dedicated in the fall of 1962. He also has been chairman of the executive committee of the Natural Science Division.

Prior to joining the faculty of Colorado College Professor Wright taught physics at Rutgers University from 1951 to 1952 and at the University of New Hampshire where he was assistant professor of physics from 1952 to 1956.

He is a specialist in the fields of Cryogenics (low temperature physics) and super conductivity of metals at low temperature.

After attending Colorado College during his freshman year, Professor Wright enrolled at Oberlin College where he earned a bachelor's degree in physics.

He received his Ph.D. degree from Rutgers in 1952, writing his thesis on the Study of Superheating and Supercooling of Alloys of Tin in Transition from Superconducting of Normal States.

CC Represents Venezuela At Mock United Nations

Students from Colorado College will represent Venezuela at the Model United Nations to be held on the Nebraska Wesleyan Campus, Lincoln, April 24-25, 1964. They will be among 60 delegations participating in this event sponsored by Nebraska Wesleyan in cooperation with the Collegiate Council for the United Nations.

The Honorable B. K. Nehru, Ambassador from India to the United States will address the opening convocation, Friday, April 24th, at 10:00 a.m.

Other highlights planned for the two-day event are the General Assembly Address by Dr. Vance D. Rodgers, President of Nebraska Wesleyan, and the International Banquet, at which Governor Frank B. Morrison will give the keynote address.

For further details, contact Nan Burroughs.

Phi Delt Work At Boys' Camp

The Phi Delta Theta fraternity is undertaking their traditional service day project on April 25th.

This year they will work at the Brookhearts Boys camp in Green Mountain Falls. The work involved includes—repairs on log cabins, leveling drives, wood splitting, and painting.

John Van Ness, president, says that all 70 members will participate. This is an annual occurrence during which all the 120 chapters throughout the U.S. and Canada undertake community service projects in their prospective cities.

The Brookhearts Boys Camp is a non-profit organization. Its purpose is to provide a healthful living situation for underprivileged boys from around Colorado.

Local Ministers to Talk Today Of Experiences at Hattiesburg

Rev. Paul Murphy, who was jailed in Hattiesburg while helping with voter registration, will talk at an open public meeting held today at 8:00 p.m. in Perkins.

Rev. Murphy is the Minister of the Stratmore Hills Methodist Church.

The topic of his talk will be "Where is Hattiesburg?"

Film Society to Present Renoir

It's another Colorado College Film Society bulletin, fans.

Private's Progress, last Saturday night's presentation, was something rare these days, a war flick you could laugh at without feeling guilty.

The double tone of horror and humor prevalent in films like Dr. Strangelove are hard on the psyche.

The Fatal Glass of Beer was unequivocally funny, too. Fields is great the way he can pull off the same gag "Ah! It ain't a fit night out for man nor beast!" over and over and get a louder laugh every time.

This week's show, Rules of the Game, directed by Jean Renoir, will have fewer laughs. There are funny bits, but his satire, though not double-toned, is fairly asinine at times; there is a definite parallel between a slaughter sequence (i.e. a hunting scene) and the human condition in the chateau.

As "Nation" (Feb. 18, 1961) put it, the film "plays the fool with convention and dignity, mocks sentiment and honor, and at the end shows a drop or two of blood on the clown's breast."

Regarded as perhaps Renoir's greatest film and a masterpiece of cinema, Rules of the Game, in French with English subtitles, will be shown Sunday, April 26, in Perkins at 8 p.m. Non-members are as usual welcome for 75c at the door.

Burton, von Helms to Star In Experimental 'Faustus'

The Tragical Historie of Doctor Faustus, Marlowe's second endeavor, followed Tamburlaine (1587) almost immediately. This play, however, represents more than just the intense passion for acquiring monetary wealth which was such an acute predilection of the Elizabethan ferment and expansion. It was, over and beyond this, an attack on the antiquated concept of feudalism and its principal cohort, the Church of England. It is a challenge to the entire philosophic concept of this era. In this sense, Faustus becomes a symbol of the Age of Enlightenment, the belief that man was finite and had no control of nature.

Faustus himself is a man who would be greater than mere mortals; for he would know all things and have all knowledge. He demands of his sweet Mercurio the not only books of "spells and incantations" but also books "where I might see all characters and planets of the heavens, that I might know (all) their motions and dispositions." His greatest sacrifice of this desire is in the end where Faustus, rather than surrender himself up to the Lord of the East and the High Sheriffs of Hell, offers in frantic compensation to "burn my books."

Marlowe, vividly portraying this greatness, this tragic flaw and finally this failure of Faustus, makes him more than a literary giant; it makes him human and in so doing obtains our final sympathy. Furthermore, with the introduction of new techniques of writing, the play itself clearly illustrates not only the author's extraordinary genius (he was only twenty-four at the time), but also shows us that Dr. Faustus is a literary manifestation of an intellectual movement which made the work something more than typical of its time and paved the way for the flood of Shakespeare.

A brief look behind the scenes and the historical settings show us that make up and costumes (which will be in the style of early English Renaissance) are designed by Joan Carter. The director of this play is James H. Fox, who is ably assisted by Onica Friend. The strikingly simple sets are constructed and constructed by Fred (master carpenter) Davis and Keith (Wrath) Fox. The programs are designed by James Trissel, arranged by Terry Fonville, and anagrammatically by Thomas Ross. Head of publicity is Linda von Helms. To Charles de Puy belongs the lighting effects.

The production opens on the evening of Saturday, May 2, as the chorus passes through the audience at 8:15 p.m. and up the steps on to the stage of Shove. Talking slowly, he moves to the center of the stage and informs the audience of Faustus' background. The Chorus seems to condemn the Doctor of Wittenberg who "swollen with cunning, of a self conceit," falls "to a devilish

Composer Speaks On Folk and Jazz

On Tuesday, April 28th, at 11 a.m., Dr. Lerov Ostransky, author, composer, and critic will speak at the Colorado College Forum in Olin Lecture Hall on the topic "Jazz—America's Folk Music."

Dr. Ostransky's appearance on the campus is sponsored by the Columbia Savings and Loan Association.

Dr. Ostransky brings a most interesting background to his appearance here. A graduate of the University of Puget Sound, where he is presently Composer-in-Residence, he did graduate work at New York University and received his Ph.D. at the University of Iowa.

He has lectured at colleges and universities throughout the country, has written several books, including "Anatomy of Jazz" and "Perspectives on Music," and has over 60 musical compositions to his credit.

His book "The Anatomy of Jazz" drew unanimous praise from magazines like Nation, Downbeat, and others. Dr. Ostransky's treatment of jazz relates it to classical music using classical terms.

A reviewer for the Baltimore Sun summarized the sentiments of jazz lovers and their opinion on Ostransky's book by writing: "The Anatomy of Jazz is a swing book."

Planning Session Today

An informal committee of approximately 35 students and faculty met last Friday afternoon to do some initial planning for the 1965 Symposium. A number of topics were suggested to the meeting.

These included such topics as "Poverty"; "The Negro in American Society"; "1985: a 20-year projection for American Society"; "Automation"; "The role of women in Society"; "Science as Threat or Promise"; "Industrialization"; "The American Landscape"; and certain geographic areas, such as Latin America or Canada.

There was lively discussion on the pro's and con's of some of these topics, as well as on the purpose which the Symposium itself was designed to serve. On the latter point, there was broad agreement that the Symposium should concern itself with an area of knowledge which was not covered by existing programs, that it should try to convey something new to students, faculty and outside visitors.

It was also suggested that additional efforts should be made to inform all participants ahead of time of certain basic aspects of the topic which was to be covered during Symposium Week itself.

After full discussion of some of these points, the group voted to eliminate certain topics from consideration (because they were either too specific and confined, or else too "shopworn") by much previous discussion, both on campus and in newspapers and other media).

It was decided that faculty and students should work out specific suggestions on a number of topics, that these suggestions should then be circulated, and that they should form the basis of discussion at a future meeting.

Another meeting has been called for Thursday, April 30th, at 4 p.m. in the ASCC Room, Rastall Center. Again, all students and faculty—whether or not they attended the first meeting—are urged to attend. It is hoped that a decision on the topic can be made at this meeting.

Honor Beyond the System

Present opposition to the conservative open dorm proposal has featured one prominent contradiction. The general consensus is that students cannot be trusted with moral freedom and responsibility. And yet, we live in a community openly committed to student honor in the form of the Honor System.

Colleges have often been accused of fostering the intellectual at the expense of the complete man. This charge is valid only when schools discourage development of personal honor and maturity in the more broad aspects of a student's life. Such limited honor is only of academic importance; it begins and ends in a blue book.

Honor has little meaning if it is so narrowly defined and so easily mistrusted. If an honor system can be justified in our quest for truth, it must also be justified in a more personally significant pursuit: the quest for a good life. Our concept of honor is inextricably bound with our personal philosophies. To separate the "real" from the "academic" is to proclaim that what we learn is distinct from what we live.

Colorado College is dedicated to education and educating, terms more far ranging than mere classroom participation. If we are to believe in the Honor System, we must do more than laud it; we must incorporate it into our lives.—Heckman

This year's Parents' Weekend promises to be the most successful of all. A committee headed by Bill Greeley has made extensive preparations for the event, and plans include many more interesting activities for the visiting parents with the emphasis on what CC actually is, and how it functions, rather than an ideal showcase carefully constructed for one weekend. The success of such a project involves the cooperation of the entire student body in welcoming parents and showing them all parts of the school.

The committee deserves a full measure of praise for their efforts. We can only hope that student response is as excellent as student planning.

Library to Battleground

In medieval Europe, the church was a sanctuary from battle. The building and its immediate surroundings were clearly understood by all parties to a combat to be outside the fray, and any individual protected by this sacred place could not be touched. Violations of this rule were so few that one of them—Henry II's assassination of Thomas Becket in Canterbury—continues to reverberate as an example of infamy.

It is sometimes objected, by critics of modern academic life, that we hold nothing sacred and is a canard. To the scholar and the student, the library is a holy place, its books are sacred objects, and the buildings and grounds which house them must be above all non-intellectual frays.

In last week's ritual of spring, some of the communicants either forgot or are so unfortunate as never to have learned, about libraries. If it were not for the quick footwork of Robin Rudolf, the calm good sense of Eunice Toussaint, and the thoughtfulness of a number of female students, the joyous waters of spring would have irreparably damaged some irreplaceable books.

We are all products of a wealthy mass-production civilization, in which the easiest thing in the world is to repair or replace what is broken. It may be hard to fix firmly in mind that scholarly books are not mass produced, that most of them are out of print, that they cannot be replaced. Water fights are to celebrate the rising of the sap, not to destroy the finest achievements of Western culture.

THE LIBRARY MUST BE OUT OF BOUNDS—THE LIBRARY COMMITTEE

Paul Kutische, Ellen Claydon, William Champion, Susan Hile

Dear Editors:

Students are people. Perhaps, in fact, they are more human than any other age group. Younger people have not yet learned to accept responsibilities, and older people have nearly stopped growing in an intellectual and spiritual sense. Because of this, it is especially important that the college treat its students as fellow humans.

To maintain that Colorado College is being run not as a citadel of human learning, but as a factory for the development of a vital natural resource. There is a great difference in the two attitudes. An administration that wishes a vibrant human experience to take place on its campus does all it can to extend freedom in all areas. It is not afraid of people who think differently from itself, and in fact encourages such creativity. It does not disdain student life, but jumps in feet first to absorb some of the vitally important lessons to be learned from youth. It does not impose insulting regulations upon details in the lives of individuals, nor does it force them to live in closely-packed identical units. We do not want ticky-tacky students to graduate from Colorado College, intellectually barren because of the uniformly uninspiring life they have led on campus. People rise to what is expected of them. When the administration equates docility and uniformity with maturity, and enforces this "maturity," it displays its low opinion of students. Instead, as John T. Rule of M.I.T. has written, make reasonable rules and punish the guilty afterwards. Reward those who accept responsibility by giving them freedom. Permit the students to run their own lives, and perhaps more of the college as well. We really have little to lose, and much to gain, by a more humanistic attitude on the part of the administration towards its students.—David Gore

To the Editor:

I am particularly anxious that all interested students have an opportunity to participate in the discussions which will lead up to a choice of topic for the 1965 Symposium, and I take this means of issuing a cordial invitation to them to attend the second meeting of the group, which will take place on Thursday, April 30th, at 4 p.m. in the ASCC Room.

We have many excellent suggestions for a topic, and I am quite confident that we can select one which will really be worthwhile for us to organize. The group that chooses from the various alternatives (many of which the members of the group themselves suggest) is an entirely informal and voluntary one, but it is my hope that it be broadly representative of very many ideas and opinions on this campus.

Therefore I would be grateful to have any interested student attend the meeting on the 30th. Sincerely yours, Fred A. Sondermann

To the Editor:

For anyone who might have wondered why Carl Orff should watch out for Mr. Jenkins, be shouldn't. The final draft of the review that I submitted to the TIGER read Robert Shaw which makes considerably more sense, unless Mr. Shaw's name is not to be used without his written permission, may I suggest that the precious proof reader who substituted Carl Orff, think to consult the author in cases like this.

Respectfully yours, Horace Work

To the Editor:

In my article about the CC work camp on the Apache Reservation, you somehow left out my reference to Dr. Paine. Richard Paine of the faculty, was our leader, providing valuable services which were vital to the success of the project. We are all indebted to him, and nothing else was said at least this time have been.

Sincerely, Jonathan Hetzel

Former Student Describes Life in Japan

My life is too big to spill all, but I'll try to skewer juicy parts for you. I am in Japan—have been here since last July. School is not finished and cannot efficiently be completed until I decide where I want to go to social work grad school and what I want to study there. I am happy out of school.

Studying is still fine, but not in the parchment atmosphere of college—and I says this after being at Cal which is certainly less parchment than most schools.

There's too much love, too many beautiful people to meet in the world to be happy sitting within four walls with a book. While the arts still fascinate me and I continue to occasionally play with them, more and more dance is being forsaken. Instead, I rush toward some sort of peace or social work for a career. My talents lie here, not in art.

I came on an immigrant ship, third class. There I was introduced to Japanese food, bathing habits and so forth. Rice and pickled radish of the worst sort. I quickly tired of. The public uproar where everyone splashes around in a big tub together I quickly became addicted to.

Yet, I never managed to gracefully dress in my second story 2' by 5' bunk while men stood around on all sides. After two weeks and one flower-dropping, sun-basking day in Hawaii I arrived in Japan. My purpose: as a workcamp for an international organization, SOL.

When I disembarked, I expected a void of emptiness—no people to meet me, inability to read and speak the strange language surrounding me. Yet, I was lucky. Someone was there and that was my first introduction to Japanese hospitality—offers, offers, offers. Please stay at my house, eat dinner with me, can I take you shopping? wouldn't you like to see the famous sights of Tokyo?

But from these offers I gave my attention and time to one woman who had come a thousand

Hodges Nabs Cycle Drags

Bill Hodges of Aspen, Colorado, won the first annual CC Cycle Drag from the corner of Cache La Poudre and Cascade to the north corner of Tutt Library, clocked at some 65 to 70 mph.

The race was sponsored by Hodges and Ed Loosli with the looser putting up a keg of beer for an intra-frat blast.

Some 100 to 150 people witnessed the event which experienced high tension when the event was scheduled for 6:30 p.m. Monday evening and Hodges arrived 20 minutes late.

It was a two out of three event in which Hodges took all, but many felt Loosli should have gotten the credit for the first race when Hodges stalled out.

Rumor has it that Big Keith Fox would like to challenge for the keg because he thinks "White Bonnevilles go faster than them finkey green ones," although he was having electrical difficulty with his machine at the time.

to me in the states, Kazuko) to properly introduce me to Japan. Geisha houses, Kabuki, various shrines, night clubs, some of the best restaurants—I saw all—even got mildly sick on some contraption in an amusement park at the woman's insistence that it would be fun. Mrs. Kosugi even paved for my stay at YWCA after she left Tokyo. I was still gasping at the generosity of the Japanese as I climbed aboard a train for the South and my first work camp.

At the workcamp we got the same generosity. We worked in a rich pottery community which exports its wares around the world. We cut grass, lived in a Buddhist Temple, heard mind concerts, observed tea ceremonies, and folk danced with the people. This was all fine, but the beer parties and presents came too often.

Here generosity was overdue. We felt receiving gifts was one of our daily functions, and the joy of such soon melted. It was like brushing your teeth every day. We also ate so much watermelon that we called it a type of social service. For two weeks we worked from 5:00-9:00 with appropriate meal breaks, discussed with local people in the evenings, and generally exhausted ourselves.

We had two Brazilians (one a young translator from Japan to Portuguese), four Taiwanese, (who can't or won't talk politics because their government suppresses freedom of speech), three Americans, and one Japanese. Certainly the Japanese were the best campers. They tried to be friendly to all and worked the hardest, but still the camp failed. Campers didn't establish communication between themselves nor with the community.

Afterwards I went to Hiroshima for Aug. 6, Peace Day. It's the anniversary of the bomb dropping. The city is peace crazy! There are organizations to help the survivors, to keep US submarines from landing at Japanese ports, to send Japanese abroad to advertise the disasters of the war—the abstract ideas for this type of work seemed valid to me, but in practice the activity seemed calculated to make everyone feel guilty.

From the guilty complex it is hoped that action for peace will be initiated. On this particular day the various organizations held rallies, speeches or protest demonstrations. The Zengakoren, the peace-minded radical student movement, began snake dances in the street. Students get in long lines and then

Renoir Powerful Director

Jean Renoir, director of this week's Colorado College Film Society presentation, Rules of the Game, and author of the recent book, Renoir, My Father, was born in Montmartre. After sitting with long red hair for his father to paint and mixing with the great artists and writers of the time, it was natural for Jean to turn to the arts; he became a ceramist. Strangely enough, it was World War I which led to his interest in film-making. In the cavalry, he apparently suffered a leg wound which put him in sick bay, where he had excellent time and opportunity to become a film viewer. Subsequently, when on leave, he was watching up to eight a day. His first opportunity behind the camera, however, came when he was transferred to the French Air Force and ordered to fly over and film enemy installations. Untiring his experiences he was soon making small ceramic figures for other French directors.

From these humble beginnings in the cinematic art, he produced and directed his first film, La Fille de l'Eau, in 1924. In his early films, he employed patterns of light and dark in order to create a mystical effect, but he was unsatisfied. "It has become clear to me that man is rooted in the soil that nourishes him. He is bound to the conditions that form his body and soul and chained to the landscape that dazzles his eyes."

His view being so close to that of Zola's, Renoir took Nana as the subject of his first realistic endeavor. It pleased the critics but enraged the public so that the director was forced by the laws of economics to produce a series employing purely box-office technique. Two more attempts to present something artistic to the public, La Chienne and The Lower Depths, both caused riots.

In fact, it was a film which caused Renoir to emigrate. In 1936, he made an anti-Fascist film entitled La Marseillaise; in 1941 as the Nazis approached Paris, he felt it prudent to leave. Taking his Brazilian wife, Dido, and his father's model, Gabrielle, he fled to America, settled in Hollywood, and became a naturalized citizen.

Jean, however, was careful to distinguish himself as a "film-maker" among film moguls, a craftsman among bankers, real estate agents, and manufacturers. His method of direction is to explain as little as possible to the actors in order to allow them to "live" the film. Location shooting was important to him also as a means of giving a spirit to the actors and crews impossible to attain in the studio.

Rules of the Game, to be shown Sunday, the 20th, at 8 p.m. in Perkins, was one of the last pictures he made before leaving France. One of his best films, it deals satirically with his favorite subject, humanity, and what happens to men of feeling in a society of no feeling.

Allegrucci Named CC Sociology Prof.

Robert L. Allegrucci, instructor in sociology at Park College, has been named sociology instructor at Colorado College.

Allegrucci, 30, will undertake his new assignment in September. He holds bachelor's and master's degrees from Kansas State College at Pittsburg, and is a Ph.D. candidate at the University of Mo.

The new Colorado College instructor has been an instructor in sociology and a research assistant at the University of Missouri.

As a research assistant, he helped to design and carry out a statewide study of community leadership patterns.

Cities May Be Governed

"The thing that's so great about the democratic process is that things get done that people want done. This makes politics the greatest calling of all—greater even than the ministry." With these words Mark Keane, City Manager of Tucson, Arizona, Tuesday night, impressed on his sparse audience the importance of the city manager and the politician in general.

His lecture, "Can the Modern City Be Governed," was sponsored by the Murray Seasongood Good Government Fund of Cincinnati, Ohio. It was designed to interest young people in civic government careers. He first made some historical comments on the city as an institution. The city is never mentioned in our constitution, yet the health of nations depends on cities. Jefferson despised the growing cities as not being the hope of democracy. Alexis de Toqueville believed that the lack of central population centers in 1830 aided natural democracy and prevented the tyranny of the majority. But today more than half our national population lives on one per cent of the land, and the ideal democracy that Jefferson and de Toqueville wanted is impossible to attain. The function of today's city is threefold: it must solve the education problem; foster individuality, thus allowing the ability of the human being to develop; and make the city more than a "vast prison of unconnected souls." Under the city manager-city council form of government, these functions are achieved largely through the departments of public works, water and sewage, fire, police, library, finance, city attorney and others.

The job of city manager is one of long, trying, and challenging hours. Mr. Keane meets with the Tucson City Council in an open meeting every Monday from 9:30 a.m. until the work is finished—sometimes not until 9:00 p.m. In addition he must put up with the omnipresent press which sometimes harasses him but with whom he must be patient. He must give speeches to the ladies' aid societies, confer with union agents and the Chamber of Commerce, and occasionally greet the chief of the Papago Indian Reservation.

"The problems never get completely solved," he says. But in his position Keane has gained new confidence in the democratic processes: "The people usually always choose the right path—the people cannot be fooled."—Bill Campbell

Guys and Dolls

If you are interested in CC social life (or lack of same) or in New Student Orientation (and any of its various activities) the ASCC Social Coordinating Committee may have a place for you. Bill Mrazek is planning now for next semester, as SCC chairman for 1964-65. The particular concern of this ASCC committee is with social life and area that has been severely criticized at CC this year. The hope for next year's group is that as a result of this criticism, constructive suggestions and projects may be developed. There are some ideas that can be used, such as after-dinner dances or Friday night movies, but much remains to be done.

New Student Orientation will also be under the jurisdiction of this group. They will work specifically with final details for the outlined New Student Week. Working with the administration and faculty, it is hoped that orientation will encompass more than the first week of school, providing orientation activities for the first few months.

There are two available positions for the "student-body-at-large" on the Social Coordinating Committee, and there will also be two freshmen coordinators selected to oversee orientation. Applications are available at Rastall desk.

move in snake fashion saying swish, swish, swish. This style of demonstration is conducive to creating strong group solidarity and thus violence if any one tries to interrupt. The police did so, naturally some brisk fighting ensued. I almost got trampled.

More impressive, but less exciting were the thousands of brilliantly colored paper crane leis freely given to foreigners, and generally exchanged between all. Also, in the evening everyone bought a colored lantern with a candle inside, and set it on the river to float out to sea. In the midst of blackness a riot of colors created a scattered polka-dot effect. Hardly any other ceremony has moved me so much. The Japanese have very nice ways of doing things sometimes. But all was not beauty and brotherly feelings.

I stepped into the Hiroshima Museum and sickened upon entering. A vague gallery of all the men who contributed to atomic science, a myriad of diagrams and charts about the area of damage of the bomb, pieces of pottery and stone with shadows imprinted upon them from the blast, and then what makes one physically sick, gory pictures of victims and lumpy ke-loid scars preserved in formaldehyde.

I thought at the time that the Japanese don't have such a nice way of doing things as I saw children being carefully guided through this memorial to man's perverse mind.

After Hiroshima, off to my second project—building a garden on the seacoast. We worked in a port city relatively void to foreigners so we didn't get as much attention as we had in the first camp. In fact we had little contact with the city folk. Instead, we had a nice, relaxed time getting to know each other—even swimming in the sea during warm afternoons. It was here that I realized the great difference in working habits of Orientals and Westerners.

The "Western Bloc" (a Canadian, a Britisher, and myself) forever asked, "Why are we doing this job?" or "Isn't there a better way to plant this grass?" In contrast, the Japanese, Taiwanese, and Koreans were just content in doing the work set before them and not asking questions.

Here I also fell in love with the Shakuhachi, a hollowed flute. I have not been overly enchanted with other traditional Japanese instruments, but this flute has a haunting, distant, solitary aura about it that could fascinate those strange people in the world who are musically hard-hearted.

From this project I moved on to the sacred, hallowed ground of Kyoto—there to meet a friend of my brother's from Princeton who is studying Chinese literature in Taipei. We wandered from temple to shrine to museum to park. We would look for a while, trying to avoid the masses of Kuroi Ari (I named the school children that because they all—from grammar school to college—wear black uniforms. Literally the phrase means, "black ant") and other Japanese tourists, all avidly taking pictures. When tired, we'd perch on a railing and Jim would give me a summary of a period of history, or tell me about Buddhist influence in painting, or a snatch about architecture. Although his main field is China, he knows enough about Japan so that he made an excellent private guide. One day we dared his fluency in Japanese (at this point he could speak a few phrases, I none) and flitted off to a temple buried in the mountains. After three wrong turns we arrived on a misty, rainy afternoon at Murayama. From the descriptions and lack of information people had about it, we assumed that almost no people got there. But sure enough, the ever present admission fee was collected.

Notice!

The Circulo Hispanico Cultural will hold their Spring Party Friday, April 24, at 8:00 p.m., Palmer House Motel. Transportation will be available to students between 7:30 and 7:45 at Rastall Center. Everyone interested in Spanish is welcome. English or Spanish is acceptable.

We then scurried off behind a shaven headed priest with a flashlight. We went from small temple to small temple examining the most exquisite wooden statuary collection we ever saw in Japan. The ritual before entering each building included taking off your shoes and bowing several times. When we walked in we knelt before a Buddha while the priest said a small prayer and then dutifully reeled off a not-so-well memorized history of the present subject of perusal.

We would then get up and scan the figure using the flashlight for eyes. This meant we saw by sections. But still what we saw was arresting—Buddhas of sublime grace and repose—guardian deities in every sort of shape and wearing a variety of expressions. Some were beautiful in their grotesqueness, some in their refinement. Certainly most were art treasures. How strange that they should be isolated from the main stream of tourist traffic. We were among the trees and on a hill. We were dazed, found some 500 steps leading to a bird-nest type roost climbing to the top of the slope, drenched over the view of mountains and artistically arranged, yet heavy foliage. Places like this could keep me in Japan forever.—Carrie Dugan

U. of Chicago Speaker This Sunday

The Preacher in Shove Chapel this coming Sunday morning will be the Reverend Harvey Arnold, Librarian, Swift Library, the University of Chicago.

Mr. Arnold possesses the Bachelor of Divinity and the Masters degree in Theology and also the Master degree in Library Science from the University of Chicago.

He has previously served as the Librarian of Chicago Theological Seminary and now is the head librarian of the Philosophical and Theological Library at the University of Chicago. Not only does he store books and catalogue them but he also reads them.

One of his primary theological interests is Eschatology and he will preach on the subject, in the Chapel on Sunday morning at 11:00 a.m. His sermon will be titled "In Whom Do We Hope?" Another of his interests is the effect of modern scientific theories upon religious world views.

He will therefore speak at a Religious Forum at 5:00 p.m. in the WPS room, Rastall Center, followed by a discussion on the "World Without End? The Impact of Modern Scientific Cosmology Upon Religious Faith". All members of the community are invited to attend.

Goethe's 'Faust' to Be Presented, Discussed

Professor Ulrich K. Goldsmith, Chairman of the Department of Germanic Languages and Literatures at the University of Colorado will deliver a lecture—"Seven Ambiguities in Goethe's Faust"—on Tuesday, April 28, at 8:00 p.m. in Olin Lecture Hall.

This lecture will be of particular interest to the college community since Goethe's Faust is discussed not only in German literature classes but also in courses in English literature and "Freedom and Authority". Moreover, there will be a performance of Marlowe's Dr. Faustus by the CC Experimental Theatre on May 2.

The lecture is sponsored by the Department of German and the Public Lectures Committee.

Due to the limited capacity of Olin Lecture Hall it is strongly recommended that students plan to arrive ahead of the scheduled time since the general public is also invited.

VILLAGE IDIOT

By Caroline Creyke

Don't ask me why, but the Cooper has seen fit(s)(?) to hold Kissin Cousins for another week. Tom is still here too. I've already seen it twice, but would rather see a Fanny-grin thrice than an Elvis (twich) once.

The Broadmore gets Act I (with Jason Robards Jr. and George Hamilton), Hollywood's adaptation of Moss Hart's autobiography of the same title. The book was terrific, the stars are cool, and smoking is allowed in this theatre. I'd recommend seein' it.

The Ute has returned to normalcy, that is, except on Thursdays when they'll be showing operettas. The first of these, The Great Waltz, is this week. For the rest of the week, you can see Shock Treatment (Carol Lynley, Stewart Whitman, and Lauren Bacall).

Soldiers in the Rain leaves the Chief on the 29th so that Flight From Ashia (Richard Widmark and Yul Brynner) and The Beatles Come to Town can pop in.

At the drive-ins, Palm Springs Weekend, Running Man, The Prize, Taras Bulba, The Victors, Nature's Strangest Creatures (Disney), Kings of the Sun, Stolen Hours, Shock Corridor, Bullet for Billy the Kid, Who's Been Sleeping in My Bed, The Lion, Don't Give Up the Ship, Love on a Pillow (Bardot), Straight Jacket and Charade (at the SkyView starting the 29th).

The decision is in the hands of a faculty committee, but cannot be made until they receive the estimates from the fix-it company (who are all tied up with the World's Fair and can't bother about us until June Grish). So, since this seems to be the season for petitions, I'm going to circulate one. If you'd rather have English bells than electric chimes, please sign it.

GREEK WEEK

The Sigma Chis held their annual Sweetheart Formal last weekend at the Colorado Springs Country Club. Miss Martha Stevenson of Kappa Alpha Theta was crowned Sweetheart of Sigma Chi for the second year.

The Sigma Chis also held elections last week. The results were: Mick Ramsey, president; Jon Prouty, vice president; Page Whyte secretary; Steve Kopesky, house manager; Sherm Malkerson, rush chairman; Bud Flemming, intramurals chairman. Frank Bond was recently elected captain of the CC lacrosse team.

In the current Sigma Chi lecture series, Dr. Gamer and Mr. Jenkins joined the Fraternity for dinner and a discussion afterwards. This Saturday the Sigma Chis are holding their annual service project at the Colorado Springs Country Club.

Alpha Phi Becky Holden passed a candle announcing her engagement to Jay Albert Shideler. Last week was inspiration week at the Alpha Phi House. Initiation was held on Sunday. Sunday the Alpha Phis and the Sigma Chis retreated to Manitou Lake for a steak fry. In the Kappa Kappa Gamma House last week was also inspiration week. Seventeen pledges were initiated last Saturday. Two weeks ago Saturday the Kappas and Kappa Sigs joined in a beverage bust in the Colorado hills.

The Thetas would like to congratulate the Beth Amberg and Carolyn Voorheis for being accepted for study in France next year. Also Miss Martha Stevenson was elected "Sweetheart of Sigma Chi" for the second year.

The Thetas and the Betas had a picnic in the mountains last Sunday. The Theta pledge class was quite "lively" last Saturday at six a.m. as they ran through the halls of Loomis, waking actives (and everyone else) to announce their sneak.

The Phi Deltas started last week-end with a kitchen crew sneak with the Gamma Phis Friday afternoon and night. Saturday night was the scene of one of the noted informal Phi Delt basement parties.

After B.F.'ing Chuck White at the Freshman Slave Sale, the Phi-lets joined the Kappa neophytes to pull a Bloody Mary Breakfast Sunday morning.

Sunday afternoon and night the Phis and the Kappas had a steak fry with a hay ride afterwards.

Monday night the Phi Deltas and the Kappas held a dessert at the Kappa House in honor of the pinning of Dave Van Ness and Molly King.

Schlessman Swimming Pool To Be Dedicated Tomorrow

Colorado College will dedicate its new Schlessman Swimming pool at 8 p.m. Saturday, April 25. The olympic-size pool and the building which houses it will be named for the Gerald L. Schlessman family of Denver.

College officials said the public is invited to the dedication ceremonies which will include swimming demonstrations.

Participating in the ceremonies will be Gerald L. Schlessman, prominent Denver businessman and a member of the Colorado College class of 1917; his wife, Mrs. Schlessman '21, son, Lee Schlessman '50; and his daughter, Mrs. Susan Schlessman Fredericks '52.

College officials taking part in the dedication will be Armin B.

Tennis Team Is Victorious

The Colorado College tennis team opened up the season leaving the Colorado tennis world gasping. Last Tuesday in the first time in history, CC beat Colorado University five matches to four.

And last Saturday the team won the Great Plains Tournament in Nebraska, beating Doane, Hastings and Wesleyan by amassing 14 points with runner up Hastings getting only 7 points.

In the CU match Bill Yost was the first to win with an easy 6-4, 6-2 victory. Cy Dyer played beautiful tennis but lost a close match to one of the top three players in the Rocky Mountain area by 2-6, 6-2, 10-8.

Duncan MacNaughton also played good tennis but lost a close match 6-5, 8-6. Bill Sogwell lost an inspired match 7-5, 6-4. At this point things looked a little bleak.

Then Jim Heibarger won a close match 6-2, 8-6, and Bob Bohac pulled out a 6-2, 5-7, 6-1 victory. With the doubles left to play the score was tied at three all.

In the first doubles match Bill Yost and Cy Dyer got into some trouble and could not get out of it and lost 6-4, 10-8.

Then came the highlights of the match. Bill Cogswell and Jim Heibarger lost their first set 6-0 but came back to win the match 6-6, 6-2, 7-5.

They finished with the Duncan MacNaughton-Bob Bohac match at 4-5, in the third and final set. With some brilliant clutch playing they won their match 6-4, 3-6, 7-5 and CC had made history.

As they left the CU coach said, "Needless to say, we didn't expect to lose today." Coach Richard Bradley of CC added, "The boys played some highly inspired tennis. This is a great way to start out as coach."

Back in Nebraska on Saturday Cy Dyer won the Singles Championship and Bob Bohac and Bill Yost sailed to an easy doubles victory. Duncan MacNaughton lost a close semifinal singles match, CC added the Great Plains Championship to their record.

This week they play CSC, CSU and DU. If they are able to win these they will be the undisputed best team in Colorado. And no one seems ready to bet against them.

exercise," performing magic above all of "learning's golden gifts." Later the Chorus returns after Faustus has made his pact with Lucifer and tells the audience (between scenes 5 and 6) of Faustus' numerous exploits and his tiring journey to the papal court. The Chorus seems ironic in his discourse and in his next speech between scenes 9 and 10. He implies that Faustus has abused his power by debauching himself with cheap court tricks. Thus, Marlowe's hero is not the innocent victim of Lucifer and his minister, Mephistopheles.

The Deputy whom Faustus conjures up is suffering from having lost "the eternal joys of heaven." In his despair, Mephistopheles forgets his assignment to secure the Master Doctor's Soul and keeps him from repenting. "Leave these frivolous demands!" he warns the amateur in the Grove, but the scholar is too curious and far too proud.

He ridicules "his" Mephistopheles for his being weak so that the devil has time to pull himself together.

As the play goes on through the sundry adventures at the pope's table and the Court of Carolus V of Germany, Mephistopheles becomes more desperate for his master's soul.

Carolus V is depicted as weak and lonely ruler who must beg the magician to conjure up the spirits of Alexander The Great and his paramour. He feels inadequate in his role and can only project his sense of greatness to the more illustrious rulers of the past. As the scene closes, a gray bearded bunched ancient slowly shuffles across stage. Who is he?

The mystery is later resolved when the Old Man counsels Faustus to repent. Only faith and humility are necessary. "Break the drop blood, and mingle it with tears." Nevertheless, age and wisdom fail, for the sinner cannot resolve the conflict between wanting to repent and desiring the punishment of eternal damnation for his "vile and loathsome filthy"ness." Read the Tiger next week and discover the exciting climax.

Track Team Loses Twice

The Colorado College Track team opened its season with two consecutive losses, one being a conference meet between Adams State, Western State, Colorado Mines, and CC.

The entire performance of the Tiger Team was disappointing in that we were not any match for the high talent and depth that Adams State was able to supply, especially in the shorter running events.

Baseball Team Is Victorious

To the surprise of many living team managers CC opened the season with two smashing defeats over Regis College 14-3 and 16-7, displaying good long ball hitting as well as a .401 team average to this date.

This 4-1 record of Coach Johnson's team is rumored to be the best successful start in the history of CC baseball by the elephantine memory of Dr. Frank Flood.

Today the Tigers take on Adams State who have also beaten Mines twice and lost 3 out of 4 to Southern Colorado. Friday and Saturday the Tigers take on Colorado State College which is annually the best team in the conference and one of the best in the country, ranking close to Southern Cal and New Mexico.

Rene Van Putten, a seldom used dorky player, has converted his blades to sticks and is the best hitting regular, going to bat 18 times for 5 hits and a .556 average.

A Short Story
At the Broadmoor

New Tournament of Cycles Will Include Racers from Outside CC

Another of the traditional Parents' Weekend two-wheeled thrilloramas will erupt on the afternoon of Saturday, May 2. CC's four-year old "Tournament of Cycles and Junkie Classic" series threatens to lay waste the newly found race course at Colorado Springs' Memorial Park.

Previous racers will be happy to learn that the hellish hills of the Garden of the Gods (race site of previous years) have been superseded by the shorter hills, sharper corners, and better all-around spectator vision of Memorial Park.

Three races will be run: the Junkie Classic (a two-mile, two lap affair for 1 and three speed bikes, including tandems and unicycles); a novice event, a four mile race for ten and fifteen speed machines whose riders have had little competition experience; and the Tournament Classic, this year a 10 mile, intercollegiate event for the experienced riders of Colorado. The first two races will be limited to Colorado College students.

The Junkie race has traditionally been the most colorful, competitive, and absurd event of the series, taxing competitors' ingenuity, strength, and sense of humor. Due to the new course, speeds should be more astonishing than ever. Whole "suderias" of dormitory teams have invaded this spectacle in the past.

The four-mile Novice race is a new addition and should see a big starting lineup, if the hoards of new racing bikes on campus are any indication of rider enthusiasm.

The ten-mile Tournament has

The Possum Trots

By Herman Whiton

Parked in the rear of the physical plant department is a vehicle familiar to all athletes on this campus. This conveyance of which I speak is the school bus which transports CC athletes to all sections of the West.

Affectionately termed the "agony wagon" by all those who have ridden any length of time on it, this pleasure palace on wheels has traversed the Rocky Mountains and the Great Plains carrying a payload of CC competitors to their various fields of combat.

Last weekend I had the pleasure of accompanying the track team and the tennis squad on a delightful twelve hour voyage in the "agony wagon" to Hastings, Nebraska. The journey itself proved quite fascinating as the usual rigors of such a trip were punctuated by several other extraneous factors.

The ride began on an ominous note when it was discovered that Mr. Torrens had secreted twenty portions of his delectable Shepherd's Pie on the bus to "comfort" the boys on their arduous journey.

After fifteen minutes of frantic searching, Coach Frank Flood discovered the source of an obscene odor which had permeated the bus to such an extent that three members of the tennis team were writhing in the aisle in convulsions.

Coach Flood promptly disposed of Mr. Torrens' lunch and its remnants can still be seen strewn across Highway 85-87 between here and Castle Rock.

Furthermore, the bus trip was spiced by such well-known campus personalities as the versatile Lee Muller, the opinionated and puerile Ed Loosli, the washpish Tony McGinnis, the loathsome Farrell B. Howell, and that churchish round mound of sound—Rasco Welch.

The tedium of such a lengthy journey was shattered by the blatant Mr. Howell from whose lips issued such scurrilous language that he was asked to leave the bus and has since been dismissed from the track team.

Ed Loosli spent the entire trip reading and re-reading his extensive collection of True Romances comic books and surreptitiously glancing at his picture of Nancy Bowens.

A minor crisis arose at our first stop in Goodland, Kansas, when Mr. Flood, gaily attired in his black and white saddle shoes, Bermuda shorts, and carrying his dainty little pink overnight valise, was held for questioning by the local authorities. Mr. Flood was soon released, however, when he succeeded in convincing the local constabulary that he actually was a member of the college contingent and not just loitering around the refreshment area.

The track meet was not as eventful as the bus ride as CC finished fourth in a quadrangular meet behind Doane, Nebraska Wesleyan and Hastings.

CC's only winners were the indefatigable Tony McGinnis who broke the school record in the two mile at 10:02.1 and Abby Afonja who was victorious in the hop-step and jump.

Schidler, Norris and Loosli picked up second places in the 880, javelin and high hurdles respectively. Rasco Welch, who looks and smells like a jaundiced latrine rat, temporarily stifled his opponents and gnawed down a third place in the discus.

The only event worthy of mention on the return trip occurred when Ed Loosli was forced to ride in the luggage rack by his teammates because of his customary failure to shower after a meet. Ed fell asleep and was forgotten when we reached school.

To my knowledge he is still in the luggage rack on the bus and right now is probably on his way to Ogden, Utah with the rifle team.

Students Asked to Support Kennedy Memorial Library

This weekend Colorado College students will be asked to support a student campaign to honor the memory of the late John F. Kennedy.

The purpose of this campaign is to express the college's respect and admiration for President Kennedy by establishing a monument which will be used by future generations. Since the President was leader of American youth, college students on over 2,000 campuses throughout the country are united in a single effort: a national student drive to raise a substantial portion of the funds needed to build the John F. Kennedy Library. These funds will be used for a specific room of the library which will reflect President Kennedy's influence on youth and education. It will be given to the national government as part of the National Archives.

The site of the library is to be on the bank of the Charles River in Boston. In addition to an austere and beautiful memorial room, it will include several working comments, a museum, an archive, and an institute.

The institute of the library will further one of President Kennedy's deepest concerns—his continuing effort to bring together the world of ideas and the world of affairs. His purpose consistently animated his life, and no cause could better honor his memory.

SCULPTOR HERMAN SNYDER will have a one man show at the Fine Arts Center of 12 works of sculpture and relief painting. The show opens this Sunday afternoon, along with an exhibition of contemporary art circulated by the Museum of Modern Art.

Where Is Hattiesburg?

Rev. Paul Murphy Tells of Voter Registration Drive in Mississippi

Last Friday evening, Rev. Murphy of the Colorado Springs Stratton Church told of his recent experiences with voter registration efforts in Hattiesburg, Miss. He wanted to make clear to the college his reasons for participating in the picketings and other activities, which resulted ultimately in his imprisonment with a number of other white and Negro co-workers on April 10th on charges of violating an anti-picketing ordinance. Their arrest, he made painfully clear, was a deliberate and unconstitutional strong-arm tactic by the white officials of Hattiesburg.

burg designed to prevent the great number of unregistered but qualified Negro citizens from coming to the County Court House and being placed on the voter rolls.

Rev. Murphy explained that there has been such an appalling amount of intimidation of Negroes and outright brutality on the part of the white citizenry in Hattiesburg that many Negroes are literally taking either job or life in hand by simply appearing on the Court House steps to register. These steps are called the "white man's steps" by the Negroes in Hattiesburg. The procedure is as follows.

If a Negro passes the examination and qualifies as a voting citizen his name and address appear in the newspaper in a column which is reserved for announcing prospective voters. But his name is not yet officially placed on the rolls. As Murphy explained, this gives local thugs the opportunity to terrorize Negro homes at night with homemade bombs or by riddling front windows with bullets, and also time for Negroes to "change their minds." This is only one of the means by which Hattiesburg "law" thwarts the drive for equality and fair treatment.

Theron Lynd, the county clerk who has been indicted several times for unfair voter registration practices, has now been found guilty of having disqualified Negro applicants for not being able to answer correctly the question "How many bubbles are there in a bar of soap?" Another example of "lawful" intimidation is the case of an SNCC registration worker, a white Harvard student, who was

Composer Speaks On Jazz Roots

By Anne Perry

Tuesday morning in Olin Lecture Hall, Dr. Leroy Ostransky, composer-in-residence at the University of Puget Sound, delivered a lecture entitled "Jazz—America's Folk Music."

Speaking with wit and humor Ostransky traced the development of jazz from the earliest forms in New Orleans through the development of progressive jazz.

Folk music must be a synthesis of primitive and urban elements and a part of an historical continuity, said the composer. This is not true of the folk music so widely performed today, or of country and western music, both of which are excessively commercialized.

Jazz, according to Ostransky, is the only authentic folk music of America. It has survived, despite opposition from big business, the church, and other conservative elements in society for two reasons.

The first is that it is a synthesis. The second is that it is a means of protest. Ostransky likened the jazz spirit to truth and the ability to laugh at everything which is fake. It is hard and bitter laughter, but it is necessary and keeps the music alive.

A Myriad of Activities Planned for Parents

By Bill Greeley

Colorado College welcomes Parents to the Seventh Annual Parents' Weekend. During this weekend parents will be able to participate and observe all aspects of campus life—classes, dormitories, fraternity and sorority houses, student union activities and religious services.

Parents will also be able to meet the faculty members and other visiting parents.

The festivities will begin Thursday afternoon with registration in Rastall Center lounge; that evening the "GiCino" will be open from 9:00 to 11:00 p. m.

On Friday, classes will be open to the parents, and that afternoon informal tours will be conducted through Tutt Library and Olin Hall by student guides.

Later, students will have the opportunity to show their parents the other side of CC life at the PAC and the Hub.

Friday evening at 8:00 p. m. will be the annual Song Fest which will be followed by an informal reception in Slocum Hall.

Saturday classes will be open again to the parents until 11:00 a. m.

At this time in Shove Chapel, President Warner will give his welcoming address entitled "Life on the Campus."

That afternoon the students will have another opportunity to take part in the Parents' Weekend program in the Tournament of Cycles.

Following the Tournament, there will be a baseball game between Western State College and CC in Memorial Park, not far away, the tennis team will be playing University of New Mexico at the Garden of the Gods Country Club.

Preceding the Annual Faculty-Parent-Student dinner will be an Open House held in all the fraternities, sororities and residence halls from 4:30 to 5:30 p. m.

The dinner will be given in the Rastall Center Dining Room at 6:15 p. m.

Later in the evening, everyone is invited to attend Jim Fox's Experimental Theater Production of Dr. Faustus in Shove Chapel.

Early Sunday morning at 8:00 a. m. there will be a chuck wagon breakfast at the Garden of the Gods Pavilion.

Highlighting the breakfast will be a rock climbing demonstration by the Colorado College Mountain Club and a short talk by Dr. Reid-nelson at the history of the Pikes Peak Region.

The Parents' Weekend program will be formally concluded with a non-denominational church service in Shove Chapel at 11:00 a. m.

Math Meetings This Weekend

Colorado College is host this weekend to the annual meeting of the Rocky Mountain Section of the Mathematical Association of America.

Fifteen papers will be presented in four sessions over the two days. The papers, to be presented in Olin Hall Lecture Room, will cover a wide variety of subjects, including such specialized papers as "Hankel Transforms and Entire Functions II," "Chebyshev Lines," and "General Repeated Experimentation," as well as general topics such as "The University of Colorado Computer Center for Secondary Schools."

The meeting will be open to anyone for a fifty cent registration fee as long as there is room.

Song Fest Tonight

The judges for this year's Songfest are Mrs. Josephine Estill, Mr. Gerhart and Dr. Paul Kutsche. The 1964 Song Fest Chairman Don Bradbury, who will also be host of ceremonies. After all the songs have competed, the judges will leave to make their decisions. The Blue Key will hold its tapping ceremonies in which the new members will be announced.

Steve Sabom and Ed DeGeorge will do the announcing for Blue Key. The program will be pre-recorded live over KRCC at 8:00 and will also be broadcast again Friday night after the competition is completed.

To Make a Good Thing Better

In the past ten years, Colorado College has made tremendous academic improvement. Many more challenging courses are being offered than were offered previously. Yet, there are gaping holes in the curriculum which must be filled if CC is to give its students a good grounding in all fields. One obvious improvement would be the re-introduction of classics courses. Greek and Latin have traditionally formed an important part of the liberal arts whole. Certainly students interested in these languages or in classical literature should be given the chance to take some course in this field. The general area of Ancient History has also been sadly neglected and the present Western Civilization course offers only the briefest summary of this vast period. Asian history has recently been introduced, but any systematic history of Africa or the underdeveloped lands is not yet presented.

Colorado College cannot, by its very nature, over-specialize. However, the college should provide students with the opportunity to get a background which they will probably never have if they do not acquire it now. It is not that the school has failed, for it has progressed, but that the problem now is to make a good thing better.—Heckman

from the Chair

By Paul Carson, ASCC President

For the newly forming ASCC I want to welcome the parents who are visiting the campus this weekend. The Parents' Weekend Committee under Bill Greeley has done a tremendous job in organizing what promises to be an enjoyable and worthwhile interlude for those taking part in the activities. Also I would like particularly to call students' attention to the Kennedy Memorial Library collection being taken. Of all the memorials to our late President, this national library offers us students a most sincere way of expressing our respect for President Kennedy and the things for which he stood.

To the new class commissioners I want to extend my congratulations for emerging victorious from the tough competition that existed in all classes. The number of candidates, the types of campaigns, and the large number of students voting demonstrated an enthusiasm for present and potential ASCC programs which has not been equalled recently at CC. I hope we can take advantage of this early enthusiasm, and also the timely start given us by early elections, to organize effectively the two major and immediate tasks left us by this year's ASCC: New Student Week, and the dorm proposals. On the dorm proposal, I will only express my intention to do all I can to see the proposal accepted by the Board of Trustees and see that students accept the new responsibilities that they would accept with the proposal.

The major challenge of New Student Week is not going to be the elimination of all the traditional events. What confronts the students, faculty, administration and campus organizations is the creation of totally new approaches to important things previously left undone.

An open meeting on orientation was held last Tuesday to suggest and discuss such additions as well as the value of traditional events.

Out of this meeting came suggestions such as having student organizations serve the food, lead some discussions and direct social and recreational events at the proposed day off campus. An informal freshman-only twist and swimming party was suggested as well as a rotating all-campus dance sponsored by the Greeks in the fraternity houses. It was stressed that orientation should not last just one week but be spread over most of the semester. Discussions to be held either at first or in succeeding weeks were suggested on campus issues such as the dorm proposal and the athletic program. Follow-up discussions on freshman readings were also considered.

Hazing has been outlawed by the Committee on Undergraduate Life although it was not exactly explained what hazing included. Even though I have not been on CUL, I think it is safe to assume that freshman answers with rituals such as Kangaroo Court will not be allowed. Name tags, beanies, the breakfast, and the frosh-soph fight might remain, within the limits set by CUL. Next week the Orientation Committee will decide on and plan the 25 or 30 of us present at Tuesday's open meeting were convinced that next year's orientation promises to be the most stimulating and enjoyable introduction to CC life that we have had in recent years.

VILLAGE IDIOT

By Caroline Creyke

"It's mad! It's gay, the lusty month of May. That darling month when everyone goes blissfully astray." Have fun.

The flicks are a little better this week. "T.J." is still at the Peak, but, Gott sie dank, Elvis has gone. At the Cooper now is "South Pacific," one of Rodgers and Hammerstein's greatest.

Mitzi Gaynor may not be a Mary Martin, but the rest of the cast—Rossano Brazzi, John Kerr, France Nuyen, Ray Walston, and Juanita Hall—does a pretty great job.

At the Broadmoor is Sunday in New York. Flight From Ashia at the Chief, gives way on the sixth to From Russia With Love (an interesting title). At the Ute, is a movie I've never heard of, Gladiators, starring a man I've never heard of, Richard Harrison. But, I'll bet it's a bloody one. Their opera of the week (shown on Thursday), is The Sweethearts. If you've never seen Jeanette MacDonald and Nelson Eddy bellow and oo, this is the show to see.

At the drive-in: The Victors; Nature's Strangest Creatures; Take Her, She's Mine; Marilyn (the Marilyn Monroe photo-biography); Mary, Mary; The Days of Wine and Roses; Charade; Move Over Darling; Shock Corridor; Bullet for Billy the Kid; Beach Party; Palm Springs Weekend (I think the Western Theatre Corporation has bought these last two); Big Red; Showdown; Hot Head; and Right Hand of the Devil.

Speaking of the devil, "Dr. Faustus" is being presented by the Experimental Theatre tomorrow night. The Parents' Weekend brochure describes it as, "a play, casting both student and faculty members, which should be one of the highlights of Parents' Weekend." We shall see.

With the devil, if Mephisto can provide Faust with even one moment so beautiful that he wishes to keep it, then will Faust bind himself to eternal servitude after death.

The stage is set for every thrill and experience that Mephisto can conjure up. Faust rejects everything but the quest for knowledge. Faust can never be a classical tragedy since Faust never repents nor wishes to. He regrets at times, but the regret provides new insight which spurs him on to further living, and further error.

The only thing that saves Faust is the gentle love that the unfortunate Gretchen bears for him. He never quite forgets her. Her tragedy, more classical in concept than that of Faust as a whole, takes up only one-sixth of the poem. It establishes the founda-

Sermon title: "The Immoderate Life"

"Moderation in all things" has been assumed, by many of us, to be a basic Christian principle. We abhor fanatics and distrust libertines, and we like to think of ourselves as well-balanced, reasonable persons who, being neither prudish nor pietistic, are at least within sight of the Christian ideal. It is a disturbing thought that the man whom we affirm as the Founder of our Faith cannot be identified with such an ideal of moderation. He would certainly be an embarrassment to us if he were active among us today. Yet he cannot be easily dismissed; we must learn at least to recognize for what it is the immoderate life to which he calls men.

Unity and Variety

Dual Character of 'Faust' Noted in German Lecture

By Sue Auer

"Unity, Variety and Ambiguity in Goethe's Faust," was the revised title of the lecture given by Ulrich K. Goldsmith last week. In introducing Dr. Goldsmith, Dr. Brandt of the German department said that in the over 130 years since the publication of Faust, every era has found in the figure of Faust something with which it could identify itself. The question that can be asked of Faust can be asked of any man: How is it possible that he be saved?

The answer, according to Dr. Goldsmith, lies in Goethe's twofold conception of humanity. Faust rejects humanity, but at the same time, aspires to human perfection. When Mephisto comes to Faust with the offer to serve him at the cost of his soul, Faust is so contemptuous that he makes a wager

SUMMARY OF ASCC MEETING—(April 27)

Newly elected officers are officially recognized
New TIGER editors are approved, and
The Kennedy Memorial Fund is discussed

The meeting of April 27 was called to order by Harris Sherman, who turned the chair over to Paul Carson, the new ASCC president. Harris congratulated the newly elected class commissioners, mentioning that with increased student concern for the ASCC, that there was much work to be done. He specifically pointed out the residential college developments, Freshman week and publications policies. Mr. Carson, taking the chair, officially recognized and thanked Mr. Sherman for his contribution to the college as its student body president.

The Publications Board requested the approval of their appointment of Steve Fredrikson-Terry Winograd as associate editors of the TIGER for 1964-65, and of B. J. Young as TIGER business manager. The approval of the Council was given unanimously, after it was clarified that Mr. Fredrikson will have final responsibility for the first semester, and Mr. Winograd will assume this authority during the second semester.

It was announced that Harry Cazzola will be the chairman for CC's contribution to the Kennedy Memorial Fund. This fund was established by colleges across the United States to help build the Kennedy Memorial Library in Boston, dedicated to the memory of John F. Kennedy with his special interest in youth and scholarship.

The meeting was concluded with a discussion of the present CC committees. Ideas for revisions were also suggested by the Executive Board, including presenting some CUL Committee on Undergraduate Life reports, and the development of a Student Policy Research Committee to draft proposals for ASCC consideration. Freshman orientations and the purpose of the Tuesday open student meeting were discussed.

Respectfully submitted,

Patricia Grant,
ASCC Secretary

LETTERS to the EDITORS

Dear Editors (attn: Dr. Ruddy):

The two of us who are writing this letter are seniors who feel that the way in which the GRE's were administered was an insult. We do not think there is any good reason for 4½ hours to be spent taking a 3-hour test, and we do not think that the Educational Testing Service requirements are responsible for this extra hour and a half; rather, we think that this was the direct result of poor planning, of administrative blunders, and of an underestimation of the abilities of college seniors to respond to instructions and stop and go signals.

In short, the examinations were given in such a repetitious and groggily juvenile manner that they became a test of not knowledge but of physical endurance, not of ability but of patience, not of clear thinking but of mere tolerance.

We have prepared a list of possible improvements but have decided not to publish them here, on grounds that they are so obvious that the Education Department should be able to figure it out for themselves. After all, they have a whole year . . . In conclusion, we would just make a suggestion to next year's seniors: unless the Education Department has announced definite and specific changes by next April, take bananas, coffee, pillows, and redundancy-repellent with you.

Theologist Relates Science, Religion to Universe

The guest speaker at the Religious Forum on Sunday afternoon, April 26, was the Reverend Harvey Arnold, librarian at Swift Library, University of Chicago School of Theology.

His topic of discussion was "World Without End? The Impact of Modern Scientific Cosmology Upon Religious Faith."

Rev. Arnold began by giving a short idea of what cosmology, which started as a branch of metaphysics, is: a science of the nature of the universe extended in space and time in relation to the human meaning of the cosmos.

The cosmological views of the past have varied through its history—from the Psalmists of Israel through Aristotle, Ptolemy, Copernicus, and Galileo to Einstein and the modern cosmologists. Up to 1543, man was essentially without astronomical instruments, and so his view of the universe was limited to what he could see and what he could imagine.

This conception was a "pictureable cosmos" with man at its apex. In the 16th and 17th Centuries, man began to realize how vast the cosmos truly is and with this found himself "abandoned in a universe which he cannot understand."

Modern cosmology dates from 1917 with Einstein's view of the cosmos as finite but unbounded and without a center. In this view our galaxy is no more important than any other.

There are at present two main theories about the universe. The first is the "evolutionary expanding universe" theory which conceives an infinitesimal speck of matter which is still in motion outward.

This theory conceives an expansion which will be coupled with a contraction of an oscillating cyclic nature. The second theory conceives a universe in a "steady state" in which matter is being continually created ex nihilo as matter is destroyed.

The areas within expand, but the universe itself does not. The universe of this theory has no beginning nor end, whereas the universe of the first theory must have a beginning.

Rev. Arnold concluded with the implications of modern cosmology (which is no longer pictureable as before, nor as simple although there is a fundamental unity).

With the advance of cosmological theories man's significance has diminished although he still retains some importance as an observer of the universe. Science is a search for being a real entity.

However, the conception of God may not have a place in this context, for the cosmological argument for the existence of God is no longer held to.

At any rate "something is, something has been, and something always will be" . . . thus a world without end.

Rev. Paul Murphy Tells of Voter Registration Drive in Mississippi

(continued from page one) arrested for "leaving the scene of an accident" (ie, tapping the bumper of a car behind him before leaving a parking spot). He was taken to jail, announced as "that nigger lover," and then viciously beaten by the white jailers before being thrown into the street as an example of what happens to "meddlers."

Police beatings and mysterious killings are so common around Hattiesburg that a distinctive gallows humor has grown up on the Negroes community:

"Where do Negroes hang out? On the nearest tree." The pall of fear hung over the city so oppressively in February and in March that the efforts of even the small group of ministers of which Rev. Murphy was a part seemed to give hope and courage to the Negroes.

As the clergymen picketed within the limits of a legally demarcated area just below Lynd's County Clerk office and near the "white man's steps," many Negroes took advantage of the expression of determination and came to wait in line to register, usually a very harrowing ordeal. Some of the local ministers participated, but they were mostly Negro. Most white ministers would not meet or speak with Murphy's group.

This, he said, as well as the insults which even housewives and young children could shout at them as they marched, indicating the total lack of understanding of the profound issues at stake, was what was most distressing about the situation. There was no comprehension of the enormity of the injustice being committed each day in the name of the law for the "good of society."

On the morning of April 9 police suddenly removed the barricades which had defined the area of that name, under federal supervision, must continue. And it had been necessary to employ federal agents in the Hattiesburg county clerk's office, where the FBI photostats applicants' registration forms and hears examinations, to prevent repetitions of Lynd's "soap bubble" mockery of justice. Finally, Murphy said, the ministers felt they must carry on with their job because Christian principle "goes beyond the stained glass windows of churches," at the picket lines and if necessary to jail.

To jail they went—several SNCC workers, Negro Baptist ministers, and seven white clergymen, all of them in an integrated public school bus, Murphy remarked wryly. The prison facilities were also integrated (this may be an historic precedent for the fair state of Mississippi). They slept, men and women together, on mattresses in a 15x46 cell. Jovial football games on their knees (a sock stuffed with toilet paper for a ball) and hockey matches with a 50c piece, baffled, perhaps even astounded, their white jailers.

A third reason for defying the hurriedly passed law was that ever since January, when picketings and voter registration activities began gathering steam in the deep south, Negro applications for voter status in the Hattiesburg area had increased hearteningly. Over 900 applications were filed. Three hundred Negroes had qualified in three months. While this is not a large number considering that in one county of Mississippi but 17 of some 7,000 eligible Negroes are registered, Murphy emphasized that the inertia of old unfair practices is slowly being disrupted. The new trend toward just practice and fair treatment and protection under law worthy of that name, under federal supervision, must continue.

And it had been necessary to employ federal agents in the Hattiesburg county clerk's office, where the FBI photostats applicants' registration forms and hears examinations, to prevent repetitions of Lynd's "soap bubble" mockery of justice. Finally, Murphy said, the ministers felt they must carry on with their job because Christian principle "goes beyond the stained glass windows of churches," at the picket lines and if necessary to jail.

One was heard to say incredulously "Those ministers really seem to be enjoying themselves."

Rev. Murphy was finally released after much legal bickering on $500 bail, which was paid by some friends in Colorado Springs. His case is pending and due to be appealed to federal court, where he will have a good chance of being vindicated, and the cynical anti-picketing law an equally good chance of being declared unconstitutional.

He concluded his remarks with a reflection of the town he had come to know over the past three weeks, "Hattiesburg is secondarily a town," he said. It represents to him the real situation prevalent in countless southern communities. "An intertwining of evil with good forces" where there are "cancerous acts of prejudice and discrimination" combined with "a wavering conviction of their injustice."

Both the complacent white ministers and the silent "Uncle Toms" clinging to their small measure of prestige and security hinder the cause of equality, he said.

Murphy emphasized that there are signs of hope beginning to show themselves in the South, as increased voter registration and a growing white social conscience testify. But only the intense efforts of all us throughout the country, he urged, will be the deciding force in the struggle for equal rights for all citizens. The bill now being battered in Congress, he pleaded, needs our firm unqualified support. On this note he ended his talk.

* Dual Character of

It is difficult, at times, to see any unity between the first and second parts of Faust. The Faust of the first part is a character of Sturm und Drang. The wiser, more mature Faust of the second part is far more detached. He no longer wishes to know the secrets of the universe. He wishes now only to control nature, to put to use the wasted power of, for example, the waves. At length, having become an "Uebermensch," he says "... it would be worth it to be human again if I could face Nature as a man among men."

Mephisto is also regarded as two different people. In the first part, he is a suave, attractively wicked gentleman who can be shocked by Faust's human desires and impatience. In the second part, he becomes a more classical devil, until in the Helena sequence, he takes the form of Phorkyas, a one eyed, one toothed hag.

The thread of Mephistophilous character is never entirely lost, however, and in the end he becomes again the devil of the first part.

In the final stages of the drama, Faust finds he can visualize the fleeting beautiful moment when free man stand on free ground. Mephisto, thinking the terms of the past fulfilled, comes to take the soul and is denied it. Because of the pure, forgiving love of Gretchen, Faust is admitted to Paradise.

GREEK WEEK

Last Monday night the following were elected and inducted into the hierarchy of offices in Beta Beta Beta: President, Bobbie Robinson; Vice-president, Bill Hodges; Secretary, Dan Cooper; Treasurer, Goodbody; Intramural chairman, Fred Davis; Social Chairman, Wingate; Pledge Trainer, Gambin; and Rush Chairman, Mrochowski.

The Beta Spring Formal was held last Saturday night at the Phi Gamma Supper Club. The musical talents of the Floyd Frame Orchestra provided the entertainment.

Fiji Island was staged recently and is commonly held to have been one of the all-time bests in this series. On Monday night the Thetas held a desert with the Phi Gams.

Steve Prough of the Fiji House was appointed co-ordinator of Greek Week along with Ellen Gams of the Thetas.

The Phi Gams recently elected their new officers. Results were: Brindley, President; Mike Carter, Treasurer; Steve Prough, Recording Secretary; Punch Mason, Corresponding Secretary; Bob Gams, Historian; and Don Sprinkle, Cash Chairman.

The Kappa pledge-neophytes have been rather rushed lately. Last Thursday they and the Kappa phorads had a breakfast at the Phi Gams.

That same afternoon at their pledge meeting Reverend Burton of Mom Hardaway were honored guests. On Sunday morning, they stopped to Penrose Hospital for an after party with the children's ring.

On Monday night the entire Kappa House was entertained by the Thetas after their respective business meetings were closed. The Kappas also joined with the Alpha Phis in a desert. Va Chounramany and Eygio Eyjolfssdottir showed slides of their native countries for diversion.

Last weekend the Thetas held their annual scholarship program and honored those deserving for scholastic achievement. Tom Althaus, the exchange student from Switzerland, spoke on the theme of an educational realm.

Jean Becker, Anne Herlichy, and

Sue Thompson were honored for the greatest improvement in scholarship. Nancy Pickering, Lee Prater, Bev Carrington, and Nan Burroughs were noted for the highest scholastic average in their respective classes.

Last Wednesday night Dr. Donald LeLong of the Economics Department was a dinner guest and speaker at the Phi Delta house. Dr. LeLong's talk about his experiences in Pakistan on a Ford Foundation Fellowship was accompanied by slides which illustrated the scenery and cultural traditions of that country.

Boys' Club Work Done by Sigma Chis

The Sigma Chi Fraternity at Colorado College held its annual community service project last Saturday, April 25, at the Colorado Springs Boys' Club.

The project consisted of actually two working groups.

One was at the Boys' Club itself on South Tejon, and the other group worked at the Boys' Club Emerald camp in the Cheyenne Mountains.

Work consisted of painting, cleaning, raking, and general repairing at both sites.

President Mick Ramsey reported that all 63 members participated in the project.

The annual project is designed to assist the Boys' Club in its worthwhile work of providing good places for fun and constructive work for boys of all ages in Colorado Springs.

Here's a Lot from POSSUM TROT

By Steve Sabol

Over the years at CC, baseball has never been considered a strong spring sport. Frequently, our opponents attained double figures on the scoreboard and their basehits were as plentiful as Irish confetti on St. Patrick's Day.

Our abortive efforts on the baseball field were ignored; as most athletic endeavors are on this campus.

Those few fans who journeyed down to that barren tundra named Stewart Field did so not to watch an outclassed CC nine get bombarded by their conference foes, but to giggle at the poignant comments of Cecil the Cook who treats baseball umpires as if they were small animals caught in a trap meant to be tortured.

Well, this year sassy Cecil's sudden cynicism does not play such a prominent part in the attendance figures. The reason?—Colorado College is fielding a baseball squad that is good enough to hang with any team in the area.

Headed by Coach Bob Johnson whose very presence foments team spirit and pride, this season's squad is sporting a 5-4 record against the best competition this conference has to offer.

Two pea-greeners, Warner (Peewee) Reeser and Bill Jankowski form the core of the pitching staff. These two are ably relieved by Mike Irsweld, who looks like he should be somebody's fairy Godfather, and brandy-faced Jeff Sauer.

Carl Clay, a little bunny-hugger from Hotchkiss, Colo., is leading the Tigers in batting with a .395

An animated cupidador appropriately called Michael Mestek and John Simus, who still looks as if he has just received a facial massage with an oak towel, are the vital cogs in a smooth fielding infield quartet.

Last weekend, the Johnsonmen met CSC which has won the RMC baseball crown for 22 years straight. We were in command of the contest for 6½ innings until some untimely miscues precipitated our demise and CSC went on to win 8-2.

Roly-poly Rajah Williams, a big package of mirth from Northern Cal, performed impeccably behind the plate as he called a smart game for pitcher Reeser.

Some costly infield errors proved the difference as the CSC Bears fudged four runs by Reeser in 7th frame and three more in the 8th. A valiant effort by our diamondmen and it is a shame that their mistakes resulted in CSC's triumph.

Today and tomorrow the Johnsonites clash with Western State at Sky Sox Field.

Lacrosse Team Trounces CSU 10-6

In the second lacrosse game ever played at Colorado College, the CC Lacrosse Club won their game by trouncing the CSU Lacrosse Club 10-6. It was a well fought battle played on a very windy and cold Stewart Field.

The first quarter was a tight one. At first, CC came on strong, jumping to a 4-1 lead, but the CSU team was not about to be put down so easily. By the end of the quarter, the score had changed to the point where CC was leading by a slim 4-3 margin.

The second quarter turned out to be a little more favorable for Dr. Stabler's gang. At the end of the first half, the scorebook showed a more comfortable lead of 9-6 for the CC stickmen.

Although the second half did not see much scoring, it was a very well played part of the game. Both teams buckled down to play a hard and fast game. CSU knew it had a lot of work to do to catch up, but Stabler's Terrifying Ten held their ground.

It was a literal riot with sticks, bodies and penalties flying left and right. The game went on at this rate until the last few minutes of the half when CC put in the last goal and won the game 10-6.

The high scorers for CC were Mac Callaway, Frank Bond and Bill Whitney with two goals each.

Also scoring one goal apiece were Tad Davis, Pete Davis, Tony Bryan and Steve (Daffy Duck) Prough. For CSU, McFarrel was the high scorer with four goals and one assist.

In its first year of existence, the CC Lax Club, as it is more commonly known, has created quite a stir on campus.

There are three remaining games, the next will be during Parents' Weekend on Saturday, May 2, at 2:00 p. m. on Stewart Field.

The game will be with the Denver Lacrosse Club and should be a very close one.

Victorious CC Golfers to Replay Vanquished Teams

The Colorado College golf team faces Colorado State College at Greeley tomorrow in a return match.

The Tigers defeated the Teachers 11½-6½ in a match played earlier in the year at the Eisenhower Golf Club.

Prior to meeting Colorado State the golf team will have faced the Air Force Academy on Wednesday at the Broadmoor and Colorado University on Thursday at the Boulder Country Club.

The Tigers defeated the Cadets in the first match of the season, but lost a home match to Colorado.

Last weekend the golf team divided two matches, losing to Denver University at the Broadmoor 8½-3½. On Saturday the golfers defeated Colorado School of Mines at the Hivan Golf Club near Evergreen, Colorado, 18½-8½.

Steve Wohlman won both his matches over the last weekend, while Bob Magie, J. C. Wells and Jim Amidon won single matches. Andy Barnes, Cole Robinson and Magie halved matches with their opponents.

CC Drops 2 to CSC

Poor pitching and scratchy fielding paved the way for two Tiger losses over the weekend, as CSC swept the series, 8-2 and 18-8.

Entering the game with a 3-1 conference record, the Tigers were able to contain the highly rated Greeley team for four innings, but lost it in the seventh and eighth, as CSC connected for three runs apiece in each of these innings.

The Bears began the day with a one run first when Bonacquist tripled, and came in to score as the Tigers were attempting to run down Kelley who had walked.

In the fourth frame, the Tigers erupted for four straight hits, a double by John Simus, and singles by Mike Mestek, Roger Williams, and Dee Wilson. With two runs across the plate the Tigers led 2-1. CSC tied the game in the fifth when Bob Vlosin reached first on a Tiger error, and scored on Bonacquist's triple. The seventh and eighth spelled doom for the Tigers as CSC pushed across six runs in these innings.

Reeser, who started for the Tigers, was removed, and Mike Irfield, a side armner, came in to blank the Bears for the rest of the game. The winning pitcher was O'Brien who now hosts a 3-0 record. Reeser took the loss for CC.

That the Tigers can hit is not in doubt, as they showed on Saturday with their production of eleven hits. But the pitching lacks something.

CC pitchers gave up an unheard of twenty-two hits and walked the winning run across the plate, which broke the fifth inning tie.

After that the game was never in doubt as CSC power plastered in fourteen runs in the final four innings.

CSC now stands 8-0 in the conference, and is the present leader. The Tigers are back in the pack with a 3-3 record.

World War II German Play On Tuesday

A dramatic representation of the tribulations of a WW II German soldier will be this year's offering of CC's German Club.

On Tuesday evening in Perkins Hall the one-act play "Draussen vor der Tuer" "Outside before the Door" by Wolfgang Borchert will be presented.

The story, in part autobiographical, relates the frustrations of Beckmann (Fred Luft) who, having returned from defeat at Stalingrad, is overwhelmed by personal guilt for the war effort.

After an unsuccessful suicide attempt his alter-ego (Brad Scharf) attempts and seeks to provide new motivation for living. Each new adventure serves only to prove, however, that society is indifferent.

Despite one sympathetic light in the darkness (Caroline Creyke), Beckmann gradually undergoes a tortuous self-destruction.

Particularly promising performances have thus far been turned in by Wolf Gewehr, as Beckmann's commanding officer, and by Fred Luft, upon whose shoulders rests the unity of the entire play.

Curtain time is 7:30 p.m., May 12. German students are requested to arrive early, as role will be taken.

Band to Play By Rastall

On Tuesday afternoon May 12 Colorado College students are invited to take a short break from the books and to relax amidst friendly skirts and the sounds of the Colorado College Concert Band, which will present its annual pops concert at 4:15 p.m. in front of Rastall Center.

The 40-piece band is directed by Dr. Earl Juhas and will feature a program of the following musical selections:

Highlights from "Exodus," Gold; "1st Suite in E minor," Holtz; "Earl of Oxford," Byrd; "West Side Story," Bernstein; "Slavonic Dances, Opus 46," Dvorak; "Variations," Williams; and "Smoke Gets in Your Eyes."

"Smoke Gets in Your Eyes" will feature the solo talent of Dave Friend on valve trombone. The program should provide a quite enjoyable afternoon.

Symposium Planning Session Narrows List of Possible Topics to Three

About 40 students and faculty attended the last Symposium Planning Session, at which the list of possible topics for next January's Symposium was narrowed down to three.

The third and final meeting of this group has now been set for Tuesday afternoon, May 12th, at 4 p.m. in the WBS Room of Rastall Center. At this meeting, a decision will be made on a topic, or topics, to be recommended to President Wornor. All interested students and faculty are urged to attend this meeting to make their views known.

The three choices which are still "in the running" are as follows:

- 1) Science and the Revolution of

JOE MATTIYS, Adrienne Zech and Carol Parsons in THE LESSON May 16, 8:15 p.m., Perkins Hall.

Planning . . . Suggestions

Location Set for Lush Living

Last Wednesday seventeen students representing the mens residence halls, ASOC and the Tiger met with Don Oden and the architects of the new men's dormitory to discuss and make suggestions about the proposed plans for the new building.

Mr. Herb Pasear for Caudill, Rollett and Scott presented the plans which had been drawn up by the Planning Committee headed by Mr. Oden.

The dorm, to be located north of Arthur House on the corner of Nevada and Uintah and to house 300 students by the fall of 1966, is presently designed as a W shaped structure containing house suite and core type living units. There would be a central commons area with desk, lounge and TV room. The living quarters would be above the commons area and on each side of the W.

Most of the discussion Wednesday centered around the size, location and purpose of the lounges in the dorm. The primary plans called for a lounge on each floor approximately the size of a double room which would be used by up to 60 students. This was objected to on the basis that such lounge facilities would be completely inadequate to fill the social and study needs of 60 men. It was suggested that each suite or core unit have a lounge designed for eight to 10 students with separate study area.

The study area could either be adjacent to the social lounge or one large study area for the whole dorm containing cubicles similar to Tutl Library.

It was also expressed that large lounge areas would not be conducive to small group associations and would not be used since they would provide little if any privacy. The experiences in Slocum and Loomis lounges were cited as proof.

Other innovations which the planners suggested were carpeted corridors, intercom system in each room, completely enclosed TV room with fixed seats and provisions for private telephones in each

Drama of Damned Doc Delightfully Developed

Marlowe's Doctor Faustus, performed Saturday night in Shove Chapel by the Colorado College Experimental Theater, was surely one of the high points not only of Parents' Weekend but also of the academic year.

The performance was not without flaw; indeed there were times when Marlowe's mighty lines were spoken with such rapidity that the words were lost amidst the Norman-Gothic niches of the Chapel, and there were some awkward pauses between the many scenes when groves of trees (2 count 'em 2) were being set on the platform.

Yet the magnificence of the language won out, and the direction of James H. Fox made a cohesive whole and a moving dramatic experience of what is, in the text, a rather jumpy and nervous series of scenes, missing low comedy and the loftiest poetry.

All Marlowe's plays are one-man shows, and this is true of Faustus. The damned doctor of theology naturally dominates all the action, even when absent from the stage, for the scenes of slapstick humor are designed to show that evil begets evil, from the level of the intellectual to that of the lowest horse-courser.

Director Fox was lucky in his star. The Rev. Kenneth Burton played the role with assurance, sensitivity, and, often, true magnificence. The role demands a considerable range of emotion: from anguish to torrid despair, from playfulness to horror, and Mr. Burton moved with ease through this gamut. Perhaps most memorable was his mischievous aping of the foppish mannerisms of the Emperor, played by Thomas Mauch.

Though the loudest acclaim, of course, goes to Burton and Fox, most of the others in the large cast also deserve high praise: Mr. Mauch was an amusing Glutony and a hilarious Emperor; William Hochman, an impressive Chorus; Mike von Helms, a magnificent Megaphones, especially in the concluding scenes. The costumes were excellent and the lighting and music usually well handled.

Shove Chapel was filled to overflowing—perhaps the largest audience ever to see a single dramatic performance on the campus. When the audience arrived, perhaps many of them were thinking that they would have preferred to see a less challenging play—a hit comedy from Broadway. Yet they came away struck by the success of this bold venture.

The most important thing about the performance of Doctor Faustus was that it was attempted at all. Surely the experimental theaters on college and university campuses are the places to try unusual things on the stage. The commercial theater must bow to popular taste for the slick and superficial, since the producer must not gamble too recklessly with the angel's money, but college dramatic groups need not concern themselves with such things.

It is to be hoped that the Colorado College Experimental Theater will continue to flourish in the future and will bring to the campus some works as Greek drama, Elizabethan plays, and avant-garde experiments as well.

Rat Man to Appear Soon

One of the most versatile men in recent years, B. F. Skinner, will be speaking in Perkins, Monday, May 11, at 8:15 p.m.

His address, "Utopia Now," will probably be related to his novel, Walden Two.

"Skinner's ambition to try engineering a real Utopia" has been developing particularly since his visit to the U.S.S.R. in 1961, according to Spencer Klaw in Hurper's Magazine.

Skinner's Utopia is based on an understanding of behavior from experimental observation.

As "the world's leading exponent of pure behaviorism" Skinner has been a controversial figure since he began writing in the late 1930's. He has had published seven books and about seventy articles on subjects ranging from alliteration in Shakespeare's sonnets to the effects of schedules of reinforcement on behavior, and many have commented on his work.

According to Klaw, some "recoil in horror" at his concept of the predictable man, while others consider his work in the experimental analysis of behavior comparable to Galileo's.

Building a Utopia, the raising of babies, developing teaching machines, and working with the finer points of experimental behavior studies are all areas of interest mentioned in Klaw's Harper's article.

The wealth of experience which Skinner brings to any topic makes his visit a promising one.

Nkiwane Wins Study Grant

Solomon Nkiwane, a political science major at Colorado College, has received a grant to spend a part of the summer studying future relations between Puerto Rico and the United States.

Nkiwane, a senior from South Rhodesia in Africa, will go to Puerto Rico in June for six weeks.

The $500 grant presented by the college was made available by an alumnus, Brewster Grace, who received his bachelor's degree in 1961 in religion. Grace is now serving in Japan with the American Friends Service Committee.

He plans to tour the island talking with Puerto Ricans of various socio-economic backgrounds in an effort to learn what they feel could be the possible future relations between their country and the United States.

Topics to Three

We could also cover the question whether religion really has meaning to many Americans or whether church attendance and membership has simply become a fashionable thing to do, without serious religious content or commitment. The relationship of religion, literature, the arts, etc. could be covered as well.

3) America, the Beautiful? (The question mark is important). The purpose of this Symposium would be to evaluate the current American scene in terms of the values which our country has traditionally professed (but not always practiced).

The definition of those values (Continued on page six) ment and poverty; new types of warfare, and the deterrent effects of weapons; a "leisure" society).

2. Religion and Contemporary Culture. In scope, this would be similar to the foregoing topic, except that we would examine the field of religion and philosophy instead of the sciences.

Some of the topics to be examined would include Modern Theology; the role of religion in such rights, prayer and the Supreme Court, population, birth control, nuclear war, extremist religious movements, as well as the relationship of the Church to radical political movements.

our age. This Symposium would look at the state of science and the impact of scientific discoveries and inventions on our lives, both now and in the foreseeable future.

We would have a look at the role of science and scientists in modern society; at the relationship of the non-scientist; at the relationship between science and public policy; at the problems which science has created for society (communications, warfare, "the engineering of consent," automation); and at some of the answers which science may provide for urgent contemporary problems (conservation of resources, the population explosion, the "revolution of rising expectations," unem-

David Packard Will Deliver Address At Commencement

David Packard, board chairman and chief executive officer of the Hewlett-Packard Co., will deliver the 1964 commencement address June 1.

Mr. Packard, a native of Pueblo, Colo., this year was elected to the two top posts at Hewlett-Packard, one of the world's leading designers and manufacturers of electronic testing equipment.

He attended Stanford University where he was elected to Phi Beta Kappa, the national scholastic society, and earned a bachelor's degree and an electrical engineering degree.

After working for two years as an engineer for General Electric's Vacuum Tube Engineering Department, he and William R. Hewlett formed Hewlett-Packard in Palo Alto, Calif. He has been president of the firm since it was incorporated.

Mr. Packard holds four patents and has several pending in the fields of electronics and scientific measurement. He also is the author of numerous articles and technical papers.

In addition to managing the worldwide operations of Hewlett-Packard, Mr. Packard is active in a number of professional, educational, civic and business organizations. He is a fellow in the Institutes of Electrical and Electronic Engineers and an honorary lifetime member of the Instrument Society of America.

He is a member of the Stanford University Board of Trustees, a sustaining member of the New York Academy of Sciences, a member of The Business Council, and a vice president at large of the American Management Association.

OPINION

By Paul Tatter

President Wornor's speech of last Saturday, being public is open to public criticism, and indeed demands a voice of protest.

I would first, however, commend Dr. Wornor for bringing crucial topics to public discussion and for expressing an interest in clarifying the issues. It is gratifying to see student opinion of the past year finally acknowledged in an official statement. The next step is to talk about them, which Dr. Wornor also seems disposed to do. As he reminded me, the dorm proposal will still have a hearing with the trustees. But here the commendation ends.

It was a glaring oversight on President Wornor's part to neglect an explication of the dorm policy which he criticized in his speech. Knowing the number of parents reached by The Tiger and by the poll, he should have realized that possibly one-half of his audience could have been ignorant of what he was discussing.

A negative approach on any topic taken by one in a responsible position is bound to produce a similar response in unknowing listeners, especially when the topic is concerned with his area of authority. The result could have been that many parents left Shove Chapel either prejudiced against or with grave doubts about, the responsibility of student actions.

I suppose that some would argue the presence of a negative attitude in the speech. Indeed, even Dr. Wornor brought out the necessity of complete objectivity and fairness to be used in arrival at any decision concerning this issue. Yet I would like to point to several unfair or even erroneous judgments which negatively colored what the President said.

Dr. Wornor did praise the procedure taken by student government in this case. He made it sound almost irrefragable. But then he informed us that he couldn't understand the results of the poll and that he himself would send a new "essay question" to the parents. I cannot imagine what a biased question beyond: what do you think about this? indicated by the previous poll, could be contained in a new inquiry.

The President's words seem to imply a lack of faith in student actions and serious doubt in the sincerity of the parents' replies. He said that the reason for questioning the truly representative nature of the poll was a one hundred per cent opposition encountered among parents who discussed the dorm proposal with him.

He did not consider the fact that, human nature being what it is, the parents opposed would naturally be most vocal. They have something to prevent. Those who have been convinced by the arguments as presented, now in the majority, simply affirm what they favor and have nothing further to add.

When discussing the situation of a totally residential college (a major policy decision arrived at quite adequately without public polls or speeches), Dr. Wornor considerably affirmed toleration of the "Weakly Bitch." He also reaffirmed the sentiment that the college would never attempt to suppress a student's freedom to think and speak as he chose—a great concession. A college needs to affirm more than this if it expects its students to develop fully as human beings.

There was a dangerous attitude indicated by the tone of Dr. Wornor's address. It is best described through the anecdote, used by Dr. Wornor, in which a Harvard professor reminds his class that regardless of their belief there is something in this world to consider other than sex. The humor lies in the fact that such a story could be taken seriously.

LETTERS to the EDITORS

Dear Sir,

We are irate! During our jogs around and about the CC campus, we have heard far too many—far too many indeed—complaints concerning the size and price of ice cream, notably C-C-ones with one or two Tiger scoops (pineapple, cherry, vanilla, chocolate, mocha-surprise, etc.). Now granted (a) boys will be boys and (b) girls will be girls, but the administration must make decisions and if students expect to continue enjoying the FREEDOM to order C-C-ones on a hot summer's day (surely a pleasure we all enjoy), they must be ready to shoulder the RESPONSIBILITY of community living and pull together.

Aren't we all tired of tearing down instead of building up, and shouldn't some of us take heed from that old-albeit pithy—axiom, "If you can't say anything nice, why not say nothing at all?"

Though it is true that ten cents buys one scoop today where one month ago it bought two, and though it is also true that the ten cent scoop today is smaller than the five cent scoop of yesterday, this is scarcely the point! If students don't like the price of our C-C-ones they might remember that no one forced them to come here in the first place and certainly no one is stopping them from packing their bags and getting out!—Two juniors who are furious

THE LESSON by Ionesco will be presented May 16 at 8:15 p.m. in Perkins Hall. Joe Matys will play the Professor; Adrienne Zech the Student; Carol Parsons, the Maid. Samuel Becket's last play will be presented on the same program.

The new Alpha Lambda Delta Officers are President, Sallie Rule; Vice-President, Pam Carpenter; Treasurer, Sylvia Thorpe; Projects Chairman, Judy Samsquid; Publicity, Carol Hale; Senior Advisor, Cathy Grant; and Junior Advisor, Donna Haraway.

This past week has been disheartening to student aspirations. In two quick blows, the administration discredited the careful work of ASCC and also announced plans for the new men's dorm. This announcement came at a closed meeting with only a few selected students present. These few students were told that the faculty committee's plans would be sent to the architects next week, and that any innovations or ideas would have to be suggested immediately if they were to be used in the new dorm.

We as students should now understand our position on campus. Only by leaving the College, and becoming parents and alumni, can we have a full voice in the "general will" as interpreted by the administration, often in spite of the facts.

We have one last suggestion to make: that the new dorm will on us have some space for the student as a human being. There should be smaller sub-lounges for eight-ten students to be by themselves to talk or study instead of the impersonal 60 man lounge concept that has present vogue. Students should also have more recreational space than a television room. A small games area would be a welcome addition. The failure to include these proposals reflects the insincerity of concern for giving the students a comfortable life in the new compulsory dormitories.

It is fitting that President Wornor paraphrased the now famous statement "Don't Bitch-Transfer" in his recent speech to the visiting parents. This statement proves that the administration is open to student opinion, if only in the form of defeatist pessimism. We should take cheer. It is the first time this year that the administration has recognized that we are here.

Berkeley Wants Tea; No Ciggies for CC

While the students of CC debated the morality of cigarette machines, a similar struggle on a different level took place at the University of California at Berkeley. There, nothing as mundane as tobacco could arouse feelings—the debate was over the use of marijuana.

Lenny Glaser, a 26-year-old Berkeley man who was well known as a radical speaker on campus, was charged with the possession of marijuana. This offense is a felony in California, as in most other states, and carries a penalty of up to ten years.

At his trial, Glaser refused to defend himself on any grounds but the invalidity of the law. He pointed to medical reports showing that marijuana is not a harmful drug; he protested against "irrational marijuana laws" and a "campaign of public misinformation" and requested permission to smoke marijuana in court, showing the jury its effects, which he described as "self-knowledge and self-exploration." "After all, I only have one head and I want to know what's in it."

The judge and jury were not swayed by these arguments, so he tried to turn to the students, challenging the Attorney General of the state to a public debate on campus. When even this generous offer was refused, Lenny Glaser went on a hunger strike in jail, and the students sprang to his aid.

A group calling itself the COMMITTEE FOR AN OPEN SOCIETY volunteered to champion his cause. They published a mimeographed bulletin explaining his case, and quoting liberally from such sources as the Bible, the Talmud, and Thorau.

His defense centered around the quote, "It is not what goes into a man's mouth which makes him unclean, but what comes out of his mouth." Matthew 15:11.

Plans were made for a student demonstration at the jail and for an open meeting in one of the college halls to gain support. Even these actions could not change the iron decision of the law.

The protests served no practical purpose, except to answer the question the students asked themselves—"Shall we stand silent while one man destroys himself to change barbaric drug laws that are our responsibility? Is it not time to end the silence?"

Whether right or wrong, this issue presents an interesting contrast to our moral struggles at CC.

IRC Meet On Space

The International Relations Club invites everyone interested to attend its final meeting of the year Thursday evening, May 14, at 7:30 p.m. in Olin Lecture Hall. The agenda, entitled: "The U.S. Space Program Today—Scope, Motivation, Consequences," will include a report to the student body by two delegates to the recent Air Force Academy Conference on this subject, followed by general discussion of the substantive problems raised at the Conference. Paul Carson and Diane Russell will be the principal participants. Professor Sondermann will be a resource, and Mr. Finley will moderate.

NOTICE!

Due to a vacancy on Rastall Center Board, applications for Secretary-Treasurer are now available at Rastall desk. Applications are due at 5 p.m., May 12. Any questions can be answered by Dan Cooper at 375.

NOTICE!

Rastall Center Board presents "Desire Under the Elm" this Sunday evening in Perkins at 7:30. Admission is free.

The first course treats Indian, Japanese, and Chinese works as expressions of Asian ways of life and thought.

The second course examines political, economic, religious, and artistic changes taking place in traditional Japanese culture as a result of her contact with the West.

Lewis, Mr. Rucker, Mr. Barton and Mr. Brooks were the nominees for this position.

It was announced that the AWS policy on water fights is that as long as property, personal or residential, is not damaged, water can be thrown without violation to college rules.

Personal damage includes such things as breaking or losing glasses, and residential damage includes damage to any college or Greek buildings.

The approval of the ASCC Executive Council was given for the appointment of Gary Knight as Writer's Workshop chairman for 1964-65, and Chuck Garthwaite as Photographic editor.

Rastall Center announced that survival kits for exam snacks will be distributed May 17th and 18th.

A short discussion of the Kennedy Memorial Fund was held with an ensuing recommendation that Harry Cazola, chairman, provide further opportunity for student and faculty contributions.

John Hetzel brought some suggestions for bicycle parking to the Council. He mentioned three areas where work might be centered: 1) filling holes in the roads, 2) installing several asphalt ramps from the sidewalks to the street, and 3) getting racks for bicycle parking at Rastall, Slocum and Loomis. A sub-committee of the Traffic Committee was formed to pursue these suggestions further with John Hetzel as its member.

Committee assignments for next year were announced:

Finance Committee: Paul Tatter, chrm; Bill Campbell, Laurie Sails, members.

Social Coordinating Committee: Bill Miracheck, chrm; John Dunn, member.

Student Policy Committee: Paul Tatter, chrm; Bill Greeley, member.

Constitution Committee: Dave Helms, chrm.

Elections Committee: Bill Campbell, chrm.

Forum Committee: Laurie Sails, ASCC member.

Publications Board: Bill Greeley, chrm; John Dunn, ASCC member.

Communications Committee: Cathy Grant, chrm.

College Development Committee: Tom Brooks, chrm.

Academic Committee: Ann Barkley, chrm.

Traffic Committee: Tom Brooks, chrm.

Enthusiasm Committee: John Dunn, chrm.

C.U.L.: to be announced.

Respectfully submitted, Cathy Grant, ASCC Secretary

ASCC Agenda for May 11, 1964

1) Election of various representatives (Student Conduct Committee, Public Lectures Committee, Faculty Advisor)

2) Freshman Orientation

3) Kennedy Memorial Fund.

The reality of our situation is quite different from the one imputed to the Harvard students with its implication of irresponsibility, instability, and unenlightened self-interest. To label students in general with characteristics such as these is a false and destructive practice, but one which seems to be insisted upon. With all the concern over the modern student it should occur to someone to consider the effects of being defined a priori as irresponsible, and consequently being treated as such for as long a time as the definition may be imposed.

I quote from an article, by Fred M. Hechinger, used by Dr. Wornor. "As education is prolonged, adolescence is stretched out even further. The crutches of family support, scholarships, and finally graduate fellowships make young people approach the world of work with little sense of responsibility or the ability to withstand stress." As solutions to the problem the article mentions more restriction, discipline, and formulation of rules.

However, to restrictions is sacrificed the opportunity for a full development of character. As a result students are forced to create artificial situations in the attempt to replace what is missing.

But students are not interested in contriving situations for themselves. They are interested in becoming accepted members of our society. And nothing is so disheartening as to attempt responsible action time after time only to have it dismissed by an anecdote. Certainly this attitude can hardly be considered as conducive to the growth of responsibility.

Yet all the while our institutions maintain or increase restrictions as they cry out against irresponsibility. Part of the answer to this problem was given by President Wornor when he said that conduct is seldom influenced by rule, but rather by example and through experience and by the humane studies.

We are intelligent human beings gathered at a place of higher learning. We should be capable and willing to work together in the assumption of responsibility, to encourage its use again and again, and to provide the opportunity to do so.

Students are anxious to accept the burden. They should be given the chance. We have so little faith in those to whom eventually the world shall be relinquished, and yet who else will assume the responsibility for it all?

Asian Studies Program to Be Expanded Next Year

Do you like Haiku better than Hart Crane? Are you planning to become Ambassador to India? Do you drink a lot of tea? If you do, good news.

Beginning next year the College will double the number of courses in the Asian studies field, reaching a total of eight semesters in 1965-66.

Certain members of the faculty have long felt that most colleges slight cultures vastly different from our own. These new courses are designed to rectify that mistake.

Aside from imparting specific information, these courses and others such as anthropology and linguistics are intended to help the student appreciate the differences brought about by cultural differences, such as language structure.

Presently Colorado College's courses in related fields include a history course taught by Mr. Tucker—The Far East, a philosophy course taught by Miss Cauvel—Oriental Philosophy, and a religion course taught by Dr. Fox—Religions of the World.

Next year Mr. Tucker will teach two semester courses in Asian history—Cultural History of East Asia and European Imperialism.

The first course is exactly what it says it is. It shows how Indian culture bases the other Asian cultures. The class will study early Chinese philosophy (Taoist, Confucian), Chinese cultural satellites, and the effect of Western political thought.

The second history course deals with European domination from the 16th to the 20th centuries, especially in Asia and Africa. In addition the course handles current problems resulting from liberation. In 1965-66 Mr. Garner of the music department will initiate two more semester courses for the General Studies program—Asian Literature in Translation and Studies in Modern Japanese Culture.

Summary of ASCC meeting: Nominations for the Student Conduct Committee, and the Public Lectures Committee are opened, after-right policy mentioned, and ASCC Committee chairman announced.

Nominations for two rising junior members of the Student Conduct Committee were opened in the ASCC meeting Monday. Nominees so far are Donna Haraway, Bill Wilson, Dee Vhay, Terry Wingograd and Ed Lorson.

The Executive Council will select one man and one woman for these positions next Monday.

Also opened were nominations for the student representative to the Public Lectures Committee: Thompson, Barbara Kener, and Rich Nichols.

These slates are still open for further nominations which can be given to the ASCC box this week, or to a member of the Executive Council. Also nominated were faculty advisors to the ASCC. Mr.

Grading System To Be Changed

At the present time, Colorado College rules for graduation require a 2.0 average or better both in the student's overall (cumulative) average and in his departmental average.

For years in computing the overall average only courses taken at Colorado College have been included. But in computing the departmental average, courses in the student's major taken at Colorado College and courses taken elsewhere and transferred in have been included.

The Committee on Instruction feels that our method of computing the student's average in his major is not a good one.

In the first place it is inconsistent with the method used in computing the overall average. Secondly, it uses grades at schools whose standards may vary markedly from our own.

Finally, it results in difficulties where courses are taken at schools which use a different grading system. Its only merit seems to be that it provides a broader base when a student has taken relatively few hours in his major at Colorado College.

Therefore, the Committee on Instruction recommends the following: (The provisions regarding implementation conform to our practice of making no change retroactively to the detriment of a student.)

The average in a student's major is to be computed by using courses not taken at Colorado College only unless such courses total less than 12 credit hours, in which case relevant courses taken elsewhere and transferred are to be included as well.

This procedure will be effective in December, 1964. However, prior to June, 1965, if a student's average so computed is less than 2.0, it shall be recomputed on the present basis and the higher of the two averages will be used to determine eligibility for graduation.

CC Student Discriminated Against by 3.2 Spot

Last Saturday night a friend and I went to the Krazy Kat with dates. Jim Welch and his date were also there. This girls were well-dressed and the boys were wearing coats and ties. We had arranged to meet another couple there.

A little while after we made our appearance, the other couple arrived. In walked a popular freshman in the school—a scholarship student, a football player, and class commissioner—the one person who has easily contributed more to CC than any other freshman this year. He and his date were respectfully dressed—they had just come from seeing Dr. Faustus.

They found our table, left their overcoats there, and began dancing. Almost immediately, the owner of the Krazy Kat, Mr. Jim Crump, tapped him on the shoulder. Ray Jones was denied the dubious "privilege" of dancing at the Krazy Kat.

When Crump was questioned later, he claimed that his particular class of clientele would object to a Negro dancing with a white girl. Therefore, the $150,000 that he claimed he had tied up in the place would be in jeopardy. Ray and his date, Laurie McCann, walked over and sat down at Jim Welch's table.

Mr. Crump came over to Ray again and said that someone had already commented on the fact that there was a mixed couple present. Almost any other person would have caused a scene, but Ray and Laurie got up, went to the door, received a refund, and walked out with what little dignity they had left.

CC students as a group should protest this active discrimination. In the first place, I propose that anyone who has any strong connections with a staff member of any local newspaper should contact me, Ray, or the editors of the Tiger.

It would be enlightening for the entire town to be informed of this incident. In the second place, all students should boycott the Krazy Kat. In the third place, pressure should be brought to bear upon this establishment to change its policy of discrimination against mixed couples, yet allowing a rather motley selection of whites to dance.

VILLAGE IDIOT

By Caroline Creyke

The CC song of this season might well be entitled, "Ma, He's Putting a Damper on Me," the chorus of which would run something like, "if the sprinklers don't get you, then Cutler will."

The secret of keeping your feet dry is, of course, to watch your timing. But even then, when they're spouting the other way the wind sometimes blows the spray in your face.

It would be smarter to avoid them altogether, but that is hardly possible. If they're not directly blocking your path, at least the pipeline is leaking.

The weather's too nice to wear a raincoat, so about all you can do is try to keep one jump ahead of 'em.

If the Kat will not come to these terms, it should be closed. In the fourth place, the Krazy Kat is sanctioned in the 1963 Student Handbook. Although the administration does not sanction the establishment, some student-written publications do. The Krazy Kat should never again be sanctioned in any Colorado College publication.

The Krazy Kat's action should not be considered merely an act against a Negro and his white date; it is also an act against the entire college, for Ray is one of our best all-around students. Can we maintain any dignity as members of the CC community if we permit this to go unnoticed?

If we want to act like complacent morons who don't care about other people's lives, then let's forget it.

If, however, we want to be mature American citizens, then let's stand up for our fellow students. By doing this, we will not only help the people concerned, but the entire campus community as well.

Six Colorado College students other than myself have read the above statements concerning what actually happened at the Krazy Kat and have verified that to the best of their knowledge everything said is true. By Greg Schauer

Carson Wins Space Grant

Paul Carson was one of 51 students awarded with grants to participate in the Summer Institute in Space Physics at Columbia University.

The grant will cover the cost of summer tuition at Columbia, subsistence allowance of $400 week, round-trip travel from the participant's residence to New York City, and a field trip to U.S. space centers.

The pioneer program, sponsored by the National Aeronautics and Space Administration, is designed to attract outstanding students into fields related to U.S. space research.

The Summer Institute program concentrates on training and research in physics, astronomy and the earth sciences. Participants will study basic theory and its applications to the atmosphere, the Earth, Mars, and Venus; the evolution of stars and galaxies and the structure of the moon and planets.

In addition to basic theory, engineering students take courses in rocket propulsion, guidance, control, scientific satellites, communications and manned space flight.

Hearings were conducted by the MRHA Inter-Hall Council or the President's Advisory Committee on Student Conduct in each individual case.

The disposition of each case was made by the administration.

CC Student Assistance

Doubles in Five Years

Colorado College has more than doubled its student aid program in the past five years.

In fact, college officials said, scholarships and loans to students have increased nearly one and a half times from 1958-59 to the current academic year.

During the same period, full time enrollment has gone up less than 25 percent.

Five years ago 264 students at Colorado College received $177,840 in scholarships and loans. This year 537 students received $443,451.

The entire student aid program for the current year comes to more than a half-million dollars. Included is $318,061 in scholarships, $125,390 in loans, and nearly $70,000 in student employment.

Associate Dean H. E. Mathias said more than half of the students holding scholarships are from Colorado. Sixty-four of the 179 Colorado students receiving scholarships are freshmen.

"Two hundred and six National Defense Student loans, totaling $125,390, have been made to full time students and additional loans will be made before the end of the academic year.

"One hundred and fifty-seven of the 206 loanees are receiving both scholarships and loans."

Pick & Pan Winners To Receive Awards

These awards, begun in 1944 by Woodson Tyree of the Speech Department, go to students who have shown special interest and willingness to perform in the following areas for at least one year: All speech activities, dramatic performances, variety shows and other similar productions in school or for the community.

The Pick and Pan awards, given each year for outstanding work in speech, radio, debate, and drama, will be awarded Sunday at an annual breakfast at "Chief" Tyree's.

Many recipients of the award have gone on to excel in these fields such as Loren Drescall, who has been in musicals in New York, and Peter Kosiek, who owns his own radio station in Vancouver. To date over three hundred people have won this award.

This year, the twentieth annual Pick and Pan awards (for either drama, debate, speech or radio) will be presented to Marianne Isaak, Eyllie Dayster, Jody Komor, John Shearer, Evan Heckel, Theodore Eliopoulos, Michael Von Helms, Georgia McClell, Joseph Mattys, David Helms, Robert Knight, Judy Sundquist, Linda Marshall, Susan Caudill, and Barbara Keener.

The Talent and Speakers Bureau Certificate recipients are Diane Cox, Jerry Agnew, Kathleen Aurin, Kathleen Mace, Michael Grace, Lynn Grace, Ben Lyon and James Fox.

Woodson Tyree is director of the Pick and Pan awards. Faculty members are Alan Johnson and Robin Rudolf in charge of debate and William McMillan and David Hand in charge of drama.

The award was designed by Peter Buchan and Woodson Tyree. A gold pan and miner's pick and burro make up the pin's design. These symbols stand for "gold is where you dig it," in speech, drama, and debate, as in prospecting, hard work and endurance are needed to profit.

The annual breakfast for the Pick and Pan award winners will be held at "Chief" Tyree's home, 601 Mesa Road on Sunday, May 10. Breakfast will be at 9 a.m. and an evening picnic at 5 p.m. for all students in speech, drama, radio or debate.

Symposium Planning Session Narrows List of Possible Topics to Three

could be based on Catherine Lee Bates' poem "America, the Beautiful," which was written here at Colorado College. A Symposium which focused national attention not merely on some of the things that are wrong with the country, but on its ideals and on what could be done to narrow the gap between those ideals and actuality, might serve a great purpose.

Possible sub-topics, based on particular expressions in the poem, could include the following: 1) "... till all success be nobleness ..." — the question of how we define success in America (in terms of nobility or money?); the relationship between our economic system and our aesthetic, spiritual and political values; and 2) "... shine alabaster cities gleam ..." the question of what we have done and are doing, not only to our cities but to our countryside as well, which has made America as "God's Own Junkyard" and one commentator as "a honky-tonk of continental proportions."

(It would be possible, of course, to expand the topic by discussing such other value-practice relationships as our treatment of minorities — "... and crown thy good with brotherhood," the linkage between freedom and authority — "... confirm thy soul in self-control, thy liberty in law," and others.)

Detailed descriptions of all three topics are on reserve, in file folders, at the Tutt Library Reserve Desk. Everyone who is interested is urged to look at them. Mimeographed copies are also available at Dr. Sondermann's office, 1105 N. Cascade.

The meeting will be at 4 p.m. on May 12th. The folders will be available in the WES Room at 3 p.m. that afternoon for those who wish to come early to look at them.

In the meantime, too, students are urged to fill out the opinion form below and submit it, prior to Tuesday afternoon, to Dr. Sondermann, Kennedy House (1105 N. Cascade). It is hoped that many expressions of opinion, both before and at the Tuesday afternoon meeting, will enable us to select the best possible topic for the Symposium.

Ed Loosli Breaks School Record in High Jump

Ed Loosli, a friendly fellow everybody loves, unless he happens to sit next to you during a long bus trip, cracked a 26 year old Colorado College record in the high jump at last week's triangular meet with Adams State College and Denver University.

Loosli, who cleared his record breaking height of 6'4" on his second attempt, accomplished the feat in extremely inclement weather in which 50 mile an hour wind gusts were not uncommon.

The previous school standard of 6'2 3/4" was set by Phil Timney in 1938 and was one of the oldest track records at CC. A 6'2" 185 pounder who plans on playing football next fall, Loosli also placed first in the high hurdles and second in the low hurdles.

The meet, held in that outhouse of civilization, Alamosa, was primarily intended to be a tune-up for the conference meet on May 16.

Tony McGinnis, CC's most consistent point-getter racked up two second places in the mile and 2 mile. Undoubtedly the most outstanding member of the track team, Tony has achieved success only through hard work and a tremendous desire to be best at anything he does.

A usual practice session for McGinnis consists of the following: a brisk two mile trot around the cross country course, 3 sets of 220 yard dashes, a brief rest, some calisthenics, and finishing with eight 100 yard sprints.

Last season's high point man, McGinnis seems well on his way toward a repeat performance.

Jay Shidler, another tireless hard working distance runner, garnered 3rd place in the half. Quarter-miler Norm Liden picked up a 3rd place in his specialty.

Liden, one of nature's miscreant agreeable blunders, has done extremely well against very strong competition all season long.

Farrell Howell, an alimentary canal with ears, produced the most noteworthy achievement in the field events as he speared a second place in the javelin with a toss of 163 feet.

Despite the efforts of the aforementioned individuals, the track meet proved to be another abortive effort on behalf of the CC squad as a whole. The final tally — Adams 81, D.U. 75, CC 33.

Here's a Lot from POSSUM TROT

By Steve Sabol

Since I have now gained control of the entire sports page of the Tiger, I am going to use this column to voice my bigoted, prejudiced opinions on different facets of this institution other than athletics.

Fun will be made of deserving individuals, unpleasant remarks directed at unpleasant students, and the whole, I intend to make everyone miserable.

But in order to conceive such a column every week it is necessary to start with a firm foundation of accurate material. And since it is not at all fair to set myself up as an all-seeing, all-knowing potate who passes his singular opinion on everyone and everything, I have generously decided to let you, the diversified student body of Colorado College, voice your feelings also. This will be accomplished by the following true and false test.

Circle the letter which you believe to be the correct answer. Be objective please. When you have completed this quiz, tear it out and return it to the Tiger office.

T F Marv Parliament is a man's fashion model.

T F The Student Conduct Committee is a sanctuary in which excluded systems and obsolete prejudices find shelter and protection after they have been hunted out of every corner of the world.

T F Carl Cabiness cannot read or write.

T F Mike Durfee is a living orpo.

T F A blind date at Colorado College can be defined as a bag grab.

T F Ed Loosli spent the first 8 years of his life in a pet shop window.

T F Bill Pelz could be described as "a bald head and a pair of lungs."

T F Al Loosli has an inferiority complex.

T F The ASOC is a group of students who, individually, can do nothing, but collectively can meet and decide that nothing can be done.

CC breaks up Denver attack

Lacrosse Team Trounces Denver, 7-3

Last Saturday the Colorado College Lacrosse Club won its second consecutive game by beating the highly favored Denver Lacrosse Club 7-3 with the other win over CSU, and the loss to the D.L.C. in the first game of the season.

The first defense of Fordyce, Mellin and Weiss worked very smoothly covering one of the best attacks in the area. Mellin and Fordyce have been playing lacrosse for only three weeks and their performance has been nothing less than excellent.

The D.L.C. attack did not score at all in the first half of the game. The CC attack of Frank Bond, Mac Callaway and John Weed worked well under the pressure of D.L.C.'s big defensemen. They controlled the ball most of the game. Bond led the scoring with four goals.

The Roadrunner, as the midfielders are called, did a tremendous job in their double duty as defense and attack. The first and second midfielders (the number makes no difference) of Hamilton, Bryan, Davis, Duck (Duffy) Whitney and Palm worked with the defense for many fine clears.

Coupled with the attack, they held the ball in the attacking zone successfully. Rolf Hiebler did an excellent job in the goal. He was accredited with twelve saves and did a fine job working with the defense.

In the first period Mac Callaway scored unassisted in the first three minutes. Davis scored again at the end of the fifteen minute period. The second period saw two quick scores both by Bond and assisted by Davis who got the ball on the face-offs. In the third period only one score was recorded.

The Tigers had only two penalties during the contest. This was quite a change from the last game in which there were ten penalties.

Dr. Stabler has done a great job of coaching the team. This may be seen by the rapid improvement made by two-thirds of the team who have never played before.

If you have not witnessed a lacrosse game yet, you will have another chance. CC plays D.L.C. this Saturday at 2:00 on Stewart Field. This game should prove to be very exciting.

Tigers Hurled Past Western State by Reeser and Sauer

Last Friday and Saturday afternoon, Warner Reeser and Jeff Sauer pitched the CC Tigers to 9-33 and 8-2 victories over Western State College at Memorial Park.

Fireballer Reeser went the distance in Friday's contest allowing the Mountaineers only 6 hits. The CC stickmen however, blasted the Mountaineer pitcher for nine runs on 14 hits including Rajah Williams' home run in the third inning which cleared the 365 foot left center field fence.

In addition to his pitching duties, Reeser launched 4 of the Tiger's big scoring inning in the fifth with a booming triple to right center field.

The Johnsonmen commenced to bat around and tallied 6 runs which put the game on ice.

Rotund Rajah Williams was the big man at the plate for CC on Friday as he went three for four, knocking in 3 runs and scored thrice.

The next day, Jeff Sauer entertained a sparse Parents' Day crowd of 32 as he pitched the Tigers to their second victory, an 8-2 triumph.

The Tiger's victory was insured in the 8th inning when Steve Mills' bases loaded single drove in two runs to put CC in a commanding 8-2 lead.

Ebert paced the Tiger batsmen with 2 hits in 9 trips to the plate and also scored 3 runs.

The Tigers sweep of this twin bill with Western brought their conference record up to a 6-4 mark and put them in second place behind CSC.

Golf Wins 2, Drops 1;

This weekend, the annual Pikes Peak Intercollegiate Golf Tournament, sponsored jointly by Colorado College and the US Air Force Academy, will attract the strongest entry list in its 17 year history.

Twenty teams from nine western states are expected to compete for honors in what has become one of the outstanding intercollegiate tournaments in the country.

Back to defend their title will be the current NCAA Champions, Oklahoma State University. The Cowboys' strongest challenge is expected to come from Houston University, perennial collegiate golf powerhouse. Oklahoma State has won the Pikes Peak title three times, while Houston has capped it twice.

Interest in this year's tournament has been intensified by the fact that the 1964 NCAA Golf Championships will be held at the Broadmoor Golf Club June 14-20. The final eighteen holes of the Pikes Peak Tournament are played at the Broadmoor on Saturday, while thirty-six holes are scheduled for the Eisenhower Golf Course on Friday.

Past strength of the Pikes Peak Intercollegiate can be evaluated by comparing competitors in previous years with the ranks of today's touring professionals.

Among both lists are such names as Don January, Billy Maxwell, Joe Conrad, Dick Crawford, Jackie Cupit, Labron Harris Jr, Dale Douglas, Jimmy Wright and Larry Beck.

Colorado College will host all the teams at an awards luncheon to be held at the Broadmoor Golf Club on Saturday following the final eighteen holes. Six pretty CC coeds, selected by the CC golf team, will preside over the luncheon.

Colorado College's golf team won two matches and dropped one last week, bringing the season's record to 6 wins and 4 losses.

The wins were a 5-4 decision over the Air Academy at the Broadmoor and a 16-11 win over Colorado State College at the Highlands Hills course in Greeley. The loss was to Colorado University 21-6 at Boulder.

Both wins were not decided until the last putt was holed by the final foursome. It was J. C. Wells' final putt on the eighteenth hole that gave CC its second win of the year over the Air Academy. Last Saturday Cole Robinson holed a difficult down-hill eight footer on the eighteenth to assure the Tigers of a decisive win over Colorado State.

Bob Magie led the team in the matches with three wins with rounds of 75-74-75.

Only Colorado University and Denver University have defeated the Tigers to date, and with only two more dual matches left in the schedule the golf team hopes to finish the season with eight wins against the four losses to their update rivals.

CC Professors Given Leaves of Absence for Academic Year, '64-'65

Seven professors at Colorado College have been granted leaves of absence for the forthcoming academic year to conduct research, write books and develop new courses.

They are Profs. Richard G. Beidleman of zoology, Paul Bernaru of history, Norman S. Cornick of dance, William A. Fischer of geology, Frank A. Krutke of English, Carl L. Roberts of psychology, and Milton K. Snyder of chemistry.

Professor Beidleman will use his sabbatical leave to gather material for the possible development of a course dealing with the impact of science on American life. Professor Bernaru will spend his sabbatical leave in Austria doing research in the history of that country.

Professor Cornick will spend his sabbatical leave studying ballet, modern and jazz dance, and lab-nation.

Professor Fischer plans to write a "Guide to the Geology of the Pikes Peak Region," and reorganize the paleontology collection at the college.

Professor Krutke, recently awarded the Louis T. Benzel Faculty Rotating Fellowship, will spend the academic year studying the ways other colleges approach the problem of teaching English to freshmen. This will mark the first leave Professor Krutke has taken since he joined the faculty in 1939.

Professor Roberts will spend his sabbatical leave attending seminars at the Institute of Behavioral Research.

Finally, Professor Snyder plans to spend his sabbatical developing new material for use in chemistry courses for non-science majors at Colorado College.

Rick Lopez, the past chairman of this committee has some good ideas to pass on to the next chairman. One of his main suggestions was that a Freshman not be chairman of the committee. (Paul Carson, take a hint!)

His reasons for this are that a Freshman is not concerned with cars since he is not allowed to own one and that a Freshman is unfamiliar with school traffic policies.

Rick suggested also that the new chairman talk to Mr. Kendrick, physical plant director, who is also in charge of the campus police, about revision and clarification of the traffic rules.

Also, Rick wished to see a revision of the design of the car stickers to one less obnoxious so that students would be more inclined to use them on their cars.

Ionesco, Beckett

Searching French Drama This Saturday in Perkins

Two outstanding plays of the modern theater, Krapp's Last Tape and The Lesson, by Beckett and Ionesco, will be presented in Perkins Hall Saturday evening. Both dramatists are French and have been associated with the so-called "theater of the absurd" movement.

By Thomas Mauch
Samuel Beckett's one-act play Krapp's Last Tape (1958) memorably portrays a moment in the final days of a disillusioned and embittered old man by the name of Krapp.

And now he sees his whole career as a waste and himself a derelict. Yet so poisoned is he with bitterness and despair, he can't even muster any desire of living his life over again if he had the chance.

One of Dostoevsky's characters, when asked to explain the concept of hell, replies that it is the loss of the capacity to love.

The small circle of light which reveals Krapp on the stage, alone and surrounded by darkness, fumbling with reels, keys, and old envelopes, is all the world which is left him, and it is at least one kind of hell.

By E. K. Peterson

A real treat is in store for students and faculty who have been interested in educational reform and teacher-pupil relationships.

It is John Giannes' presentation of The Lesson by Eugene Ionesco. H. Ionesco of the College of Pataphysics is eminently qualified to dramatize certain basic problems in comparative education.

In The Lesson, he presents intriguing patterns of personality development and classroom procedures and offers some imaginative reinforcement theories.

The only distasteful note in the play is the description of the teacher: " . . . a little old man with a little white beard. He wears a pince-nez, a black skull cap, a long black schoolmaster's coat, trousers and shoes of black, detachable white collar, a black tie. Excessively polite, very timid, his voice deadened by his timidity, very proper, very much the teacher. He rubs his hands together constantly; occasionally a lewd glance comes into his eyes and is quickly repressed."

Despite this somewhat odd appearance, the teacher has exceptionally interesting insights into such subjects as arithmetic: " . . . you must realize simply that more than numbers are involved here . . ."

Although only one actor appears on stage, the play is hardly a simple monologue.

During his life Krapp has taken up the habit of recording from time to time his solitary meditations, in which he comments candidly on the course of his life and passes judgment on the wisdom or folly of his own behavior.

With the passing of years he has withered into hardened and cynical loneliness and is plagued with alcoholism, failing eyesight, and increasing deafness.

Krapp decides suddenly to play a tape he had recorded thirty years earlier, when he was thirty-nine.

On the recording is included a series of sneering reflections on an even earlier tape made when he was a young man, full of noble aspirations and idealistic resolutions.

Krapp now begins recording a new and, apparently, final tape.

Thus the play includes three stages, each one increasingly pathetic, in the life of a man who long ago lost his soul and now despairs of any salvation.

Always having tried to wrestle free of human ties and the responsibilities of love, Krapp once sat impatiently on a bench in a yard awaiting the drawing down of a blind to signal the death of his mother; he turned coolly away from women who might have given him a meaningful and fruitful life.

Work Camp Members Head Panel Discussion

Robert Kilgore, Program Director of the All Souls Unitarian Church, has invited the members of the Tarahumara Indian Spring Reces Work Camp to participate in an informal panel discussion of their activities in Chihuahua, Mexico.

The group will show slides and photographs of their trip. Participating members of the trip who will be present Sunday morning will be: Dr. Carl Roberts, Dan Martin, Kathy Symms, Candy Reed, Becky Long, Joe Toulouse, and John Krimmel.

Mr. Kilgore invites members of the Colorado College Community to attend the discussion on Sunday May 17 at 9:45 a.m.

The program is to be held at the All Souls Unitarian Church at 730 N. Tejon.

College Musicians to Present Piano, Voice, Cello Recitals

The Colorado College music department will present talented students of piano, voice and cello in two student recitals on Tuesday, May 19th, and Thursday, May 21st, in Perkins Hall at 8 p.m. The second program will be a "Concerto Evening," devoted to piano concerti exclusively. Both recitals will be free to the public.

Charlotte Adams, sophomore music major, will open the Tuesday program with the Romanian Folkdances by Bartok. Miss Adams, who studied piano for five years before she came to Colorado College, plans to become a choir director.

Janet Smith will present two numbers by Chopin. She, too, has studied piano for several years during her high school career and is now a music education major in her sophomore year at Colorado College.

Meg Graves has studied cello for eight years and in high school played in the All State Orchestra for four years. Presently she is a member of the Colorado Springs Symphony and will teach elementary strings this summer. She will perform the Sillitene by Gabriel Faure, accompanied by her teacher, Richard Maag.

Susan O'Rourke, a transfer student from Oberlin College who is not a music major but very talented and interested in modern music, will play a group of five short contemporary piano pieces by Hindemith, Phillip Jarnach, Wilhelm Malar and Bartok.

Carol Lynne Parsons, mezzo soprano, is a voice student of Doner Jenkins and one of the outstanding members of the Colorado College Choir. In high school she received an I rating and sang for the honor's concert in the North Central New Mexico Music Festival of 1961 and 1963. She will be heard in two songs, "Litany to the Holy Spirit" by Charles Vales and "I Hear an Army" by Samuel Barber.

Jane Humphrey, junior music major, will bring the Tuesday program to a close with a performance of Beethoven's Piano Sonata in D major, Op. No. 3. Miss Humphrey played two solo recitals and was in several two-piano recitals while still in high school.

At Colorado College she was featured in student recitals each year and is also a prominent member of the Tour Choir and the Madrigal Group.

Miss Humphrey will also be featured on Thursday, opening the "Concerto Evening" with the performance of the first movement of the Bach Concerto in D minor.

Vickie Knox, sophomore music major, will then be featured in the first movement of Mozart's Concerto in D minor. Miss Knox received a "B" rating as pianist and musician from her 6th grade on annually through her senior year in high school. She is already a very versatile musician with great experience as solo performer and as accompanist.

Lee Prater will play the first movement of the Grieg Concerto. She is another music major finishing her sophomore year at (continued on page four)

Skinner Defends Utopia, Upholds Behavior Controls

By Lee Prater

Mildly and seemingly without vigor, the renowned Harvard professor, Dr. B. F. Skinner, preached his doctrine of a workable society from coercion, as stated in his novel Walden Two. Sincerely believing in the worth and plausibility of his vision, Skinner defended the good life of the reasonable idle rich, of individuals happy in their vocations, of flourishing arts and sciences.

Why did this book receive such violent reactions from critics and citizens everywhere? Do we not want to be happy? Utopias have been blueprinted throughout history from Plato's Republic forward, based on economic distribution or lazy living. But the probability of their existence has never before been such a near reality. Skinner claimed that people protest with shock and horror against "the good life" because someone must plan and build it.

The unknown someone with the power to construct a society thus has the force to control each individual and deprive him of his freedom, of his unique "essence of being." It is this authority, this control that man fears. But, says Skinner, puzzled, man is and has always been controlled by his environment and by his own body.

Human behavior is by definition predictable and controllable, determined by forces lying outside the organism. But this does not mean that man cannot change his destiny. He can control himself by altering his environment. Man will never lose his unique social, economic, and religious history, and so the fear of regimentation is not valid—there is thus nothing in the scientific attitude which changes (continued on page four)

RCB Dance Planned In High-Way for Sun.

Sunday, May 17th, is the day for the final blast of the year.

Rastall Center Board has planned a street dance for you to be held on the ice rink (?)

The dance is scheduled to run from 8:30 p. m. to 12 midnight—but girls, don't hesitate 'cause you won't have to sign in till 12:30 a.m.

The dress is "casual." RCB has announced that the "Esquires" from DU will be the featured band.

Should be a real swinger, however, so you all come and blow off all that frustration and pent-up emotions before becoming actively engaged in that academic pursuit fondly labeled " finals."

Sherman, Carson Emphasize Student Role

By Jean Torcum

Last Tuesday's annual Honor's Convocation saw the transfer of the reins of leadership of the ASOC from Harris Sherman to Paul Carson. Before administering the oath of office to the new president, Mr. Sherman made some "farewell" remarks which were directed mainly at the role which students play in a complex college community. Mr. Sherman stated that he was "tired of hearing that students of my generation are too individualistic or perhaps too selfish to assume responsibility for their own actions and responsibility for the community in which they live." Noting that among the most important aspects of a college student's education is the acceptance of new freedoms and the responsibility which inevitably accompanies them, he pointed to vital areas of college life, such as the Honor System, the ASOC, and others, in which students, on the whole, have exhibited both a willingness and an ability to execute responsibilities. Directing his remarks, doubtless now before the Board of Trustees in mind, Mr. Sherman pointed out that, contrary to reports often seen in the TIGER, Administration-Student leader relations are not at low ebb.

As a matter of fact, and the author speaks with some experience herself, the various administrators who have been involved in

Perry Presents Piano Program

Sunday, May 17, at 8:00 p.m. in Perkins, Anne Perry will give a solo piano recital.

Featured on the program will be Schumann's Kreisleriana and the Sonata Breve, composed by Carlton Garner, associate professor of music.

In addition, works by Bach and Mozart will be played.

Miss Perry, a native of Denver, has been studying piano with Max Lanner since the summer before enrolling in CC.

She has also played both 'cello and harpsichord, and will be studying piano this summer at the Aspen Music School.

The recital is open to the public.

AWS Fetes Graduating Seniors at Banquet

The Associated Women Students held its annual Senior Recognition dinner on Thursday, May 7 to honor all graduating senior women. There were many awards presented during the program which followed the dinner, Jo Heller, the AWS president, presided.

The first award was presented by Jill Joseph, the president of the Women's Athletic Association, to Jeannie Moore for her work and help with the women's athletic program in the past four years. Donna Story then tapped the new members of Wakuta, the women's athletic honorary.

The Loomis Pendant was presented to the new president of Loomis, Jamie Adler by the current president, Mary Tate. Pan Helen presented a gift to Sharon Shackelford in appreciation for her work as past president of the Panhellenic Council. Susan Mulliner presided in honoring all of the graduating senior women who had maintained a grade point average of 3.5 or better during their years here. The Alpha Lambda Delta Award for highest cumulative grade point average was presented to Maria Bullock.

Each year the Delta chapter of the American Association of University Women presents an award to an outstanding senior woman from the Denver area. This year's recipient was Ann Gourlay. The Ann Rice Award was announced by Maria Bullock, last year's recipient. The award went to Sharon Shackelford.

Jeann Torcom explained a special award to be presented for the first time by the Associated Women. A counterpart of the Blue Key "Outstanding Freshman" award to a freshman boy, a trophy for outstanding freshman girl was presented to Sallie Rule.

Nancy Parker presided at the tapping of the new members for

LETTERS to the EDITORS

Some two weeks ago, at a regular function of some of the members of the Colorado College Community, known as the Wednesday night drinking club, Mike Carter was very seriously injured by a plumber from Colorado Springs while in the men's lavatory of the Kachina Lounge.

My feelings go out to Mr. Carter, who I am sure will suffer from this act of aggression for some time to come. But, from here, I must say that the acts on the part of college students that followed Mr. Carter's beating were ones of brutality, irrationality, cowardice, and conduct unbecoming of any member of the college community.

For after it was discovered that Carter had been beaten, the man who had done the beating, whose name is Reidsma, tried to escape from the Kachina only to be tackled on his way out. If the students representing the Colorado College Community had merely detained the man until the police arrived, I would not be writing this opinion.

But, instead of waiting for the law enforcement agencies to arrive, some of our "educated" counterparts including our ROTC officers, decided to take into their own hands by resorting to storm trooper tactics with this relatively helpless man in view of the number; that opposed him. He was alternately kicked, punched, and carried to a closet near the front of the Kachina Lounge. There, after losing consciousness, the man was held by one student and punched and kicked in the lower body extremities by another. When one of the participants in this act of atrocity and delinquency got tired, there were several cohorts who would step in and help him out.

At one time, one member of the college was seen taking this man's head and ramming it into the floor and doorstep. At a different moment, another student was observed trying to get against the door, presumably to use against this beaten man. In all, this activity went on for 12 to 14 minutes which was the amount of time it took the police to arrive.

When the police walked in they made it clear that they felt that Reidsma was a trouble maker and that they "were glad he got what he deserved." Reidsma had to be carried out of the Kachina, and the police did not even bother to ask why, how or who had put this man in the condition he was in. One policeman tried to get Carter, who was in a state of semi-consciousness, to swear out a complaint against Reidsma and actually tried to assist Carter's hand across the signature line, an act that is hardly legal, let alone ethical.

The bartender, who was responsible for the peace of his establishment, having observed the entire proceedings, did not seem to have the slightest interest in Reidsma's condition and said nothing except that he also would prefer charges against Reidsma. Carter, who was bleeding profusely from the fight, was ignored by his fellow mates, because they were more interested in animalistic revenge than his welfare. It was only after the center of attraction, the brutal beating of this man, had ended that Carter again became the object of interest. When I asked Carter if he wanted guards from a first aid kit I had, he refused them, indicating that he was quite proud of the beating he had just gone through.

The next day, one of the members of the self-appointed lynch mob marched around this campus exhibiting his bruised knuckles and with pride announcing that he had beaten the . . . out of this man, while his cohort who had held the man merely spread rumors, had ended that he had castigated Reidsma.

The Dean of Men, when I spoke to him, expressed the opinion that

ASCC NOTES

Summary of ASCC meeting May 11, 1964: Action taken on ROTC. Freshman Coordinators announced, student members of Public Lectures Committee and Student Conduct Advisory Group selected, and an opportunity for suggestions extended.

In the ASCC Executive Council meeting last Monday a motion was passed to send a letter to Colorado Congressmen urging them to vote for the bill which would revise the ROTC program in high schools and colleges. This letter is to be "firmly worded," suggesting that the Executive Council of ASCC may seek to change the ROTC program on campus if the bill is defeated. Terry Winograd will write the letter and present it to the Executive Council for final approval.

It was announced that Ray Jones and Ellen Meis will be Freshman Coordinators for 1964-65. They will be responsible for overseeing the entire program of the freshmen for first semester. Any suggestions or criticisms about freshman orientation may be directed to them.

Also announced was the selection of Garrett Bouton and Pam Phillips as new junior members of the President's Advisory Committee on Student Conduct. Barbara Keener was selected as the student-at-large member of the Public Lectures Committee.

Ann Barkley, chairman of the Student Academic Committee announced the names of her committee: Connie Cooper, Barbara Keener, Liz Akiba, Brad Scharf, Susan Caudill, and Merle Kieckhefer. Suggestions should be directed to a member of the Student Academic Committee with regards to curriculum or other scholastic areas of concern.

Also announced was the Student Policy sub-committee: Ann Barkley, Sue Caudill, Bill Greeley, Donna Haraway, Dan Jaffe, Gary Knight, Jean Stoemer, and Terry Winograd.

Paul Tatter, chairman of the Policy Committee, mentioned that the purpose of this sub-committee is to draft proposed motions for ASCC approval. Suggestions on campus policy may be given to members of the sub-committee so that they can do research and preliminary drafting of motions to be brought before the Executive Council.

Respectfully submitted,
Cathy Grant, ASCC Sec.

By Connie Cooper and Ralph Della Betta

In the discussion concerning open dorms the cry for privacy is one of the most often heard. But in all of this discussion we have heard little concern voiced for the privacy of the 90% of the boys living in the dorm who will (according to statistics from colleges which have this program) not take advantage of this program. Is no one concerned with their right to privacy?

We maintain that the right of these students to privacy in their living quarters and to an atmosphere conducive to studying outweighs the so-called right of the few to entertain girls in their rooms.

At this point, we might examine just what the right of the students are. To put it mildly they have been just a little exaggerated. This is not the right to determine the social policy of the school. This is the right of the school (administrators and trustees).

The administration and trustees are a group of professionals. Working on the assumption that perhaps they do know what they're talking about, it might be pertinent to find out what administrators of colleges which do imply this system feel about it.

Twenty-one colleges were polled in a confidential survey of college social policy by the CC administration. Seventeen of these colleges are liberal arts colleges, well distributed throughout the country, which are comparable to CC in size and character, and many of which have a church affiliation.

The others are large institutions, three in Colorado and one, a private university outside Colorado. Five of these colleges permit girls in boys bedrooms one afternoon a week or one afternoon a month. Four do allow girls in boys' rooms at night. One still has it on a trial basis, one has repealed it, and two no longer approve of it. An administrator of one of these schools stated:

"Although I approved the program (women visiting men in their rooms and vice versa), I confess that I regret having been a party to it. If we did not have such a program, I would now fight to prevent it."

And another: "It doesn't work and it encourages visits at unauthorized times."

The authors of this article, being by nature curious and a little too presumptuous, perhaps, also thought that they would like to know what the faculty of this campus think about the proposal.

Accordingly, we took a poll of administration and faculty opinion. Of the 30% reply, 26% are in favor of the proposal, 57% are opposed to it, and 17% stated that it makes no difference to them one way or the other.

Ten CC Professors Travel To Speak, Present Theses

Dr. Albert Seay, professor of music at Colorado College, delivered the University Lecture last Thursday at the University of California at Los Angeles. "Poetry and Music in the French Chanson in the 16th Century," was the title of his talk. Professor Seay, an internationally known musicologist, also conducted two graduate seminars at UCLA on the history of music theory.

Dr. Bentley Gilbert, associate professor of history, addressed the annual meeting of the Association for the History of Medicine last Friday in Bethesda, Maryland. British socialized medicine developed out of a national concern with physical disability and weakness that were associated with military disasters during the Boer War, Professor Gilbert said. His remarks were based on a two-year study of British social welfare legislation conducted under a grant from the U.S. Public Health Service.

Colorado College students and professors delivered six of the 15 zoology papers given at the 25th annual meeting of the Colorado-Wyoming Academy of Science at Golden, Colorado, Friday. Dr. Richard G. Beidleman, professor of zoology, gave a speech entitled "Natural Science and the Rocky Mountain Frontier." Thomas F. Althaus delivered a paper on "Pear Trees." Professor Beidleman read a paper on "Further Observations on Winter Bird Behavior." Assisting him with the research were Phillip D. Doerr and Peter N. Spangler.

Doerr reported on "Preliminary Studies of Wintering Goshawks in El Paso County."

He conducted the study under the direction of Professor James H. Emserson of the zoology department.

Professor Stabler also reported on "Survival of Jones' Barn Trichomonas Gallinae in Conkerous Pigeon Liver at Various Temperatures." Assisting him with the research was Nancy J. Kitzmiller. Professor Benjamin H. Banta of the zoology department gave "A Preliminary Account of the Herpetofauna of the Wet Mountains of Custer and Fremont Counties in Colorado." Charles A. Torbit Jr., a graduate student, delivered a paper on "A Preliminary Account of the Herpetofauna of El Paso County."

Three professors spoke Saturday at the annual meeting of the Rocky Mountain Social Science Association on the campus of the University of Wyoming in Laramie, Wyoming. Professor J. Douglas Mertz, chairman of the political science department, discussed "Civil Rights and the States." Professor Frank H. Tucker of the history department, talked about "War Crimes, Peace Crimes and Racism: A Review of European and American Offenses." Professor Bentley B. Gilbert commented on the decay of the Anglo-French alliance.

The British Foreign Office has asked Dr. Fred A. Sondermann, associate dean of the college, to attend a two week conference on "The Atlantic Community and National Sovereignty" next February in Wilton Park, England, some 50 miles south of London. Participating in the conference will be government leaders and academic experts from Britain, the United States, and Western Europe.

Jill Joseph Elected WAA President

Colorado College women students recently elected new officers for the Women's Athletic Association, 1964-65. Filling the president's chair will be Jill Joseph. Anne Holmes is the new vice-president. Other officers are all freshmen, Bea Livingston, secretary; Diana Hall, treasurer; and Barb Keener, social chairman.

Newly appointed sports heads are Judy Lockwood, volleyball; Carol Hale, basketball; Jan Okamura, softball; Terri Lumley, swimming; Ann Peters, gymkhana; Jan Odle, golf; Deb West, ping pong; and Ann Barkley, sports day.

The Delta Gamma's won first place in the 1964 WAA Gymkhana with the Alpha Phi's placing second.

The Thetas, Kappas and Alpha Phi's tied for first place in the softball tournament.

These two events rounded up the season for girls' intramurals. The top three winners in trophy competition will soon be announced by the WAA Board.

Professor, Student to Study Small Animal Life in the Mountains Here

A zoology professor and a graduate student at Colorado College are conducting the first quantitative census of small animals ever undertaken in the Rocky Mountains.

Dr. Benjamin H. Banta, assistant professor of zoology, and graduate student Charles A. Torbit Jr., a teacher at the Fountain-Ft. Carson High School, reported on the study at the annual meeting of the Colorado-Wyoming Academy of sciences here.

Employing a technique developed by Professor Banta, the two scientists are concentrating on two areas. Torbit is studying a four-mile long prairie area 14 miles east of Fountain, while Professor Banta is working in the Wet Mountains of Custer and Fremont Counties west of Pueblo.

They use five-quart tin cans and one-gallon wide-mouth jars as pitfall traps. The jars and cans are buried in the earth in groups of four about four-tenths of a mile apart.

Professor Banta visits his mountain traps about every two weeks. The prairie traps are checked weekly by Torbit. A careful record is kept of the kinds of mammals, reptiles and amphibians found at each station.

In the Wet Mountains, Professor Banta is trying to determine the altitude at which various small animals live, and when they come out in the spring and when they disappear in the fall.

Lecture Series Planned for Fall

Professors of anthropology, physics and English will deliver the three faculty lectures next fall at Colorado College.

The fall lecture series, entitled "The West and the Works of Man," will be open to the public without charge.

Anthropology Professor Paul Kutsche will open the series Sept. 17 with a talk on "People in an Arid Land."

On Sept. 24 physics Professor Richard Bradley will lecture on "The Controversial Colorado."

English Professor Robert Ornes will deliver the final lecture Oct. 1. He tentatively has entitled his talk "Poetry and the Earth."

THE ABOVE DIAGRAMS represent the tentative design for the new men's residence complex to be constructed by the fall of 1966. The core units will be situated above and to the side of the commons area; the suite and house units as indicated by the site plan. Traffic through one unit to another unit is eliminated by outside entrances to each area. Some of the rooms will have private balconies facing the inside of the complex. The commons area will contain the main lounge, desk and vending machines.

These are consigned, along with horses and Elvis Presley, to a distant age and our own age instead invests in T-birds, Beatles and emeralds. Yet the church continues to entertain places in its liturgy about the so-called "Holy Ghost," and theologians stubbornly refuse to repudiate the doctrine behind this phrase.

Graduating Seniors Honored at AWS Awards Banquet

Cap and Gown. The new members are: Lyn Boyce, Bev Carrington, Susan Cardill, Linda Dunkin, Cathy Grant, Jo Heller, Jane Humphrey, Judy Jacard, Frieda Koster, and Sharon Shackelford. The honorary members are Miss McNary and Miss Shihew.

Miss Moon announced the outstanding senior women. This group included Susan Arentz, Marla Bullock, Nan Burroughs, Elizabeth Crockett, Ann Gourlay, Sue Heidel, Sue Hile, Karen McVainne, Jeannie Moore, Nancy Parker, Stephanie Row, Jean Torcom, and Carol Wright.

A gift was presented to Miss Moon for all of the work that she has done for the women students on this campus. This presentation was followed by Jean Torcom's farewell address. Jean delivered a short speech on the subject of student responsibility in student-administration relationships. Although Jean's topic was general, she made definite reference to present campus policies. Jean stated that she firmly believed that the students were able to assume more responsibility for their own actions. She made a plea that we be permitted to demonstrate this fact through the adoption of the residence hall visiting hours policy on an experimental basis.

The highlight of the evening was the address which was delivered by William Hochman, who spoke of the subject of individuality and responsibility.

There were two essential parts to the speech which Dr. Hochman delivered. He was concerned with addressing the senior women on their responsibilities to the communities which they will be entering. He was also concerned with commenting on this subject in relation to the Colorado College campus.

Dr. Hochman began by stating that a new type of student is entering colleges and universities throughout the country. This student has shown that he is unwilling to accept traditional responsibility in the community where he resides. Dr. Hochman cited the example of three of CC's best students who stated last year during their Freedom and Authority final that they had nothing to learn from the older generation. They wanted to be free to take individual action. Dr. Hochman stressed to the graduating senior women that it is necessary for them to assume a degree of responsibility to and for the community in which they will reside.

He then turned to the campus and the issue of the residence hall visiting hours proposal. Dr. Hochman stated that this proposal is of significance to this college, because it is dealing with a problem which exists in most colleges throughout the country. There is definitely a change taking place in the social mores of the young people. These people desire opportunities to meet in smaller and private situations. The residence hall proposal at CC is simply one manifestation of this change.

Dr. Hochman stated quite clearly that the students on this campus must realize that the college cannot condone promiscuous sexual relationships which might result from the adoption of a proposal such as the residence hall proposal. He was clear about the fact that such relationships did not have to be the necessary result of such policy, but he stated that there have been examples of such behavior on campuses where such proposals have been tried. The issue here is obviously the question of whether or not students are willing to take the responsibility to traditional social moves to make such a system work on this campus.

Dr. Hochman observed that the responsible student leaders on this campus must be aware of the possible consequences of the proposal. They must be willing to realize that if the proposal is accepted, it is their responsibility to make it work. They must also be willing to realize that if the proposal is defeated, it is their responsibility to seek other means to solve the problem of creating facilities to meet the changing social needs of our generation.

Dr. Hochman's speech was challenging, critical, and inspiring. He offered a valid criticism of the attitude which is developing in our generation and he challenged us to meet the problems which are arising. Hopefully, the inspiration of his speech will move us in the right direction.

At ages 11 and 15 she mastered the concerti by Schumann and Liszt in public appearances. In 1962 Miss Prater won the Kiwanis "Stars of Tomorrow" Talent Search.

Barbara Couey, graduating senior, will bring the Concerto Evening to a close with her performance in the first movement from the Concerto in B flat major by Tchaikovsky.

She was soloist of the college Tour Choir this spring and sang the lead in the musical "Most Happy Fellow" last year. A member of the college's Honor Council, she was Homecoming Queen and Winter Carnival Queen. As pianist, Miss Couey has been featured every year in many major works of the piano literature.

man of his uniqueness, but just the way in which he is viewed. And so if, as the behavioral scientists believe, man is by nature controlled, is it not better for him to plan the state of his control himself rather than leave his future in the hands of dictators?

Skinner's description of a Utopia to be achieved was thus clearly stated. If he had summarized his prophecy and then carried it to a logical conclusion by explaining the scientific and practical ways by which the perfect state would be obtained, including his experimental data for the benefit of non-psychology majors, his talk would have contained purpose and direction. Instead one was left with a beautiful vision, ideal rather than practical, and with a man puzzled by the criticism of a contemporary extremist, Joseph Wood Krutch.

had seen Reidsema, and that he was free from bodily damage, that he was awfully big and powerful, having served and killed in service at Okinawa, that he had a wife and psychiatric problems and that therefore, the beating Reidsema received was of no consequence and that I should forget about the matter and worry about Carter.

When others questioned the man on this matter he expressed annoyance at the fact that he was not more interested in Carter, that I would like again to emphasize the fact that the people who beat Mr. Reidsema showed little concern for Carter themselves, but rather were more interested in massive brutality.

Further more, the Dean's claim that Reidsema did not show marks of being badly beaten is only based upon an inspection of his face, according to Dr. Bernard, who was a witness to the inspection. Since the people who were beating Mr. Reidsema were not primarily interested in his face, do not doubt that this face was badly marked.

I find many aspects of these actions very upsetting. The initial act of moving outside the law in a civilized society to mob rule by a group of "educated," thug students in itself is enough to raise serious moral and ethical questions. The a priori judgement of the police and the inaction of the bartender whose job is the preservation of the peace in his establishment are equally galling.

The actions of the Dean of Men seemed illogical to me. The size, the strength, the mental condition, etc., of Reidsema seemed totally irrelevant to the fact that he was beaten and treated in an unjust and illegal way.

Finally, I would like to point out that these college delinquents, as far as I am concerned, have put the students of this college and the name of this college in a position of dangerous jeopardy. Indeed, there is now the threat that at any time any student goes downtown, he is likely to meet with extra-legal retaliation against the "college bums" on the part of either Reidsema or his friends. Furthermore if some college students behave in this way, what is to guarantee our welcome in the Colorado Springs Community in general.

I only regret, that from the witnesses I have spoken to, and from what I personally have seen, that there is not enough information to bring charges against everyone involved in this heinous crime. Although we have enough information and witnesses to prosecute several individuals, I think this also would be unjust in that some participants would go unpunished, although equally guilty.

Therefore, I leave the matter with the Colorado College public, in the hope that the individuals will be the recipients of extreme social isolation which is often much more effective than any feasible legal punitive action.—Herman Whiton

New officers in the Kappa Alpha Theta House are: Archivist, Marsha MacInnes; Corresponding Secretary, Sue Walsh; Editor, Margie Galluzzo; Marshall—Sheila Bachar; Song Leader, Adrienne Zech; and Treasurer, Jane Lentz.

On May 9, the Thetas activated the following women: Ann Bryant, Nancy Campbell, Pam Carpenter, Penny Coughlin, Royda Crosland, Susan Freeland, Louise Glass, Dorene Heberlein, Marta Hermann, Ann Hodges, Marian Hunker, Sue Ludwig, Emily Mansfield, Donna MacIntyre, Kiko McKenna, Pam Peterson, Nancy Pickering, Mary Richey, and Nancy Saunders.

The Kappas and the Thetas joined forces to hold the traditional Kite and Key Spring Formal. The place was the Gabies, and the date was Saturday, May 9.

Tuesday night the Betas entertained all Beta Alumni from the Colorado Springs area. The evening's highlight was the command performance of the Beta 1st place Songfest tune in demonstration of why it placed 3rd. The Betas would also like to extend congratulations to Beta pledge Ray Jones for being selected the Blue Key outstanding freshman.

There are four new rings in the Gamma Phi house. Sandy Lazzari announced her engagement to First Classman Ed Young, Shirley McCullough announced her engagement to Second Classman John Sidor, Pat McClain announced her engagement to First Classman Bob Thomas with plans for a June wedding, and Lynn Ayers announced her engagement to Phi Gam Bill Pelz and a fall wedding is in the offing.

The Gamma Phis have also pulled sneaks with the Beta pledges, the Phi Delt Kitchen Crew, and the Gamma Phi Sophomores.

On Sunday morning, Gamma Phi sunrise services were held at the Beta House. Feeling benevolent, the Beta pledges took Laurie McCann and Leslie Webb for Sunday Rides.

Carrie Jacobson (Gamma Phi) announced her pining to Lambda Chi-Phi Delt social affiliate Merle Ricklefs.

Monday, the Gamma Phi broke the ground for their new house.

After an eventful Inspiration Week, the D.G.'s initiated sixteen new members. The week was culminated by a chapter retreat to Gretchen Swan's Denver home. Last weekend the D.G.'s donned their cowboy gear and managed to wrangle the first place trophy in the annual WAA Gymkhana. On call of duty.

May 9, the Delta Gamma spring formal was held at the Paint Pony Country Club.

The Gabies was the location of the D.G. Honors Banquet last Sunday. Miss Cauvel was the featured speaker.

Sunday morning was the time of the annual Kappa Gamma Senior Breakfast. The traditional prophecies and wills were read. Linda Dunkin was given a special key to be worn for a year as the outstanding Kappa member.

That same Sunday night, the Kappas were the guests of the Sigma Chi's for an afternoon picnic. On Monday night, the Kappas presented Diane Hall with the Kappa bracelet of the month for her actions above and beyond the

One week ago Monday, the Kappas and the Phi Delt renew the annual spring fight. The Kappas won the first round with a sneak attack on that same Monday night.

The can was lost, but Kappa interrogation continued during the remainder of the week. Truce was declared and the first annual Jill Thomas Bravo award was given out at the Spring Formal.

The Phi Delt Spring Formal was held in Denver this year at the Columbine Country Club. The evening was highlighted by a repeat of the Phi Delt Songfest songs.

The Phi Delt, Kappas, Gamma Phi, and the Sigma Chi will hold a joint picnic this Saturday.

Sherman, Carson Emphasize Student Role

hearing all sides of this particular proposal, with a few notable exceptions, have been more than willing, not only to hear what students had to say, but also to listen and to try with all sincerity to understand the problems we are facing.

I might add that it has been largely the responsible and well thought-out action of Mr. Harris Sherman and other student leaders intimately involved with the presentation of this proposal, that relations between the administration and students have probably become more frequent and more useful this year than in years past.

Paul Carson, in his remarks after receiving the oath of office, carried out the theme set by Mr. Sherman. He noted that the ASCC this year had been forced to look at certain issues of really vital concern to students, such as the social atmosphere on campus and the Freshman Orientation program. Sponsoring the distribution of trash cans around the grounds was not the only useful thing the ASCC did this year, Mr. Carson, speaking specifically about Visiting Hours proposal, pointed out that if the Board of Trustees adopts the program, "then individual students and their government are faced with accepting the new responsibility placed on us." Wishing to make his position absolutely clear, Mr. Carson stated, "I want it clearly understood that I, and I believe a great majority of CC students, support this proposal, fully intending to enforce all of its provisions. If visiting procedures are generally violated, I will act to remove the system next year."

Whether or not students realize it, this is the crucial question which comes up every time we ask for new freedoms and new privileges. Responsibility is not something we show on special occasions—it is only useful as a continuing thing. If we wish to take a greater part in the shaping of the future of this college we must prove, in all facets of campus life, that we already have that necessary sense of responsibility toward ourselves and others to make that contribution significant.

I might add that if the Visiting Hours proposal is not accepted it will not be because it has not received full bearing in student, faculty and administrative circles. We, as students, if we must demand to be listened to and understood, must reciprocally listen to and understand the position of those who are ultimately responsible, whether we think they should be or not, for the actions of all members of this community. Each of us has only to deal with two distraught parents, President Warner has 1,200 parents, plus alumni, plus members of the community, to explain to and accommodate.

Students may easily shrug this off but nonetheless this is the reality of the situation and if we insist on being the "young realists" we must face these facts. In any case, regardless of the outcome of this program, let us hope that in the future there will be an expansion of such fruitful exchange as has been shown to be possible in the working out of the mutual problems of community living which Colorado College faces in the future.

High Living Lacrosse Team Beats Denver

With clouds of smoke issuing from black encrusted lungs, reactions dulled by an alcoholic stupor which destroys the world every Saturday night, the CC Lacrosse Club once more rode its vices to victory, defeating Denver 6-3.

Jarred by Denver's rough defensive efforts and the flashy stick work of their not so tired cronies, the Tigers were unable to score consistently, until the close of the third period.

Needing on cue, Ken Melon and Warren Fordyce took to their Neanderthal ways, flattening everything in sight, while the Tiger offense was shaking off their various hangers-on.

Mac Callaway, recovered from his recent fall from grace into the Boettcher Pit, opened the scoring after taking a neat pass from Dave Palm.

John Weed, the not so successful sports car driver for the internationally famous Phi Delta team, put the Tigers two up, minutes later.

Beut only on the ambulation of mankind, the Tiger defense let two Denver goals slip past, and the score was tied at the half.

During half time, the team was treated to Dr. Stabler's lecture on Sex and the College Girl, and armed with this heartening information, took control of the game in the second half.

Nick Hare, the refugee from Kansas, scored quickly, followed by goals from the sticks of Callaway, Prough, and Whitney.

Denver could only muster the strength to score one final goal, and CC collected their third win in as many weeks.

CC Golfers Take Conference Title

As a departing gesture preliminary to the official withdrawal from the Rocky Mountain Conference this week, the Colorado College golf team won the conference golf title by far outdistancing the remaining conference members in the Pikes Peak Golf Tournament held over the weekend.

The tournament was co-hosted by CC and the Air Force Academy and attracted twenty-four teams from ten states.

The low RMC team and individual in the Pikes Peak Tournament each year are declared champions by the conference. CC has won the championship every year, except one, since the tournament was inaugurated seventeen years ago.

The Tigers were sixty-nine strokes ahead of their nearest conference rival, Colorado School of Mines, with a four man team total of 997 for fifty-four holes of tournament medal play.

Colorado State College was ninety-six strokes off the pace and Adams State trailed badly by 124 strokes.

The four man team that added the RMC Championship trophy to the trophy case in Cassell Hall included Bob Henry, Bob Magie, Steve Wollman and J. C. Wells.

Bob Magie won the individual RMC title with rounds of 80, 75 and 79 to nose out his close friend and playing partner during the regular season, Bob Henry.

Colorado State finished ahead of seven universities including three from the strong Big Eight Conference—Iowa State University, Nebraska University, and Kansas State University.

Nabs Three Firsts

first place in that event and Mike Norris garnered a second.

Jay Schidler toured the 880 in 1:59.5 for his supreme effort of the season and secured a second place.

Other point getters for CC included Stapp in the hundred, Liden in the 240, Welch in the discus, Kintz in the two-mile, and DuFice in the shotput.

Southern Colorado State College won the meet with Colorado State College second, CC third and Chadron State last.

Rules of CC's Young Sport—Lacrosse

A Lacrosse field is, hopefully, one hundred and ten yards long and sixty to seventy yards wide. The goals, six feet square, are positioned five yards from the end of the field, which is divided by three lines: a center line, where the face offs take place, and two restraining lines, ten yards in front of each goal.

Around the goal is set a crease, in which the goalie can not be touched by a member of the opposing team, however, members of the defending team are allowed to pass through this area, while covering their opponents.

Mandatory equipment consists of a stick, called a crosse; a helmet, and protective gloves, much like those used in hockey. Many players, however, wear shoulder pads which cover the arms and shoulders.

The sticks vary in size, with the attackmen usually employing ones with small heads, while midfielders and defensemen use sticks with larger heads.

The goalie's, and only one such stick is allowed on the field at any time.

The team is composed of ten men, any of whom can be replaced during a whistle. Three attackmen are positioned around the cage, and it is these men who usually provide the scoring punch, with the first attack crosse attackmen, stationed in front of the goal, going most of the scoring.

The other two men, holmes, usually stand behind the cage, passing out in front to set up goals and as a result, are often called feeders.

Throughout the game, three players on one team must remain in the attack area of the field, and most of the time, it is these attackmen. However, another player can remain in this area, while an attackman proceeds over the center line.

The midfielders, of which there are three, must play both in the attack area, to increase the offensive punch, and in the defense area, to guard their men, who likewise have full run of the field.

The three midfielders are called: the center, whose job it is to face off; and two wings, the second at attack, and the second defense.

The three defensemen are: the first, or crease defensemen who covers the crease attackmen; and the point and cover point who cover the feeders.

As is the case with the attack area of the field, so three men must remain in the defense area of the field also.

The game is divided into four fifteen minute quarters. And the clock is stopped for a time out, or when the ball goes out of bounds.

If a shot is taken, the nearest man to the ball when it goes out of bounds is awarded possession, but if the ball goes over the end or side lines under any other circumstance, the team which last touched the ball must relinquish possession.

The rules are too complex to state at length, but there are a few important ones, those most usually called. Any player can hit the stick of any other opponent, provided that he has possession of the ball or is within 15 yards of the ball.

A blow can be delivered to the forearm, if a man uses it to guard his stick.

No player may strike another on the head, under any circumstance, and as a result of this rule, many men will hold their stick in front of their face to draw a penalty on the opposition.

Body checking is allowed any place on the field if the ball is twenty yards or less away.

However, a check can not be from behind, and must be above the knees. Nor may a player leave his feet to body check.

These infractions are the most usually called, and draw a penalty of one minute. The referee can, however, award a greater length of time if he feels that an infraction was unsportsmanlike.

Armed with these facts, you should be able to get a lot out of the game of lacrosse.

CC Baseballers Beat Best Season Record

With two victories over Western State at Gunnison last weekend, CC boosted their seasonal slate to 12-5 and thus became the first Tiger baseball squad ever to win more than 10 games in a season.

Behind the impressive pitching of Reeser and Jankowski, the Johnsonmen mauled the Mountaineers 10-4 and 14-6.

Round Rajah Williams up at bat with the bases loaded is like lending a sabre-toothed tiger on a dental floss leash through a herd of sheep.

Rajah responded with a grand slam home run in the first stanza of the initial game to put the Tigers in a commanding lead which they never lost. Reeser stymied the WSC batsmen, allowing them only 6 hits.

In the second contest, pitcher Jankowski mystified the Mountaineers as he dazzled them with his hurling and hombed them with his batting.

Jankowski blasted round-trippers in the 4th and 5th innings to all but beat Western State by himself. Peterson and Wilson accentuated Jankowski's pitching prowess by rapping out 5 hits between them.

The Tigers hammered the Mountaineers pitching staff for 13 hits and won going away 14-6.
